COTSWOLD HILLS HYDROPATHIC HEALTH RESORT.—Our "tight little island" affords scarcely a healthier spot than the Cotswold Hills—embracing the purest air and most lovely scenery. The Proprietor, Mr. S. PYALL DIPROSE, having gained much experience from enforced sojournings in various establishments with an invalid, observing so constantly the absence of home comforts, conceived a longing desire to remedy a complaint so general and so justifiable. Visitors will find a model farm in connection with this model home; and every convenience afforded for country drives and pleasant walks, with which the locality abounds. Perhaps the purest air and water in England are to be found here. The provisions of the table are ample, and chiefly the produce of the farm. I came here recommended by a friend, and write this unsolicited at my window, overlooking the prettiest valley my eyes ever rested upon, with luxuriant foliage and extensive pasture and woodlands beyond. One can scarcely imagine healthier conditions or more lovely surroundings. Happily I am not alone in this opinion, for the Proprietor has handed me a list of names to whom reference is permitted if required.

"A Charming Piece of Biography."—J. G. WHITTIER.

NINETEEN BEAUTIFUL YEARS:
The Record of the Life of a Beloved Sister.

By FRANCES E. WILLARD,
President of the "Women's National Christian Temperance Union of America."
With Introduction by BISHOP FOSTER;
And a Prefatory Note by the Poet, JOHN G. WHITTIER.
CLOTH BOARDS, 2/6; WITH GILT EDGES, 3/-.

"'NINETEEN BEAUTIFUL YEARS' is most touching and interesting; so thoroughly natural and unconventional was her life and the expression of her thoughts. It is good to see how, through all the different modes of thought and teaching, and many mistakes perhaps all round, God draws hearts to rest in Him, and trains characters to serve Him."—Home Friend.

"The young girl whose short life is here portrayed by a sisterly hand was a charming character, and exemplified the graces of a Christian experience. The pages of her diary are a revelation of the writer's bright heart and keen observation of her surroundings; and the portrait and pictures are capital. A delightful biography."
The Christian Commonwealth.

"Miss Willard here traces, with a hand as skilful as the heart that guides it is loving, the life of her beloved sister Mary. It is an American biography, but will be read here with as much avidity, and will excite as intense admiration, as if it were English. . . . Worthy of being selected as a choice gift-book to young ladies."
Methodist New Connexion Magazine.

"For elder girls 'NINETEEN BEAUTIFUL YEARS,' by Frances E. Willard, should be very helpful and stimulating. It is an affectionate record of the singularly beautiful life of the authoress's sister, Miss Mary Willard."
Christian World.

"A book that may be safely put into a young lady's hands, with the assured confidence that it will serve to strengthen and deepen all influences for good."—The Christian.

The Queen, May 8th, says:—"The 'Dorcas' Thimble is more durable than the generality of these indispensable work-table implements; it is made in three parts, the inner and the outer being Silver, and the intermediate Steel; forming a resisting power not obtained in silver only. What is more uncomfortable than sewing with a thimble that has seen service to such an extent that it has holes in its sides? With the 'Dorcas' Thimble this annoyance vanishes."

REV. JOHN WILKINSON,

Mildmay Mission to the Jews.

(From Photograph by Mr. Benjamin Wyles, Southport.)

HE has often been called the "Jews' man," a title given him because the spiritual interests of this oppressed people have been laid of God so heavily upon his heart. He is a man of one purpose. One is certain that if his face is seen on the platform at a Dublin Believers' Meeting, or a Glasgow Convention, or a Mildmay Conference, the Jews will not be forgotten, either in heartfelt prayer to the God of Abraham for these children of Israel beloved for their fathers' sakes, or in pleading their strong claims upon the sympathy and interest of all who love the Saviour. It is not simply a hobby—with him it is a plainly seen and cheerfully undertaken duty.

His birthplace was a cottage home in one of the quietest and most picturesque villages of old England. With pious parents, passing through childhood and school-days in happy though humble surroundings, associations were formed which still render Tealby, in Lincolnshire, dear to him. While a village lad, at the age of fourteen, he found peace and forgiveness of sins in Jesus, and began at once with the sine quâ non of Christian life—service. He was shy, even timid at first, however, with a natural repugnance to prayer—and speech in public. But by degrees he took part in village prayer-meetings, &c., and later on he became a local preacher in the Wesleyan body. Still he had not realised his future sphere.

The turning-point was at twenty-six years of age, at Louth. Time, place and surroundings he well remembers when first his mind was exercised upon the need of missionaries amongst the Jews. A "deputation" had been preaching in the town, and the mind of a young friend of his was saying, "If I go as missionary to the Jews, will you come too?" "Well," was the reply, "the Lord might call you, and not me; it is a difficult sphere; the Jews are a clever race, and difficult to deal with."

When Wilkinson returned to his business, the striving between inclination and duty began. At first it was hastily dismissed; then growing stronger and stronger, till the "call" was plain, and he feared to disobey it. After meditation and prayer he wrote to the Secretary of the Jewish Missionary Society, in London, offering himself. The reply was favourable. So to the great city he came in 1851 to fit himself, by a three for his arduous labours in after life. The curriculum embraced Hebrew, Chaldee, Syriac, Greek and Latin, and a course in logic and theology, in all of which he acquitted himself as a man in earnest. He rose at four in summer and five in winter, tramping his little room till a pathway was worn in the deal boards; acquired as much Hebrew in two years as many students in six, on the testimony of his Professor, and surpassed even in this language some of his Jewish fellow students. In a year before the usual time he had completed the curriculum, and in 1854 he left the college to become a Gentile missionary among the Jews in London.

He began by diligently searching out addresses of Jews of all classes, calling upon them at their shops and houses, introducing himself as a Gentile friend of their nation, and urging the claims of Jesus as Messiah, with his Hebrew Bible in his hand. This required tact, and often personal courage, for he got many rebuffs, and the work was up-hill. After six months of this kind of labour he reported sixty accessible families. In his journal he says:—

> In some of these, on my first call, I met with a storm of abuse; in others a decided refusal either to accept a tract or to hear a word about Christ; but on a second or third call confidence has been gained, my tracts have been accepted and read, and my visits rendered welcome.

In addition to missionary work, God had another duty for him—the arousing of the Christian Church from its apathy and prejudice towards the Jew. In this double sphere he has been engaged for thirty-three years, exclusive of his student days. Travelling, on an average, ten thousand miles a year, he has visited nearly every city and town of importance in the three school-rooms, and drawing-rooms on this subject; following out at the same time, in most places where Jews reside, his missionary calling.

We must not forget to record his marriage a few months after leaving college, with a lady of his own name. She was truly a God-sent help-meet to him; Mrs. Wilkinson is not only a loving wife and mother, but the honorary secretary and correspondent of the widely extending Mission now under his charge. In 1868 he visited Palestine and Egypt, in company with Mr. Gaze's first party.

Towards the close of 1875, the result of a long and close study of the Eastern Question seemed to indicate to Mr. Wilkinson that the "Times of the Gentiles" were hastening to a close, and that the promise of the Restoration of Israel was probably within a brief period of its fulfilment, and a strong desire filled him that every effort should be made which could be made by Christian England to reach these exiles with the Gospel before they left our shores. With this view he desired to devote himself exclusively, for a time at least, to missionary work. His request to this effect was sent to the committee, but they were unable to comply, and he resigned a connection of twenty-five years' standing. It was in February, 1876, that the resignation was tendered, and in May that it would come into effect. Meanwhile he travelled and preached for the Society as before, trusting the Lord alone for support and guidance after the term had expired. A Christian merchant in Yorkshire, with whom he made a few days' stay, said to him at the close of his visit:—

> I have just concluded a most fortunate business stroke, and am wishing to make a thankoffering to the Lord, and should like to place it in your hands for the supply of your personal and family needs. As life is uncertain, I prefer giving a three years' donation in one lump.

Putting an envelope in Mr. Wilkinson's hands, he added, "Don't open it till you reach home." The following night Mr. Wilkinson opened it, to find a cheque for £300. Within six months the donor was dead. Other Christian friends voluntarily came forward to undertake the charge of his needs during the first three years, and when the term of his connection with the Society expired he was in a position to give all his energies to Jewish mission work without anxiety "for the morrow."

For some time he had been an intimate friend of the late revered Willian Pennefather, who was a sincere sympathiser with his Jewish work. In 1873 the beloved founder of the Mildmay Institutions fell asleep in Jesus, and his work was carried on under the joint superintendence of Captain Moreton and Mrs. Pennefather. To these Mr. Wilkinson wrote, proposing that his efforts as missionary to the Jews should be connected with Mildmay work. Captain Moreton warmly responded, and this constituted the commencement of the Mildmay Mission to the Jews, in June 1876. The union with the Conference Hall is still maintained, and the present superintendent, Mr. J. E. Mathieson, is a warm sympathiser with the work.

The Mission grew and prospered, the needs of the work and his own family wants being graciously and wonderfully met in answer to prayer. In 1878 he responded to a pressing invitation from Swedish friends to visit that country to awaken an interest in Israel; for six weeks he addressed crowded public and private Upsala and Lund, and was honoured with an audience of the king.

Tracing, in every step of this work, the loving hand of a prayer-answering God, would be a happy task, but would make this sketch too long. With unmistakeable tokens of God's favour and smile, a Medical Mission was formed in January, 1880. The Doctor who still works with the Mission is a man raised up of God, for a difficult and trying work. In 1881 we find that a little band of seventeen agents, or helpers, had gathered round Mr. Wilkinson, some of them paid and some unpaid. In 1882 a Printing House and Home for Inquirers were instituted on Newington-green, through which many young inquirers and converts have passed and received blessing. A branch mission was carried on in Glasgow for two years, until sufficient local interest was manifested to sustain it. In 1883 a Convalescent Home, to supplement Medical Mission work, was found necessary, and added to the work after the means to acquire it had come in in answer to prayer. The next and last institution was a Home and School for Poor Jewish Children, the house for which was purchased in 1884. The means for procuring this are, as in the other cases, a wonderful instance of God's reward of a simple faith.

From the time that the movement amongst the Jews in South Russia, led by Rabinowitz, came to the ears of the public, Mr. Wilkinson has taken a great interest in it, with the result that nearly £500 has been sent through the Mildmay Mission to help forward that remarkable movement. Mr. Wilkinson is the author of several small pamphlets and books on the ten tribes, and other Jewish subjects.

The Mission is now nearly eleven years old, and Mr. Wilkinson feels an easier conscience regarding the preaching of the Gospel to the resident Jews in Great Britain. London he regards as the finest mission station in the world, inasmuch as Jews are constantly passing through it to all parts; so, while retaining a permanent mission here, he is also turning his attention abroad. With the help of a gift of £3000, he has been enabled to purchase 100,000 New Testaments, in Hebrew, which are being distributed by missionaries in Europe and the North of Africa. Over 2200 of these Testaments were recently sent to as many Jewish Rabbis on the Continent. With the examples of Rabinowitz and Lichtenstein, both aroused and converted by the reading of the New Testament, it requires no extraordinary faith to pray for a Pentecostal blessing, in the awakening of many sons of Abraham through this work. May the prayers of all who love Christ and "His brethren according to the flesh" follow our brother in his unwearied efforts

AMERICAN MEDICAL MISSIONS.

The New York Medical Missionary Society organised in 1881 by Dr. Dowkontt, has recently adopted the title of The International Medical Missionary Society, whose address is 118, East Forty-fifth-street, New York City. The Doctor writes to us:—

The work has gone on from one Medical Mission Dispensary, opened in 1881, to seven—six in New York and one in Brooklyn. Over forty-five thousand medical attendances have been given to the sick poor, and wonderful cases of conversion have been met with, evidencing particularly the utility of this two-fold agency. Twenty male, and four female, students have come to us; of the former, two are in Africa—Dr. Summers and Mr. Chatelain, and four are at present labouring in America. Twelve male students were with us last winter, and a fine band of noble earnest fellows they were. Of the female students, one, who came for limited instruction only, has gone to the Congo, and three are in the city now. The wonderful movement which began at Northfield last July has gone on until now there are over two thousand missionary volunteers in this country and Canada. We are going to provide for at least fifty male and twelve female students this fall; but even more may come, as over one hundred and fifty have applied.

In assuming the new title we have joined hands with Canada, and expect this July to see a medical mission opened in Toronto, and possibly other places. In December, 1883, in company with Dr. James Cameron, of the China Inland Mission, I visited Chicago, and, as a result, Dr. H. M. Scudder, junior, opened a medical mission there. Subsequently, in March, 1885, the American Medical Missionary Society was formed in Chicago. Since the term "International" has been adopted by us, the friends in Chicago have expressed a desire for amalgamation, and possibly there will be a western division of the International with head-quarters in Chicago, a Canadian division with head-quarters at Toronto, and the eastern division with its head-quarters, and that of the Parent Society, in New York City. We now need an "International Medical Missionary College," where full medical education can be given with religious instruction, coupled with practical experience in both respects at the hospital (we hope soon to have), and the various mission dispensaries. There is great need, moreover, for some provision being made to give limited medical instruction of at least one year's duration to every missionary. Provision has already been made in this direction at our Institute for a course of forty weeks, and several are coming to attend it.

For some time past friends have been urging us to form an organisation in America similar to the China Inland Mission, but not restricted to any one land. Our Society, being composed of members of the various evangelical denominations, has decided to take this work in hand, and as men offer and means are provided for this purpose, they will be utilised. The aim will be to make such missionaries self-supporting, as far as possible, as well as more successful, by means of medical knowledge. Our first student, Dr. Summers, cost his Mission less than fifty cents for support during two years in Africa.

If any reader would like to be more fully informed as to our work, we will gladly send copies of our last report, just issued. We shall be glad to have more subscribers for The Medical Missionary Record, which publishes monthly accounts of medical mission work in all lands.

FOOD REFORM.—A vegetarian banquet will be given on Wednesday evening, July 6, in the large Queen's Hall at the People's Palace to about six hundred ministers, students, and philanthropists. A similar banquet to ladies only (especially for wives of ministers) will be given in the same place on July 20. Tickets, which will admit to the Conference afterwards, may be obtained of Mr. W. S. Manning, Superintendent London Auxiliary Vege

THE MILDMAY CONFERENCE.

It seems strange to us to-day that thirty-three years ago it should have appeared a hazardous experiment to invite even evangelical Christians to meet for conference on things pertaining to the kingdom of God and his righteousness, which were the very things they professed exclusively to seek. The experiment, however, signally succeeded, for God Himself had constrained his dear servant William Pennefather to make it. Last week the thirty-second Conference took place; but during the past year, as during every preceding one, some of those who came together at the first have passed into the Unseen; and every year some more or less familiar face is missed. A new generation has arisen since the first Conference at Barnet, and not many of the few hundreds who assembled there in 1856, were found among the three thousand at Mildmay in 1887.

Very mournful is it to mark the "long dark line of shadows, stretching far into the past. Every day it seems to lengthen; whither will it tend at last?"—the long dark line, the "fleeted opportunities," of two-and-thirty years. God may forgive our sinful negligence; but, like water spilt upon the ground which cannot be gathered up again, the lost and fleeted possibilities are gone for ever. But even here, where sin abounded grace has superabounded, and we contemplate with grateful wonder what God hath wrought.

In that very year, 1856, a money panic took place in the United States, which, though thousands were ruined for time, was followed by a revival of religion in which thousands were saved for eternity. In 1859, in answer to the prayers of two young men in Ireland, who had been filled with hope by reading "The Lord's dealings with George Müller," there came a flood of spiritual blessing upon Ulster, which soon extended to Wales and Scotland and England. As a necessary consequence of this revival at home, the doors of nations which had been forced by conquest, or which had yielded to commerce, were entered by missionary pioneers, who, in their turn, found new entrances and led the way, if not for conquest, at least for commerce—not always, it must be confessed, a desirable follower.

Among the very grandest and most beneficent movements of the period in which our privileged lot is cast, we rank the new belief in and expectation of the conversion of the young. Instead of the sombre idea which ran through "Pike's Early Piety"—that all good children die—a notion derived from the heathen axiom that "whom the gods love die young"—this generation has seen thousands of children saved, and their consistency has more than favourably compared with that of those whose change has come in later life. Many of these child-converts have grown up, and are now some of the most devoted missionaries in heathen lands.

The China Inland Mission, and still more recently the Salvation Army, have inaugurated a new method, marked a new era in missionary work, and brought the accomplishment of the Church's commission to evangelise the world appreciably nearer. They have shown that missions can be conducted with a less expensive staff at home, and at less outlay abroad; that Christ who gave the command, "Go ye servants in the field; that a far greater variety of labour is required—that learned men like Paul, and unlearned men like Peter and James and John, and women like Priscilla and Phœbe, are all needed; and that sometimes, as in the case of Priscilla and Aquila, the woman may be the more prominent and perhaps the abler worker. A new enthusiasm has accompanied the new simplicity; many who have the means to support themselves have gone, and more will go, to tell it out among the heathen that the Lord is King and Saviour.

We seem to have wandered away from Mildmay; but not only those which we have mentioned, but all other home and foreign Christian works have been fostered and helped by this Conference. And last, not least, the Mildmay Institutions of many kinds in London and abroad are a worthy and most beneficent outcome of it.

While the Barnet Conference was instituted with the simple purpose of gathering together in one the children of God who are scattered abroad, a further purpose is now fulfilled by it. Amidst the decadence of sound doctrine in many quarters, and while a cold and withering Unitarianism is creeping into many professedly evangelical pulpits and churches, Mildmay and the other Conferences which have grown out of it are gathering-places for those who are faithful to the truth that saves. And while the Romanising element in the Church of England, and a spurious liberalism among Nonconformists, are breaking down the barriers which our fathers set up against the papal apostasy, these Conferences give coherence and force to those who refuse to cast contempt upon the heroic men and women who suffered unto blood to make England what she is. They are gatherings of those who at least are not ashamed of the "No Popery!" cry, against which a cry is now raised in quarters where we should have least expected it.

The subject proposed for consideration last week was naturally suggested by the Jubilee celebrated on the previous day. The rejoicings at the completion of Queen Victoria's half-century of virtuous and prosperous rule were fitly followed by the consideration of Jesus Christ as King, and the privileges and responsibilities of his subjects.

It is a wide and an elastic theme, and we cannot say that it was very rigidly adhered to. Some at least of the addresses were pretty evidently sermons or studies adapted to the occasion. Not that they were any the less acceptable on that account. Any address that is worth giving gains by pruning as well as by growth, and a message from God to men may have to be delivered often, with adaptation to time and place, as was the case with the teachings of the Lord and his Apostles.

There was not one deliverance during these three days that was not profitable, and some that seemed too full of varied matter to be very effective from the platform, will afford food for thought and subject for many a discourse, when pondered in the quiet of the study and the home.

It was the present inward rule of the King in and over the individual soul, rather than the future manifested kingdom in power and glory, to which attention was asked in the programme, and to which, almost without exception, the speakers addressed themselves. The chief exception was the closing address by Mr. Grattan Guinness, and it was fitting that the three be concluded with such an anticipation of the future manifestation of the King and of his Kingdom.

But the morning and evening addresses were not the most important features of the Conference. The enlarged and still enlarging conception of foreign missions which God is pressing on his people was very fully recognised; and the afternoon meetings devoted to this great privilege and responsibility of the Church, are likely to be very fruitful, both in missionaries and in means. Nor must we overlook the after-meetings held each night by Rev. F. B. Meyer and others, when the duty and the way of full surrender, consecration, and faith in God for power, were simply explained and powerfully urged; with the result that many presented themselves a living sacrifice to know and do the holy acceptable and perfect will of God, and bound the sacrifice with cords of love to the horns of the altar whereon Love Eternal and Divine had offered up itself.

We expect to hear, during the coming years, of much fruit borne by the past Mildmay Conference.

A FELLOWSHIP OF WAITING.

Isaiah xxx. 18.

Oh tirèd heart! long waiting years,
  The clouds have darkened o'er thy way;
  The sun hath hid his cheerful ray;
Thy watching bringeth burning tears.

In "desert" times thy God can send
  Confiding love to chase thy fears;
  A gorgeous rainbow through thy tears
His covenant of peace will blend.

And beauty out of clouds and rain
  The golden sun's refraction brings;
  So peace from tempest 'neath God's wings,
And pleasure, too, from harrowing pain.

Thou waitest long—how blessèd this,
  To learn with perfect patience now,
  In fellowship with Him, that thou
Mayst better know his heavenly bliss.

Thy Lord, He waiteth, too, on thee:
  Oh fellowship of patience sweet;
  He teacheth thee, to make thee meet
His deeper purposes to see.

Thy lesson learnt, thy waiting o'er,
  Yet his is never at an end;
  For over thee his love doth bend,
Till thou hast reached the eternal shore.

William Henry Ross.

TEMPERANCE IN THE HARVEST FIELD.—A temperance worker, who is anxious to make a thankoffering to Almighty God for mercies received, offers 5000 copies of Mr. John Abbey's "Thoughts for Farmers," either to societies or individuals, who will undertake to place them in the hands of farmers, farm bailiffs, or estate stewards in their respective localities. It is hoped that friends throughout the country will avail themselves of this liberal offer. Applications to be made to Mr. John Abbey, 9, Bridge-street, Westminster, S.W. Stamps must be enclosed at the rate of 2d. per dozen for postage. Applications to be made before July 9.

TEMPERANCE IN THE EAST END.—By the invitation of Mr. and Mrs. J. Gurney Barclay, an interesting garden party of the East London Women's Christian Temperance Union was given at their residence, Knott's Green, Leyton, Essex, on Monday afternoon. A meeting on the lawn formed part of the arrangements, in which temperance principles were advocated on the highest Christian grounds. The Viscountess Lymington presided, and Rev. J. Lunt, vicar of Leyton, opened the proceedings with prayer. Among the company were Mr. and Mrs. Barclay, Mrs. Fowler, Mrs. William Fowler, Mrs. Paddon, Mrs. Lister, Mr. and Mrs. John Hilton, Mr. Lens, and Miss Hastings.

Notes and Comments.

NEXT week we hope to give portraits and sketch of Messrs. Fullerton and Smith, the well known Evangelists.

In order to make room for our Mildmay report, we have been obliged to omit many articles of interest, among them our instalment of Rev. F. B. Meyer's exposition of the Life of Elijah; Mr. Meyer, as will be seen, was one of the speakers at the Conference. Some thousands of copies of the inner sheet of this issue were printed off before we were able to embody the speakers' corrections in one or two of the addresses.

Last week the gaze of the civilised world was focussed at Windsor and Westminster, where the Royal lady who sits on the throne of these realms held court, and celebrated the jubilee of her reign. The splendid ceremonials, witnessed by vast crowds gathered from many lands, and favoured with true "Queen's weather," passed off most happily, with scarcely an accident to shadow the memory of the auspicious occasion. As the daily papers have vied with each other in giving full and graphic accounts of the jubilee celebrations, none of our space need be set apart for that purpose. We heartily join with all Her Majesty's loyal subjects throughout the Empire in the chorus of thanksgiving to God for the mercies of the past fifty years; and in prayer that she may long be spared to occupy the exalted position she has filled so well.

The following touching and womanly letter of thanks has been addressed by Her Majesty to her people:—

> Windsor Castle, June 24, 1887.
> I am anxious to express to my people my warm thanks for the kind, and more than kind, reception I met with on going to, and returning from, Westminster Abbey, with all my children and grandchildren.
> The enthusiastic reception I met with on all these eventful days, in London as well as in Windsor, on the occasion of my Jubilee, has touched me most deeply. It has shown that the labour and anxiety of fifty long years, twenty-two of which I spent in unclouded happiness, shared and cheered by my beloved husband, while an equal number were full of sorrows and trials, borne without his sheltering arm and wise help, have been appreciated by my people.
> This feeling and the sense of duty towards my dear country and subjects, who are so inseparably bound up with my life, will encourage me in my task, often a very difficult and arduous one, during the remainder of my life.
> The wonderful order preserved on this occasion, and the good behaviour of the enormous multitudes assembled, merits my highest admiration.
> That God may protect and abundantly bless my country is my fervent prayer.
> VICTORIA, R. & I.

While the Empire has good reason, in many respects, to be thankful for the course of the past half-century, there is no less reason, we think, for humiliation of spirit and searching of heart. Poverty, sin, and as the skeleton at the feast—sullen and discontented amid the general jubilation. How a righteous peace is to overspread that unhappy land, is a problem that seems as far off in its solution as ever. May God speedily interpose, and cut the Gordian knot that statesmen seem unable to unloose.

An interesting link between the Jubilee celebration and the Mildmay Conference, that opened on the following day, was the well merited bestowal of titular honours on the chairman, Mr. S. A. Blackwood. He will henceforth be known as Sir Arthur Blackwood, K.C.B.

It is not a pleasant reflection that in Jubilee week two women, living under the shadow of our great national Cathedral in Westminster, fought with each other like two tigresses, with the result that one of them was done to death. Says The Daily News:—

> For a whole afternoon these women tried to beat each other to death, while men and women and children looked on, and enjoyed the sport. The Dark Continent, in its darkest corner, could hardly go beyond that.

This typical incident may well temper our rejoicings, and cause us to face with becoming seriousness and determination the task of evangelising our home heathen that still lies before us. But, first of all, we ought to roll away that stone of stumbling that an American cleric has lately described as "the embodiment of the devil"—the gin-shop. We may multiply our city missionaries, and improve the dwellings of the poor; but while this arch-fiend is permitted to go about like a roaring lion, rending and devouring our people, these brutal and ghastly scenes will continue to bear swift witness against our boasted civilisation and our so-called Christianity.

A sympathetic and thoughtful paper in the June number of Eastward Ho! deserves the careful and prayerful attention of all who are interested in the alleviation of human sorrow and suffering. In these days of remarkable Christian service, in the direction of the temporal wants and needs of the poorer classes, it is somewhat rare to come upon an opportunity of doing good in a direction which would appear to have been almost entirely overlooked. Such an opportunity, the writer of this article, on the "After Care of the Insane," brings under public notice; we shall be surprised if many do not respond to the appeal which is at once practical and pathetic. It will be new to most of our readers to learn that our public lunatic asylums contain 30,000 patients, and that "for these there is no convalescent home, nor any machinery to make the step from the hospital (as we may justly call the asylum) into the active duties of life less abrupt and arduous." Yet a return to the world is more difficult in their cases than it is to ordinary patients. As a matter of fact they require even more care than do those who have suffered from bodily ailments only.

That there are many who have no homes is only too true. Many more are almost without clothing, and quite without means. To these the admirable "Association for the After Care of the Insane" desires to hold out a loving hand. With such a pre-excellent committee, including in its ranks a number of leading asylum doctors, we have no doubt much temporal and spiritual good will result from the formation of the Society.

During the last fourteen years the number of Protestant churches in Madagascar has been increased by nearly seven hundred, making a total of twelve hundred; all of them are quite self-supporting. The number of communicants exceeds eight thousand, yet this is the island which not many years ago was justly described to the first volunteer missionary as "a hell upon earth."

Mr. Moody has issued his invitation to the usual Conference for Bible Study at Northfield during the first ten days in August. Those who are privileged to attend will be certain to enjoy a feast of fat things, provided by the evangelist and the able expositors whom he gathers around him. The chief representative of Great Britain at the Convention will be Rev. H. W. Webb-Peploe, whose gifts as a speaker at such gatherings are widely known in this country. Keswick's loss will be Northfield's gain. Mr. Webb-Peploe has such a peculiar and original cast of mind, and has drunk so deeply into the spirit of the sacred writings, as they bear on practical faith and godliness, that we anticipate for him great acceptance with our American friends. We would counsel them not to lose the opportunity of hearing his message. We hope to furnish our readers, in due course, with special reports of the two Conferences at Northfield.

Preaching at the Roman Catholic Cathedral in Edinburgh, on the occasion of the Queen's Jubilee, Canon Donlevy said that at the time of Her Majesty's accession there were only 62 priests and 24 Roman Catholic chapels in Scotland, whereas in 1887 there were 328 priests and 330 chapels, with 309 schools, 39 convents, 3 colleges, 2 archbishops, and 4 bishops. These figures may be looked at from two points of view, and the one from which we regard them is not a very pleasant one. It is while men sleep that the tares are sown; and surely there must have been lack of evangelical effort somewhere to have rendered such development of the Romish Apostasy possible in a land like Scotland.

It is noteworthy, however, that, from statistics which Rev. Dr. Blaikie, of Edinburgh, has just compiled for the Presbyterian Alliance, during the past half-century the number of Presbyterian congregations in Scotland has doubled, and that, whilst in England and Wales fifty years ag Presbyterianism was "barely visible," today there are 300 congregations in England and in Wales 500, with nearly half a millio worshippers. It is a remarkable fact, too that in the Colonies, and in several of the countries of Europe, there has been similar mighty development.

There appears a very obvious lesson t be learnt from these interesting an suggestive statistics which Dr. Blaikie ha prepared. There may be a difference o opinion as to the advantage of Confession of Faith; there ought to be none as to th importance of a definite Scriptural teaching. People care for this far more tha

Presbyterians have in Great Britain, the United States, and Canada, made such remarkable progress during the Queen's reign.

In a paper in last week's British Weekly, under the heading of "Books which have influenced me," Mr. Walter Besant says:—

> Unquestionably the book which most seized my imagination was the immortal "Pilgrim's Progress." It still seems to me the book which has influenced the minds of Englishmen more than any other, outside the covers of the Bible. While it survives, and is read by our boys and girls, two or three great truths will remain deeply burned into the English soul. The first is the personal responsibility of each man; the next is that Christianity does not want, and cannot have, a priest. I confess that the discovery, by later reading, that the so-called Christian priest is a personage borrowed from surrounding superstition, and that the great ecclesiastical structure is entirely built by human hands, filled me with only a deeper gratitude to John Bunyan.

The paper in last month's Expositor on "The New Theory of the Apocalypse," which replies to the objections against the unity of the Book, must be read with the remembrance that the "New Theory" is not so recent as some have supposed. A translation of Dr. Godet's Essay upon the Apocalypse (Biblical Studies. Hodder & Stoughton) was published eleven years' ago, and this refers to notions which had found advocates to the effect that the Book was a compilation of collected documents (p. 324). Many persons are apt to take as new, merely old arguments presented in a new form, and which have been refuted.

Few more suggestive passages have ever been written than those which, in his last volumes, Mr. Lecky describes the charm of French Society just before the Revolution. Illusion was upon the nation. The throne was surrounded with a more loyal traditional respect than previously. Intellectual activity was never greater. The empire of superstition seemed to be passing away. Differences of rank and classes were perceptibly softening. A new spirit of sympathy was abroad. It was believed that liberty would enlighten the world, and everyone foresaw the happiest future. Such was the optimism of the period before the awful years that came, and the fact should be borne in mind when we read the Lord's words of the last days. There may be a special charm in that which blinds men to the decadence of their own times.

New College, Finchley New-road, is a Congregational Institution. According to The Christian World, professors have been chosen who are amiable but inefficient, and a kind of intellectual blight has settled on the College. Some of the students have complained that lectures are dry-as-dust deliverances, and wanting in devout enthusiasm. Considerable excitement in Congregational circles has arisen. To outsiders a reflection after this order arises: students for the Christian ministry are coming to learn that the modern fashion of cold, intellectual preaching is a deplorable failure; the next thing they will have to learn is to lay aside their craving for a new and rationalised theology, which can no more have warmth than a grate of coals without fire.

"All the Psalms xcii.—c." says Dr. Kay, "are of a Liturgical character." Surely also they are of a Millennial character. Psalm thousand years. It opens with thanksgiving and praise, and goes on to declare that "the brutish man knoweth not, neither doth the fool understand this—when the wicked spring as the grass, and when all the workers of iniquity do flourish, it is that they may be destroyed for ever." That is the doom of Antichrist. "But the righteous shall flourish in the courts of our God, they shall still bring forth fruit in old age." This is in agreement with Isaiah, "There shall be no more thence an infant of days, nor an old man that hath not filled his days...and mine elect shall long enjoy the work of their hands" (lxv. 18–25). Accordingly Psalm xciii. begins, "The Lord reigneth," and Psalm c. follows—"Make a joyful noise unto Jehovah, all ye lands."

"Ring in the thousand years of peace, Ring in the Christ that is to be."

Mr. Spurgeon in his "Treasury of David" quotes this from Henry Cowles on Psalm xcii. 6:—

> Expressively he wrote: "The man-brute will not know; the fool will not understand this," viz., that when the wicked spring up with rapid and apparently vigorous growth as the summer flowers in Palestine, it is that they may ripen soon for a swift destruction. The man-brute precisely translates the Hebrew words; one whom God has endowed with manhood, but who has debased himself to brutehood; a man, as being of God's creation in His own image; but a brute, as being self-moulded (shall we say self-made) into the image of the baser animals.

The conflict between God and Satan from the first has been on the one hand to debase man to the level of the beast, and on the other to raise him to oneness with God. In order to accomplish his end Satan took the form of the most subtle of the beasts, and God in the fulness of time took on Him the form of a servant, and was made in the likeness of men. Not among the most sunken savages but in the highest civilisation, does God find the brute-man. The golden head of the first of the four world monarchies is his prototype. Nebuchadnezzar, with the words in his mouth, "Is not this great Babylon which I have built," is changed into a beast, until he learns that the Most High ruleth among the children of men.

It is stated that the girl students at Wellesley College, in the United States, each give forty-five minutes per day to the house work, all that is necessary in the residences being done by the students, who are thus trained in domestic economy, doubtless to the advantage of future households. More of this practical education is required in our girls' schools, and it will scarcely be urged that such a training would in any way detract from the value of the accomplishments which hitherto have generally been allowed to crowd out everything more solid and useful.

In the past five years there have been in America 8226 recorded suicides, an alarmingly large number. The statistics are quite contrary to the generally received opinion that winter is the season in which suicides are the most numerous; for in America July is the month which has the largest number. These figures, sad as they are, do not at all reach those of Paris, where of late years there has been a lamentable increase in suicides, a fact doubtless accurately attributed to the development

After making some allowances, and taking some few exceptions, we would commend to the attention of those who are interested in the progress of the working classes, an exceedingly thoughtful and helpful paper, by Mr. Joseph Davison, on "Dietary and Social Emancipation," which appears in Brotherhood, for June 17. "The working classes" too frequently lose sight of the fact that greater results of labour are of little actual value if they are unwisely expended. Mr. Davison, of course, cannot shut his eyes to the importance of economic conditions over which the workman has no control, in bringing about a state of things in which poverty increases, and vice spreads almost in proportion to the increase in the national wealth; but he insists upon it, and with much truth, it must be admitted, that next to this "the reckless and injurious prodigality of the people in their mode of living is most largely accountable." He has some solemn words with regard to the waste in tobacco and drink, and he makes a singular statement: He was informed by a large employer of labour that when wages were high his workpeople went into debt, and when wages were low they paid it off.

Mr. Davison's paper does not simply refer to "the masses." His assertion that "to eat luxuriously is not the ideal of a Christian civilisation" is true of all classes. It is somewhat inconsistent for people in higher ranks of society to be endeavouring to reform the working classes in these matters, if they themselves are forgetting that luxury is as much a sin in the man of unlimited, as in the man of limited, means.

MISSION TO JERUSALEM.

Mr. D. C. Joseph writes to us on May 26:—"Although it is only a little more than a fortnight since the Lord brought me to the Holy Land, I have seen sufficient to enable me to fill a volume. It causes the heart to leap with joy to see the readiness of the Jews to listen to the preaching of the Gospel. The bitter aversion against Christ has almost disappeared, and the open doors for the servant of God are an encouragement to expect greater things yet to come. Although it is not quite a year since I first visited Jerusalem, the great change which we found is something surprising. Property is rising in price, for about a mile and a half on the Jaffa-road very fine buildings are erected, and the city spreads itself as far as the Damascus gate near 'Galgato.'

"Although there is now a great restriction in the emigration of the Jews, nevertheless the more the Turkish Government forbids the entrance of the Jews to Palestine, the more they flock to it. Alas! as it was with the children of Israel in the time of Moses, so it is now. The poor Jew is oppressed and persecuted by the people of the land. But the pain is even greater when converted Jews are slighted by so-called Christians. There is an anti-Semitic spirit, not only against the unconverted Jew, but also against the converted Israelite. We ask prayer that that feeling may be uprooted from the hearts of men.

"The distress is great among the unbelieving Jews, but we are more concerned about the converted Jews who are starving in the city. There is very little provision made for the convert. We earnestly desire to be able to do in the same way as we did in London, at least give them a night's lodging and a morsel of bread."

THE CHURCHES & LICENSED SIN.

The following circular is being addressed by post to ministers of the Gospel throughout this country, on behalf of the Gospel Purity Association, 31, Paternoster-square, London, E.C., being signed by all the members of the Committee. It is desired, if possible, to send a copy (with the full report of the recent demonstration in Exeter Hall) to each minister in the United Kingdom; we hope the practical sympathy of our readers will enable this to be done. It is a matter of the deepest importance that the Christian churches of this country should clear their skirts of the stigma now attaching to them; if our pastors can be enlightened as to the true state of the case, and will be faithful in the exercise of their trust, the end of our national complicity with this abominable iniquity cannot be far off:—

Dear Sir,—We are now confronted with a question of greater importance and magnitude than was that of negro slavery in the British Possessions, which half a century ago so justly stirred the hearts of the British people.

In India there is more than one-sixth of the human race under British rule. India is the largest field of missionary operations. Yet here, amidst its 257 millions of people, waiting to be won for Christ, the British Government has set up the system of licensed impurity, in its worst form, licensing the women, and licensing the keepers of dens of iniquity. This abomination is not being done in a corner, or on an insignificant scale. The God-defying system is in operation in the principal centres of population in India, including cities like Bombay, Madras, Delhi, Cawnpore, and Allahabad—celebrated for its great religious fair, sometimes visited by a quarter of a million people.

And not in India alone has British authority set up the infidel system of making "provision for the flesh to fulfil the lusts thereof." It has been established in other British possessions, including Jamaica, Trinidad, Barbadoes, Hong-Kong, the Straits Settlements, Fiji, Malta, Gibraltar, Labuan, &c.

Surely the churches of Great Britain only need to be informed of this monstrous iniquity—this terrible barrier to the progress of the Gospel in lands under our rule—to produce a demand for its abolition that our Government will not dare to disregard.

We enclose a report of a great Christian demonstration recently held on this subject at Exeter Hall, London, to which we beg your prayerful attention. We also enclose a brief paper of suggestions as to memorialising the Government. We cannot doubt that the information which accompanies this letter will lead you to share our own deep feeling of responsibility in this matter. To remain silent in the presence of this iniquity is to become an accomplice in it.

"To him that knoweth to do good, and doeth it not, to him it is sin."

"If Thou forbear to deliver them that are drawn unto death,
And those that are ready to be slain;
If thou sayest, behold, we knew it not;
Doth not He that pondereth the heart consider it?
And He that keepeth thy soul, doth not He know it?
And shall not He render to every man according to his works?"

In anticipation of your hearty co-operation in this work for God, we are,

Sincerely yours in his service,

VISITING THE HOLY LAND.

Dear Sir,—I have lately returned home from a trip to Egypt and Palestine. It was taken principally on account of health, but we had a strong desire to see the Holy Land and the missionary work going on there and at Cairo. Everything went very well till we reached Damascus, where I was prostrated by Syrian Fever, and it took me four weeks to recover; but by the grace of God I have got over it.

The first question people put to us is "Were you pleased with your trip?" Our reply is, Pleased is no word to convey how very much we enjoyed it, how much light it threw on our Bibles, and what delight it has given us to follow the steps of the Blessed Master and his faithful Apostle Paul through the Holy Land and Asia Minor.

Jerusalem became a kind of home to us, and we felt our love for it grow the longer we stayed there. At Bethany we thought of the Saviour's home with Lazarus; on the Mount of Olives we read his last mournful farewell to the glorious city lying at his feet; on the Sea of Galilee we read his miracles; and at Capernaum the dreadful woe He saw coming on that town. At Damascus we read St. Paul's conversion, and the day was so bright and so hot as we entered, that we realised to some extent the brightness of the sun—and what must the heavenly light have been. We followed him at Smyrna and Ephesus, and at Athens took leave of the scenes depicted in our Bibles.

As we went along we endeavoured to see what missionary work was going on. At Cairo we were delighted with the American Presbyterian Mission, and Miss Whately's work; at both places they kindly permitted me to examine the children, and I was indeed pleased with the results. The Americans at Cairo, Beyrout, and Constantinople are doing a grand work.

At Jaffa I had the pleasure of seeing the Church Missionary Society's schools, but only in a cursory way, but it was a very great gratification to me to spend a Sunday evening with those six saintly ladies who manage the Jaffa Mildmay Hospital, and to have a Bible-reading with them. At Ramleh and Lydda I visited the Church Missionary Society's schools, and at Jerusalem I think I can give unqualified praise to Bishop Gobat's school. There, too, we saw the work of the London Jews' Society, and its admirably managed hospital by Dr. Wheeler. At Nazareth we went over that admirable institution, the Nazareth Orphanage, in charge of Miss Adams, and we there made the acquaintance of an earnest Church Missionary Society's missionary, Mr. Wolters. At Nablous we met another of the same Society, Mr. Fulcher, and that pretty much completes what I saw. I was too ill to see the work at Damascus, Baalbek, and Beyrout, but at the latter place Dr. Jessup came most kindly and sat by my sofa to give me an account of the work carried on at that great American centre. At Constantinople, too, I was too unwell to go and see Robert College, but both there and at Smyrna I had the pleasure of seeing the Sailors' Rest, under Miss Sargint and Miss Grimston.

You will perhaps ask me what made most impression upon me. Well I think the American missions at Cairo and Beyrout; the Jaffa Mildmay Hospital and ladies' individual work. But what struck me throughout was the earnestness of the working Christians. It is, indeed, a dreadfully uphill work—all sowing—very little reaping; but that will come—we will trust our heavenly Father for that.

We met many Christians travelling, and in the camp next to us the American ministers of the Gospel, hearing I was very ill, united in prayer for my recovery. You can imagine how deeply we were touched by this Christian sympathy.

Yours most sincerely,
W. Hatt Noble.

A CALL TO UNITED PRAYER.

The following Circular is already in extensive circulation:—

THE STATE OF THE COUNTRY—A CALL TO UNION IN PRAYER.

Many persons feel that there is much in the state of our country, and in the condition of the Church of Christ, that calls for special prayer, and that more than ever all who love the Lord Jesus should hold the truth in the unity of the Spirit, and in devotedness of life.

THE SOUTHWARK Y.M.C.A., which for a number of years had existed in a humble manner in a by-street, was six months ago removed to larger premises in the main thoroughfare (26 and 28, Newington Causeway). Since the change took place, a "Home for Young Men" has been added, and has manifestly been blessed of God; many a young man, a stranger to London, having found a welcome, and not a few savingly converted while residing with us. Among the fifty young fellows who have passed through the books in this department are to be found not only Englishmen from all quarters of the kingdom, but French, American, and Belgian citizens; a proof that such an Institu-

THE FIGUERAS MISSION.

One of the first and most interesting of our mission stations is Vilabertran. Dr. Stoughton, in his "Spanish Reformers," thus describes his visit to the place:—"In a dismantled monastery of knight templars, once the scene of a royal wedding, is a large room fitted up for worship and preaching; at the other end is an old Romish chapel, used as a parish church. The Sunday-school numbers 116 scholars. We drove over to the spot, and met there with several persons interested in the enterprise. Some rustic families, turned out of employment by the land-holder, remain notwithstanding steadfast to their Christian profession."

The following is taken from one of our "Occasional Papers":—"One Tuesday night, the weather being stormy, we feared that few would venture out to the Gospel service in the old monastery of Vilabertran. To our surprise, the congregation was unusually large. Pastor Lopez Rodriguez preached about the three young men in Daniel, urging on those present who had found Christ to come out boldly and confess Him. At the close of the service seventeen men and eight women came forward and gave their simple but earnest testimony, and their decision to confess the Lord at all costs. This they have nobly done, in the face of loss of employment and other kinds of persecution. It was indeed a solemn and joyful occasion, when for the first time these dear converts met with us around the Lord's table. Strange was the contrast between the past and the present. In that ancient hall monks of the Order of Knight Templars were wont to hold council or feast; and now a few poor, but rejoicing, believers in Jesus, the 'One Mediator,' had met to commemorate his dying love. Assembled as we were in that 'upper room,' surrounded by enemies who had once tried to set fire to the building, we were forcibly reminded of the days of the early Christians; and as then the Master was 'in their midst,' so we also realised his blessed presence. 'Be thou faithful unto death, and I will give thee a crown of life,' was the motto given to each on leaving.

"Since then many more converts have been added to that little band, besides a goodly number of those who attend the preaching of the Gospel. Amongst the former is kind, gentle, yet firm, Señorita Teresa (our school-mistress), beloved by the scholars and by all who know her. When we first began to teach and preach in Vilabertran, she was much opposed to the Gospel. After a time, however, she heard the beautiful texts and sweet hymns as repeated and sung by the children, and began to think that the Protestants and their teaching were not so bad as the priests made out. Finally, she yielded to the earnest persuasions of a convert to attend one of our Christmas treats. She was delighted with all she heard of the Gospel, and embraced with all her heart, and then frankly told the priest of the great change in her faith. He was extremely angry, and excommunicated her from the pulpit, at the same time denouncing most bitterly 'those Protestant wolves who had caught and stolen the lamb of his flock, the best daughter of the church in Vilabertran.'

"About a year after her conversion, having proved a consistent convert, we engaged her to be our school mistress, and found in her a valuable addition to our band of workers. For five years we have had the use of a large hall and a suite of rooms in the old monastery of Vilabertran. In the former we have held our Sunday-school and services. Through the influence of the priest with the count who owns most of the land, we have been obliged to leave our hall and school in the monastery. There being no other suitable building in the place, the priest told the people that 'the Protestants would be forced to give up their work.' His words would have been but too true but for the kindness of Doña Teresa and her mother, who at once offered the use of two rooms in a house which belonged to summer, is insufferable—a great contrast to the large, cool stone church which the priest has for about two dozen of his people."

We have no liberty in Spain to hold meetings in the open air, and the necessity is therefore forced upon us to build a plain and suitable hall. We could then accommodate many more children and adults, and should not be at the mercy of a Romish landlord, nor have the burden of raising annual rent. The sum of £400 will effect this, towards which we have received £46. Rev. J. C. Stewart Mathias, Aldringham, Saxmundham, is our treasurer.—Yours in the Lord's service,

Emily Lopez Rodriguez.

SPECIAL SERVICES IN THEATRES.

Lord Mount-Temple presided lately at a drawing-room meeting held at Kent House, Knightsbridge, the residence of Lady Ashburton, called "to hear an account of the work of the committee for holding special religious services in theatres, halls, &c., in London, and for erecting memorial mission-halls to the late Earl of Shaftesbury." The Chairman said there was a growing openness on the part of the working classes to listen to religious teaching in central places. What they wanted was plain, direct, personal addresses, such as were given by the agents of this Society. He was very glad to see that the Society were taking steps to perpetuate the name of the late Earl of Shaftesbury by erecting memorial halls in different parts of London.

Rev. T. C. Udall, the deputation secretary to the Services, said fourteen prominent buildings in various parts of London had been used for the services, and help had been given to two hundred mission-rooms. In these services the Gospel had been earnestly preached by clergymen and laymen who gave their services without fee or reward. The committee were anxious to double the number of buildings used for the services, and to provide a good mission-hall for everyone of the 470 missionaries belonging to the London City Mission. Mr. Jack followed with an account of the work in the Holborn District, and advocated the hiring of town-halls in preference to theatres wherever it was possible. Rev. F. Hastings said the theatre services were productive of good results, because they brought the preacher into personal contact with the people. Rev. James Chadburn, in an address, dwelt upon the importance of increasing the number of mission-halls all over London, where they could meet the people in friendly intercourse, preach to them, and feed them in bad times.

Mr. Sawell, the secretary, spoke of the East-end, with its 800,000 persons, nearly all of the working classes, and of its deep, and, alas! ever-deepening poverty; and appealed to the wealthy residents of the West to construct a bridge of personal sympathy with their poorer and less fortunate brethren. If that could not be done—though Lady Ashburton was doing it, both in George-yard, Whitechapel, and in Canning Town—then, at least, let there be a golden one built. Mr. Sawell added that the poor were very patient, as the last speaker had said; but, unless the West-end evangelised the East-end, the East would come to the West. They would not come to evangelise, but they would come in anger, and they would shake the very foundations of society.

SHELTERING HOMES, LIVERPOOL.—A thousand children from one of the most needy districts in Liverpool had recently a day's excursion into the country, through the kindness of the friends and supporters of this Mission. In the fields, amid the flowers, their enjoyment was complete. Mrs. Birt, in a communication, speaks tenderly of the vast numbers of sweet, gentle, lovable, intelligent children for whom, without a mother's love, there seems no room in this country, and who are often terribly ill-used. But when tended for awhile by Christian friends, for the Master's sake, and then sent to Canadian homes, they are loved and cherished as gems of the family. A fine band of boys and some nice little girls are almost ready

IN MEMORIAM.

MISS M. V. G. HAVERGAL.

One whose whole life has been a bright example of whole-hearted consecration and unswerving devotedness to her Lord has just been called from among us.

Maria Vernon Graham Havergal, well known as the writer of the "Memorials" of her sister, Frances Ridley Havergal, was second daughter of Rev. William H. Havergal, M.A., Hon. Canon of Worcester. She was born at Coaley Vicarage, Gloucestershire, Nov. 15, 1821. During her school days she gave herself to the Lord, and ever after lived for Him. For many years she was her father's right-hand in his successive parishes, looking upon it as her daily work to visit and minister to the sick and poor. When her father retired from active life in 1867, instead of settling down comfortably amidst Christian privileges and Christian society at Leamington, which was well stocked with workers, she followed God's plain leading to a true home missionary sphere in the town and neighbourhood of Bewdley. There she laboured most devotedly for about ten years, her supreme aim being to win souls for Christ, while she ministered in many ways to the temporal needs of the people; and truly her "labour was not in vain in the Lord."

On the death of her father's widow, she and her sister Frances lived together at The Mumbles, in South Wales, until the home-call of the latter, and there also she found blessed though quieter work. Since then she has had no settled home, though her head-quarters were at Winterdyne, the home of her sainted sister Mrs. Shaw, whose sudden translation to heaven is so recent, but nearly the last three years were spent with her eldest sister in Hertford, Sidmouth, and Weston-super-mare.

Much of her time has been occupied with literary work. Even at the beginning of this year she wrote in much suffering the "Outlines of a Gentle Life," memorials of her dear sister Mrs. Shaw. But wherever she has been in her various wanderings, she was ever to be found (so far as her strength permitted) ministering to the sick, and carrying to those in darkness the glorious Gospel of the grace of God.

Not only among such, however, have been her sweet ministries of love. Only the Lord knows to how many of his servants in a different sphere self-denying kindness has been shown for the Master's sake, which He will not forget, who has said, "Inasmuch as ye have done it unto the least of these my brethren, ye have done it unto Me."

For four or five years her life has been one of much suffering, which culminated during the four and a half months spent at Weston-super-Mare. Those who knew her natural independence of character could alone fully appreciate the beautiful patience and gentleness manifested in sickness and helplessness, as well as her unselfish thoughtfulness for those who ministered to her.

At last, suffering and weariness are exchanged for rest and fulness of joy in the unveiled presence of the Lord whom she so long loved and served. Early in the morning of June 22 she "departed to be with Christ." E. C.

Since then he has lovingly laboured in many departments of Christian effort—as Sunday-school teacher in Hawkstone Hall, finance secretary to Christ Church Temperance Society, member of Southwark and Lambeth Mission Committee, helper to Mr. Benson, the evangelist, in the out-door and indoor meetings, the secretary to Rev. SERMON FOR LITTLE FOLKS.

The following sermon was preached by Mr. Wells, a minister in California, who is a lover of children, especially for the little ones, before the regular sermon. He talked from the fifth chapter of Daniel. The whole chapter tells

HOW A KING LOST HIS KINGDOM.

He lost it through drinking wine. He was banqueting with his lords, a thousand of them, and drinking wine from vessels of gold and silver which had been taken from the Temple of God. But while they were all drinking and making merry, their enemy was digging a trench around the city walls, into which they were to turn the river that flowed through the heart of the city, and then march in through the former river bed. And while they were thus feasting and drinking, and singing songs and making many noises, there came forth suddenly fingers, perhaps fiery fingers, and wrote on the plaster, and the king saw it, in the midst of his wine and revelry saw it, and was so terrified that he lost his strength, and his knees shook so that they smote together. He called in frightened haste for his so-called wise men to explain the meaning of the writing. They failed, and Daniel was called, who at once told the king that the words meant that he had been weighed in the balance and found wanting, and his kingdom was to be taken from him and given to another.

Now, children, do you think there are any hands nowadays writing on the walls? Is any one's kingdom being taken away because of drinking? Yes; because a man's kingdom is what he is—his character—and many a man is losing his character and himself by drinking.

I've been told that in a beautiful part of the city there is a nice home, with walnut and orange trees and flowers and lemons and drives, all to be sold because the owner drinks liquors. Can a man drink walnut trees? Can he drink orange trees? Can he drink up his home? Yes; and a whole farm, or store and business, or himself. He loses his kingdom because he drinks too much.

Are there any hands on the wall nowadays? No; but there is one upon men, which all may read. I sat at a table lately in a restaurant, and near me sat a man who drank a whole bottle of wine. There was a very plain writing on his face. His nose was red and his cheeks the colour of beefsteak, and red lines everywhere. The writing said he would soon lose his kingdom.

And I saw a woman, one day, in the gutter. Her face was red and bloated, her clothes were soiled and covered with the dirt of the street. She had lost whatever of beauty had been hers; her womanly purity was gone; she was altogether unattractive. She had lost her beauty, her home, her friends—her kingdom.

A rich drunkard kept two monkeys for the amusement afforded by their antics. One day he called them upon the table and gave them wine to drink. Their drunken frolics were wonderfully funny. But soon the funny stage passed, and they tumbled off to the floor, where they fell to quarrelling and fighting. The owner saw this, and said it was no worse than men did. He was so much ashamed of himself that he gave up his intemperate habits and regained his kingdom.

A quiet old Quaker was sitting by a hotel fire, when a traveller came in and called for brandy and water, or hot water and brandy—how is it?—because he was cold, or for some other reason. He lifted a pair of coloured glasses from his eyes, saying the eyes were so weak he was obliged to wear them. The Quaker said: "Friend, if thee would wear thy glasses over thy mouth, thy eyes would grow stronger."

Don't put this enemy into your mouths, or it will steal away your brains—will take away your kingdom.

MISSION AT BRIXTON.

A most successful eight days' mission to children and young persons has been held in Immanuel Church, West Brixton, from June 12 to June 19. The mission was conducted throughout by Rev. Vernon J. Charlesworth, of the Stockwell Orphanage, assisted on the first day by Mr. Powell, and on several other days by Mr. Chamberlayne. The singing was efficiently led by boys from the Stockwell Orphanage.

Much prayer had been offered for a blessing, and the answer graciously vouchsafed was abundant. The attendances throughout the mission were large, on the last Sunday quite a thousand souls were present. The power of the Holy Ghost was felt in every service, and was manifested in the quietness and devotion of the children, and in the number of those whose young hearts were drawn to the Saviour. Mr. Charlesworth's addresses were all marked by simplicity, earnestness, and the fullest Gospel truth. No attempt was made to get up excitement, or to press the children to openly profess that they had accepted Christ, yet a goodly number were at every service gathered into the fold of Jesus, and many more were made anxious to be his.

"I AM NOT MY OWN."

"I wish I had some money to give to God," said Susy; "but I haven't any."

"God does not expect you to give Him what you have not," said papa; "but you have other things beside money. When we get home I will read something to you, which will make you see plainly what you may give to God."

So after dinner they went to the library, and Susy's papa took down a large book and made Susy read aloud: "I have this day been before God, and have given myself—all that I am and have—to God; so that I am in no respect my own. I have no right to this body, or any of its members; no right to this tongue, these hands, these feet, these eyes, these ears. I have given myself clean away."

"These are the words of a good and great man, who is now in Heaven. Now, you see what you have to give to God, my darling Susy."

Susy looked at her hands and at her feet, and was silent. At last she said in a low voice, half to herself, "I don't believe God wants them."

Her papa heard her. "He does want them, and He is looking at you now to see whether you will give them to Him or keep them for yourself. If you give them to Him you will be careful never to let them do anything naughty, and will teach them to do everything good they can. If you keep them for yourself they will be likely to do wrong and to get into mischief."

"Have you given yours to Him, papa?"

"Yes, indeed; long ago."

"Are you glad?"

"Yes, very glad."

Susy was still silent. She did not quite understand what it all meant.

"If you give your tongue to God," said her papa, "you will not allow it to speak unkind, angry words, or tell tales, or speak an untruth, or anything that would grieve God's Holy Spirit."

"I think I'll give Him my tongue," said Susy.

"And if you give God your hands, you will watch them, and keep them from touching things that do not belong to them. You will not let them be idle, but will keep them busy about something."

"Well, then, I'll give Him my hands."

"And if you give Him your feet, you never will let them carry you where you ought not to go; and if you give Him your eyes, you will never let them look at anything you know He would not like to look at if He were by your side."

Then they knelt down together, and Susy's papa prayed to God to bless all they had been saying, and to accept all Susy had now promised to give Him, and to keep her from ever forgeting said and all she did, all she saw and all she heard, to remember, "I am not my own."

Then he taught her these lines:—

O that mine eyes might closed be,
To what concerns me not to see;
That deafness might possess mine ear
To what concerns me not to hear;
That truth my tongue might ever tie
From ever speaking foolishly;
That no vain thought might ever rest
Or be conceived within my breast;
That by each word and deed, and thought
Glory may to God be brought.

MISS VON FINKELSTEIN IN JERUSALEM.

Rev. A. Sternberg, missionary of the British Society to the Jews, has lately visited Jerusalem. In a letter published in the current issue of the Society's Magazine, he says:—

"Since my arrival here I have seen a good deal of our esteemed and talented friend, Miss Finkelstein, and family. She has been constantly visited by representatives from every nationality, who listen to her words and conversation with great interest.

"A tent was stretched on the ground of Howard's Hotel in Jerusalem, and an invitation was given for a meeting to be addressed by Miss Finkelstein. Although the notice was a very short one, it was soon discovered that the tent would not hold a fourth of the people that were flocking to hear our friend's address; so the large dining-hall and the hall, together with the entrance of the hotel, had to be secured, and were soon filled up with a most interesting audience. I had never before, during the whole course of my life, seen a more vivid illustration of the company of people described in the second chapter of the Acts, than I did with my own eyes last Monday night. There were 'Parthians and Medes and Elamites, dwellers in Mesopotamia;' the orthodox turbanned Moslem, the Mohammedan with his fez, the Greek Priest with his tall hat, and laymen of the same confession; the native Christians, the ancient and modern Jew; the Dragomen and interpreters from the Consulates, cavasses; some representatives of the Jewish Mission, and there would have been more, only the Bishop had also an important conference that very evening.

"Miss Finkelstein read a Psalm and gave an exposition; Mr. Shar engaged in prayer; then followed an excellent practical address, with good sound advice to exercise a spirit of unity and Christian love. I was called upon to close the service with prayer, but before I did so I moved a vote of thanks to our friend the lecturer, which was seconded by a doctor. Refreshing drink was served, and Miss Finkelstein shook hands with everybody; the people pressed forward, kissed her hand, and many of the natives kissed her. It will be long remembered by all present as one of the most interesting meetings ever witnessed."

Last week Miss Von Finkelstein returned to England en route for the United States, whither she sailed on Tuesday, to fulfil lecturing engagements there.

PARIS.—The Matin, one of the most important morning papers, published a few days ago a long and flattering article on the British and Foreign Bible Society. M. Maxime du Camp, the member of the Academy, who has published a considerable work, in ten volumes at least, about Paris, has written in the Revue des Deux Mondes a paper about our Protestant charitable institutions. There is a tendency to study to-day the philanthropic and Christian institutions, and particularly the Protestant organisation. This must be for us an encouragement to do even more in this

"There are few biographies that contain so many lessons, and withal so many warnings, as that of Jacob. In re-telling the story of Jacob's life, Mr. Meyer has done a good service; especially to young men, to whom we heartily commend the book."—Primitive Methodist World.

"The author has contrived to adapt the incidents of Jacob's life to modern times in a very entertaining manner. Mr. Meyer's style is calculated to make the Bible and its characters live in the hearts of his hearers."—Literary World.

"No one can read these pages without being edified. The author's style is clear, vigorous, and interesting; and a thoroughly evangelical tone pervades the book. He gives one piece of practical advice to ministers of the Gospel, which many of our readers will be glad to see reproduced here: 'To recruit a dwindling congregation; to sustain interest in a crowded one; to awaken new devotion to the Bible; and to touch the many chords of human life—there is nothing to be compared with a reverent re-telling of the Stories of Bible Heroes and Saints.'"
English Churchman.

"The Addresses are pithy and pointed; fervid and faithful; searching and striking; and will profitably reward repeated perusals. The volume is beautifully got up; is richly illustrated; and it costs but two shillings and sixpence. No Sunday-school library ought to be without it. It would prove a very acceptable prize or present to young people."—Oldham Chronicle.

CASE FOR THIS WEEK.

HÆMOPTYSIS AND INCIPIENT PHTHISIS.

In October, 1884, I received a letter from Mr. James Kershaw, of Birstall. His case was very threatening of Consumption—the result of severe colds unchecked by the usual means. Severe pains came on in the chest, back, and side. The cough was violent night and day—a small vessel was ruptured, causing spitting of blood. Flesh and strength had begun to fail, inducing a strong suspicion of decided disease.

In six weeks Mr. K. reports some general improvement. "I shall continue," he says, "until I feel thoroughly well."

This case had nearly passed from memory until the following letter came to me, April 19, 1887:—

"Dear Mr. Congreve,—I write to thank you for the very great benefit I have received from your medicine. I have kept it in the house ever since. I shall embrace every opportunity to recommend it to others, and as an insurance agent I have many.—James Kershaw, Nelson-street, Birstall, near Leeds."

TESTIMONY of Mr. THOMAS DUNN, POLCARNE ST. AUSTELL, CORNWALL.

Writing me March 8, 1887, for a supply of medicine, Mr. D. says:—"I am much indebted to you for your invaluable remedy. I had it for my wife some years ago. She is alive only through your medicine. You can use my name."

DRINK TRAFFIC IN INDIA.

Sir,—I believe that occasionally charges have been made in The Christian, and on platforms, that the Government of India, by its "Abkari," or excise system, encourages the sale in India of intoxicating liquors. I think that the speech of His Excellency, Lord Reay, Governor of Bombay, on the subject contained in the enclosed "newspaper cutting," from The Homeward Mail of the 18th inst. (which kindly return), puts the matter in its true light, and that, if you think it worth while, its appearance in The Christian will help to remove what appears to be an unjust, or shall I say an ignorant, though conscientious, impression as to the action of the Government of India in its practice of controlling the sale of liquor.

Yours faithfully, Justice.

> The object of the administration is (a) to check the consumption of illicit liquor, (b) to raise the price of illicit liquor, (c) to diminish the number of liquor shops—in short, to collect a maximum revenue from a minimum consumption.
> The Abkari Department cannot aspire ever to become a popular department. It does not enjoy that privilege anywhere as I know, and we might as well try to make the income-tax a popular branch of our administration. What we attempt in both cases is to apply stern justice. Land Revenue and Abkari are two natural sources from which the Indian Exchequer is replenished, and I have endeavoured on this occasion and on a previous occasion to make it plain on what lines this Government proceeds in both cases. Constant watchfulness over these sources of revenue is exercised by my hon. colleagues and myself, and complaints of any kind and from any quarter are carefully investigated. We have to meet the reproach, that we favour increased consumption, that we neglect the interests of the commerce, and also that we raise an insufficient revenue. On these various and contradictory indictments, we plead not guilty. We certainly do not wish to increase consumption, and we do not wish to drive the consumer to the adoption of illicit practices, and we are not conscious that our scale of duties is not such as the Act prescribes; conflicting interests cannot be conciliated. In the first, that they are conflicting, a guarantee exists that Government will have before it a complete record and an exhaustive case, from which no material facts have been eliminated. Our verdict is now before you, and whatever may be said of the Educational Policy or of the Abkari Policy, neither is a closed book, and in both cases Government will not relax its efforts to redress legitimate grievances.

Sir,—I read in your paper of the 17th June that at the Assembly of the established Church of Scotland, Sir James Ferguson denied the charges against the Indian Government in connection with the licensing system recently brought against it by the Rev. J. Gelson Gregson and others. The Government of India, he says, "takes precisely the same means as the Government in this country does to regulate the consumption of liquor." This day's post brought me the account, in a Bombay newspaper, of an interview between the present Governor of Bombay, Lord Reay, and a deputation of Christian missionaries, and several prominent reformers, and men of rank and eminence in the native population, both Parsees, Hindus, and Mahomedans, who all joined in deploring the increasing evil of drunkenness among the people and in expressing their apprehension that this evil might be an unforeseen result of the excise policy of Government.

From the Governor's statement, in reply to the deputation, which is reported in extenso, I cull the following expressions:—

> To those who may think the time has come to introduce the English system, I would put the question whether we have at present in this Presidency a sufficient number of competing capitalists prepared to enter upon the manufacture of spirit on the one side and the sale on the other side. I am afraid that whatever separation might be decreed in theory, in practice either the shops would gain control over the distilleries, or the distilleries over the shopkeepers; the administration is only bound to put just theories into practice for which it has a sufficient equipment. The farming system is faulty in theory, but you cannot abandon it as long as you have not the elements which are the corner stone of a different and a better fabric.

I ask you, Sir, and the readers of your paper to compare this frank utterance of the present governor, who has taken the trouble to acquaint himself with the system of excise in his Presidency, with that of the late Governor, as quoted in your paper.

The difference between the English and the Bombay system is this, that in England there are two separate classes engaged in the sale of spirituous liquor, the distillers, and the retail vendors; in Bombay the distiller of country spirits has also the monopoly of the retail sale of it. To explain this by a case in point, in the year 1884 it was my duty as the officer in charge of a district, over 6000 square miles in area, and with a population of 750,000 souls, to dispose of the farm or monopoly for both distilling and selling country spirits in it. The modus operandi was as follows:—Tenders were called for as to who would engage to sell the largest quantity of spirits within the period of his farm, the contractor binding himself to pay the still head duty to the State, whether he were able to dispose of the whole quantity which he engaged to sell, or not. The tenders were forwarded to the Commissioner of Excise, who accepted the tender of the farmer who promised to sell the most liquor and to pay the still head duty on it to the State. This tender very much exceeded that of the year before, and the farmer, who was an enterprising Parsee, soon began to ask for permission to open fresh liquor shops in villages where formerly none had existed. This permission, though not always granted, was accorded in some cases where he succeeded in making out that a demand for liquor existed, which was met before by smuggled illicit spirits.

The evil of such a system of monopoly, wherein the distiller is also the retail vendor of a whole district, is enhanced by allowing such a tender as I have described to be called for by the revenue officers of Government. Naturally the farmer does his utmost with such a stimulus as the probability that he may have to pay still head duty for a much larger quantity of spirits than he could sell, to increase the quantity of the liquor sold, both by increasing the number of his shops, and by putting temptations into people's way, to induce them to become the slaves of drink.

I have heard, for instance, of country spirits being sold in some localities by the liquor farmer's servants below cost price, until the appetite for it was created; whatever truth there may be in this report, it is a striking fact that so many experienced missionaries and of the most intelligent native reformers in Bombay have expressed their belief to the Governor of that Presidency that drunkenness in India is on the increase, and that this is in great measure due to the present system of excise. The former system did not present such a temptation to the liquor farmer to increase the spread of drinking, for, by it, the liquor farm of a district was given to the highest bidder in money, not to the one who engages, as now, to sell the greatest quantity during the year, and to pay the excise duty to Government on what he is unable to get rid of.

I see Lord Reay in his reply to the deputation says, it is the determination of Government to put into practice the principle enunciated in the Handbook for Revenue Officers published by Government, viz., that "the object Government have in view is to restrain, and, if possible, diminish the consumption of spirituous liquors." The first thing to be done in that direction is to call for some other kind of tender in future from intending liquor farmers than one relating to the quantity of spirits they are willing to dispose of within the period of their farm, which was the rule in 1884.

I enclose my card as a guarantee of the facts herein stated. Retired Civilian.

REV. JOSEPH COOK.

Dear Sir,—Might I suggest that Mr. Joseph Cook, of Boston, should be invited by influential Christian men of this country to give us a course of lectures, leaving the selection to those who understand the needs of our great Metropolis, and other large centres of activity. I feel sure that once the suggestion were made, some way would be opened up whereby we should have an opportunity of hearing one of the keenest Christian lecturers of our day. Trusting you will excuse this somewhat erratic request from one who is a constant reader of The Christian.

Yours truly, Y.M.C.A.

THE LATE REV. W. PENNEFATHER.

Dear Sir,—It was a great pleasure to many of your readers to be presented, in your last issue, with the portrait and sketch of the life of Mr. Pennefather. Many, who were not privileged to know him, but who derive untold benefit from the institutions, especially the Conference, which he instituted, join with his older friends in gratitude for your effort to keep his memory fresh and living before the Christian public.

I would counsel many who have not seen it, to procure his Biography (published by Messrs. Shaw & Co.), which has often been a stimulus and blessing to myself.—Yours truly,

Leicester. F. B. Meyer.

"WHEREIN MILLENNARIANS ARE WRONG."

Dear Sir,—In your issue of June 17 you stated that, in my little volume, under the above title, I have the "questionable advantage" of being the first to hold that the leaven in the parable represents the work of the Spirit. I suppose you are aware that the great majority of commentators—Matthew Henry, for example—hold that the leaven represents the transforming power of the Gospel. Are you sure you are correct in saying that that is not the work of the Spirit?

Again, you say that my view contradicts itself; because "the hundred and twenty" (who, I said, were the little piece of leaven that was to leaven the world) and "the work of the Spirit" are not convertible terms. True; but do you not see that the same objection applies to the parable itself, and is, therefore, a proof that Matthew Henry is right. Our Lord does not distinguish between the "meal" and the "leavening power" with which the meal is charged. He calls the meal leaven when it is charged with leavening power. So I call the hundred and twenty leaven, because they were the agency, in and by whom the Spirit was to work. If then the leavening be the Spirit's work, surely the hundred and twenty were the leaven. To say that the noun and the verb are not convertible terms, is only a grammatical truism: the idea is the same in both.

To keep the chapters short, I have not nearly exhausted the argument of the leaven. It is a most important parable; and unless you are disinclined to have it discussed in your columns I shall be happy to send you a short paper, which your Millennarian correspondents may take to pieces if they can.—I am, &c.,

Edinburgh. James Gall.

BAPTISM AND CONVERSION.

Dear Sir,—I do not think your correspondent on this subject need be at all in a difficulty as to the Church of England teaching on regeneration. As a student under our beloved late Principal Dr. Boultbee, I have, of course, also made his admirable work my study. His chapter there on Art. xxvii., according to his usual ability, gives forth no uncertain sound, and clearly shows the different views held by various schools. The whole question hangs upon the little word "rightly" in Art. xxvii. This very word implies the danger, or the possibility of some receiving the rite unworthily, as, of course, many do.

The kingdom of God consists of visible and invisible members. Those who have been baptized with water belong to the outward and visible Church, and those with the Holy Spirit to the inward or invisible. They who belong to both, have the two baptisms. "Except a man be born of water, and of the Spirit, he cannot enter into the kingdom of God." And the whole of the service of public baptism in the Prayer-book bears out this interpretation. I have no scruple in using this service at all. After the child has been baptized, the prayer is made that "he" may lead the rest of his life according to this beginning. This very sentence implies a danger of falling away, which could not take place if really regenerated according to the received meaning of the word.

The doctrine of regeneration includes the necessity for continual growth, and, therefore, of periods of revival after negligence, and of conversion in the case of wilful neglect or sin.

Or, again, let your correspondent examine the words at the commencement of the Catechism: "wherein" I was made, &c. He will carefully note that we are most particular in stating wherein and not whereby. Between these two words there is a vast difference. Whereby would mean that baptism or the water was the means of grace, whereas it is rather God's grace by his Holy Spirit which confers the gift, and that conditionally. We cannot escape the fact that baptism embraces a covenant, and a covenant must be made between two persons, so that the whole question is a conditional one.

If the grafting is a careful and prayerful one, we may and do charitably suppose that the blessing takes place. The grafting comes first, the growth after.

The responsibility really rests upon the godparents until the child is of age—then the promises are confirmed. And here the Church of England shows her wisdom in supplying another service, clearly proving that "baptismal regeneration," so called, is not conferred by water, or, as Romanists would say, by the "intention" of the priest; but that the future life of the person is required to prove whether he is a child of God or not.

For my own part, I do not for a moment believe that when our Articles were compiled, baptismal regeneration was ever implied by our forefathers, but that it is one of the sad errors attaching to the magnified office of so-called "priests." For if we consult Article ix. we see stated that "this infection of nature doth remain, yea, in them that are regenerated," i.e., baptized.

I have ventured to express my opinion, trusting that these few thoughts may, perhaps, somewhat enlighten every brother. May the Holy Spirit guide us all into all truth.—Yours faithfully,

Geo. C. Williamson, Curate.
St. James's, Holloway, N.

Sir,—Having noticed the discussion in your columns, I trust you will allow me to make an appeal to Protestant evangelical clergymen to assist the Prayer-book Revision Society in its efforts to bring about, inter alia, a revision of the Baptismal Services in our Book of Common Prayer.

Rev. J. P. Watts tells us that whilst the minister "may feel uncomfortable" when using the words of the Services referred to, and may "wish" them "altered," until that is "done, he is obliged to use" them! Mr. Watts may, as your correspondent, Mr. Martin, points out, find comfort in the reflection that such a minister has the sixth article to stand upon, which tells him that he need not believe or accept anything "which cannot be proved by the Word of God." But it must not be forgotten that a clergyman is bound to use—which, I presume, means to teach out of—the Book of Common Prayer, and "none other." I well remember The Times, when commenting upon the Boyne Hill and St. Barnabas, Pimlico, cases, remarking that evangelical combatants were in the habit, when defeated on the Prayer-book, of taking refuge in the Bible. "But," said the editor, "the manœuvre won't do." The Bible and Prayer-book either say the same thing, or they do not. If they do not, the sooner they are made to agree the better. Again, the Prayer-book itself distinctly states that revision "should" be made, if a "weighty and important consideration" can be shown. To this principle clergymen are as much "bound" as they are to the wording of the Services, &c. Again, the preface, in that part which relates to ceremonies, distinctly lays it down that if things are "abused," things harmless in themselves, they should be "put away." In other words, stumbling blocks should be removed.

John Newton could not "undertake to vindicate every expression in our Baptismal Service. Our reformers, though they did great things, only made a beginning. . . . Their authority gave sanction to several expressions and sentiments which the Scripture does not warrant, particularly with regard to baptism."

The late Archbishop Sumner is reported to have said that, in his judgment, the alteration of twenty words in the Prayer-book would attach twenty thousand Nonconformists to the Church. His "impression was that a commission selected by Her Majesty, of ten or twenty persons, clergymen and laymen, might well consider the matters requiring attention." I maintain, sir, that any alteration in the Book of Common Prayer in the direction of Scripture, must tend towards re-union with, or at least, bring us nearer to our Nonconforming fellow Christians. In the revision of 1662 many alterations were made, calculated rather to offend than to conciliate the Nonconformists. Next year will be the Bicentenary of the Protestant Settlement of 1688. When it is remembered that those who supported William of "Protestant Memory," set to work to revise the Liturgy and to make it more Protestant than it was, it seems, in my opinion, that the best way to celebrate that most auspicious event would be for all Protestant Churchmen to assist revisionists in their efforts, which have not met with the success they had a right to expect.—I am, Sir, yours faithfully,

Prayer Book Revision Soc., James Butcher.

A VINDICATION.

Dear Sir,—I have been much pained by reading the letter signed "B. E." in your issue of June 17. I have known Mrs. Wall for thirty years, and feel I must bear testimony to her Christian character, which, even when I was a little child, I felt and appreciated. My father and mother, in whose parish she has lived for many years, highly valued her Christian influence in their midst, and considered her to be the pattern of a godly and careful mother.

Mrs. Wall's overwhelming sorrow was my mother's death-blow. It came as a thunderclap upon her when very weak, and the deep sympathy she felt with her poor friend was too great a strain upon her, and she entered into everlasting rest a week ago. I am sure she would have wished me to vindicate Mrs. Wall's character.—Yours truly,

Harriet W. Donaldson-Selby.

SOUL AND SPIRIT.

We have received several replies to the query of our correspondent on this subject. "J. H. I." says that in "Facts and Theories of a Future Life," by F. W. Grant (Holness & Co.), the subject is treated in an able and exhaustive manner. "A Bible Student" distinguishes thus:—"Man has a spirit, but is a soul." "J. S. H." says:—"The spirit is the Divine spark within us, and it may be in a latent or in an active condition." Others write more or less in harmony with one or other of the two views stated below.

Man, as man, is soul and body. This is the new birth of spiritual life in the soul, and this it is which truly constitutes the Christian; the new creation, which imparts to man a new endowment, a life not possessed before by him, "the Divine nature." Consequent on this it can be said to the Christian:—"Your spirit and soul and body." Nor is this spirit an entity distinct from the soul and body—it is born in them. It is life, spiritual life, which is born in the soul of the believer while he is here on earth, and in which his body shall share in the morning of the resurrection, when it shall be born from the grave, and all the redeemed shall be 'the Church of the firstborn.'"—The Ven. Archdeacon Campbell, D.D., The Churchman, April.

Dr. Arnold (says Rev. J. B. Heard) has well expressed the nature of man, as three aspects of the one individual man. The term body expresses those appetites which we have in common with the brutes; the term soul denotes our moral and intellectual faculties, directed only towards objects of the world, and not exalted by the hope of immortality; and the term spirit takes these same faculties when directed towards God and heavenly things, and from the purity, the greatness, and the perfect goodness of Him who is their object, transformed into the same image, from glory to glory, even as by the Spirit of the Lord."

In accordance with this, Mr. Heard speaks of the body as the organ of sense-consciousness; the soul of self-consciousness; and the spirit of God-consciousness. He says that "men are born into the world with a living body and soul, but with a dormant (or deadened) spirit, and explains conversion to God as the quickening of the spirit."

We must express our agreement with the views of Dr. Arnold and Mr. Heard on this subject.

FROM DR. GRATTAN GUINNESS.

Dear Friend,—The sympathy of Christian friends at home, during the days of affliction through which we have just passed, has been very precious, and I cannot but send a line of heartfelt gratitude to all who have remembered us in their prayers. Only a few weeks ago my dear wife, full of health and strength, ascended the topmost peak of Mount Hermon, and now she has suddenly been called to pass through the deep shadows of Death's Valley. Our experience has surely been a striking commentary on the words, "In the midst of life we are in death!"

On May 16 we left Syria en route for Constantinople. The sun was shining brightly, but the day for us was to close in storm. On the 17th fever developed, and speedily assumed a most malignant form. Delirium supervened, and for several days she lay at the point of death.

My feeling during those hours of darkness cannot be described, as I watched the one to whom I had been united in marriage but two brief months before, sinking beneath my very gaze! She stood on the brink of the river and saw the glory beyond, and heard the singing. Her victory was absolute. At last the breathing, which had become almost imperceptible, ceased, and we thought for the moment that she was gone, but no! another breath, and yet another. The darkest watch of the night had well-nigh passed; already the sky had in it the faint light that told of coming day. The stars were growing dim; and one could not help remembering that 'twas just at such an hour of old that Jesus came over the sea to his storm-tossed disciples. He came to us, in that little cabin, and we knew He was there, for "there was a great calm." The crisis was passed! The pleadings of God's people had not been in vain; and as for the first time for days she slept awhile, we silently blessed the name of the Lord!

On arriving at Smyrna, she was conveyed in ambulance to the cool, commodious, and cleanly quarters of the Jewish Hospital, conducted by Dr. Prinski Scott, where she has rapidly become convalescent, and from which we hope to remove her to London viâ Marseilles, in a few weeks. Her mother and sister arrived here in safety on June 4, and in the reunion our hearts are just full.

The kindest Christian sympathy has been evinced on all sides, and opportunities for Gospel work abound.

"The Lord is good, a stronghold in the day of trouble, and He knoweth them that trust in Him." Ought we not to pray that the life thus spared, may more than ever be consecrated to, and blessed in the Master's service?

Faithfully and gratefully yours,
Smyrna, June 8. H. Grattan Guinness, Jun.

CHRIST'S SECOND COMING.

Dear Sir,—The difficulty suggested in the letter of Mr. Gall, in your last issue, "that the Father is pledged to make Christ's enemies his footstool before He rises from the Father's right hand to return to earth again," is not insuperable. The same difficulty was suggested by Dr. David Brown in his well-known volume. Rev. J. Litch, of Boston, U.S.A., criticising the words of Dr. Brown, well says: "Your whole difficulty seems to me to originate in confounding the Father's making the Son's enemies his footstool, with empowering the Son to conquer them, and the Son's putting down all rule, all authority, and power, by virtue of that authority." Scripture testimony is not contradictory. In 1 Cor. xv. 24 it is clearly stated, "When He (Christ the Son) shall have abolished all rule and all authority and power (R.V.), then the end cometh." The Son, then (i.e., at the close of the millennial age, and at the commencement of the eternal ages), delivers up the kingdom to the Father, and becomes Himself subject to the Father, thus and herein fulfilling the Divine purpose, "God sent not his Son into the world to condemn the world, but that the world through Him might be saved."

Your correspondent does not discern between the eternal throne of God, which Christ shares with the Father, and his millennial throne, which is not yet manifested on earth. I use the word throne as the symbol of his government over the whole earth, when his times as the blessed and only Potentate arrive. (1 Tim. vi. 16.) The testimony is as distinctive as it is conclusive which is given by our Lord in Rev. iii. 21: "To him that overcometh I will grant to sit with Me in my throne, even as I also overcame, and am set down with my Father in his throne." Here the Lord Jesus distinguishes between a throne (participation in government) which He already possesses in heaven, and a sovereignty which is yet future, viz., his throne on earth. This is in entire accord with his words in Luke xxii. 28: "Ye are they which have continued with Me in my temptations. And I appoint unto you a kingdom, as my Father hath appointed unto Me; that ye may eat and drink at my table in my kingdom, and sit on thrones, judging (ruling) the twelve tribes of Israel." Surely your correspondent will not affirm that the Apostles are to rule over Israel's twelve tribes in heaven.

There is no difficulty when we remember that Israel is again to be re-instated, and to occupy the chief governmental position, under our Lord Jesus Christ, over the nations of the earth. It is clearly stated that all power is given to Christ in heaven and on earth. The power on earth, however, is shown as not being taken until the sounding of the seventh or last trump (see Rev. xi. 15). Then and not before "the kingdoms of this world become the kingdoms of our Lord, and of this Christ; and He shall reign for ever and ever."

The statement that "the Father's work is purely evangelistic" is fanciful, out of accord with the facts of God's past and coming judgments. We may not so limit the Holy One of Israel. The Great Head of the Church, the faithful and true Witness, well says, concerning the millennial age, "And he that overcometh, and he that keepeth my works unto the end, to him will I give authority over the nations: and he shall rule them with a rod of iron; as the vessels of the potter are broken to shivers: as I also have received of my Father" (Rev. ii. 26, 27). Surely the Father is here seen as the God of judgment also. Henry Varley.

Mildmay Park Conference,

JUNE 22, 23, and 24, 1887.

SUBJECTS.

THE KING: HIS PERSON, HIS SERVANTS, AND HIS WORK.

(1) The Grace of the King; the Privileges and Responsibilities of the Children of the King.
(2) The Power of the King; the Privileges and Responsibilities of the Servants of the King.
(3) The Glory of the King; the Privileges and Responsibilities of the Heirs of Glory.

WEDNESDAY MORNING, JUNE 22.

IN the loveliest of June weather the Conference was opened on Wednesday morning. The attendance was not so crowded as we have seen it, but the great hall was full enough for personal comfort, considering the state of the thermometer. When the strokes of the eleventh hour had died away, Sir ARTHUR BLACKWOOD, K.C.B., rose from his place in the chair, and invited the company to a brief space of silent prayer. Then he led in the following words of opening audible petition:—

> O God, the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, we beseech Thee to fill each heart here with a sense of thy presence. Fill this place with thy glory. May Christ be magnified here to-day! May thy Holy Spirit bring the thoughts of every heart into subjection to Thyself! Let us enjoy true communion with Thee. Manifest to us thy countenance. Draw very near; and may every word, and every thought, and every deed, be acceptable in thy sight, O Lord, our Strength and our Redeemer, for thy Name's sake. Amen.

The first hymn in the Collection of original Hymns by the late Mr. Pennefather was sung, beginning:—

And may I really tread
  The palace of my King?
Gaze on the glory of his face,
  And of his beauty sing?

Since last Conference, the venerable Prebendary Wilson, Vicar of Islington, whose voice was wont to be heard for so many successive years in prayer during the opening moments of the Conference, has passed into the unseen. The Chairman expressed the pleasure with which they welcomed Mr. Wilson's successor, Rev. W. H. Barlow, and said he would fulfil the same office. Mr. Barlow led in comprehensive petition. Then, according to recent custom, a portion of Scripture was read by two sections of the company alternately, verse by verse; those on the platform and in the galleries composed one section, and the body of the audience the other. The portion read was Psalm xlv.; well suited to the topic of the Conference. The Chairman observed that Earl Cavan, one of the trustees of the hall and a signatory to the letter of invitation, was absent, being laid aside through an illness from which he could not expect to recover. It was my privilege, said Sir Arthur, a few weeks ago, to witness the abundant peace and joy with which our gracious Lord favours his servant in these circumstances. He writes this morning:—"I would express my message to the friends assembled at the Conference in the Spirit-taught prayer: 'Now unto Him that is able to do exceeding abundantly above all that we ask or think, according to the power that worketh in us, unto Him be glory in the Church by Christ Jesus throughout all ages, world without end. Amen.'" He could not send us a more encouraging or better word for the opening of our Conference.

The Chairman's Address.

May I ask you to suffer a few preliminary words of introduction? First of all, as regards the matter of the Conference. We have Divine authority, in the words we have just read together, for asserting that it is "good matter." For we are to speak and hear of "the things touching the King." What are the things that are written concerning the King? The King's grace; the King's glory; the King's majesty; the King's truth. And then marvellously coupled with majesty is the King's meekness. We have, further, the King's weapons: his right hand, his throne, his sceptre, his love of righteousness and hatred of iniquity; and lastly, the King's gladness,—gladness flowing from two sources: the gladness wherewith God anointed him, and the gladness He derives from the free and full surrender of his people. Thus we have indeed "good matter" for our Conference. May God show us its supreme excellence, as He alone is able to do.

In the next place, is it not opportune? Let me remind you of a word or two in the letter of invitation which bears upon this subject. It was there said:—

> At a time when every loyal subject of the Sovereign, whom the providence of God has permitted to reign over this empire for half a century, is sharing the nation's joy, and endeavouring in some fitting way to commemorate the Jubilee of our beloved Queen, it seems as if a special call came to those whose citizenship is in heaven to lift their thankful hearts higher than the earthly throne of these realms, to Him "by whom kings reign and princes decree justice," of the "increase" of whose "government there shall be no end," and who "shall reign for ever and ever."

And again:—

> Is it not fitting that on an occasion which probably none of us now living can see repeated, when thoughts of allegiance to the throne, of loyal affection to its royal occupant, and of our responsibility to maintain and increase her honour, fill the minds of millions upon millions of our fellow-subjects all over the globe, "the children of the kingdom," the servants of "the King eternal, immortal, invisible, the only wise God," should assemble to give unto Him "the glory due unto his name," to renew their vows of fealty, and to learn what He would have them to do for the extension of his all-glorious away?

I think no further words are necessary to remind you of the opportuneness of our subject. I know there has been a difficulty, and no doubt it has occasioned some inconvenience—the time of our gathering. Other arrangements were thought of, but it was considered advisable that the usual time of our gathering should not be departed from. And if, perhaps, it has prevented some from attending, it may, on the other hand, have brought some who would otherwise have been unable to come. At any rate, from what I have already said, we all feel that the connection of the two subjects of these special days, is one which ought to lift up our hearts, and be productive of good.

Then as to the manner in which the subject will be presented to us. It concerns the person of the King. It is not for theoretical discussion, but for practical instruction. Some may perhaps have thought — indeed, some objections of the sort were made to the arrangement of the passages of Scripture—that there has not been a very precise regard paid to those differences of administration in the kingdom which are indicated in the Word of God; that the different phases of the development of the kingdom of God are not very minutely observed. I may say this was done advisedly. We are not met at this time to discuss prophetic details, but to consider the person of the King, his glory, his character, and his work. No doubt there are different phases in God's economy of the development of his kingdom. There is the mediatorial kingdom; there will be the millennial kingdom; and there will be the eternal kingdom. Different views may be taken concerning certain points with regard to these phases; but we do not want to discuss them now, important as they are in their place, and right as we are in considering them. We want above all to deal with the King Himself. His kingdom is one, whether it be mediatorial, millennial, or eternal. We are in the kingdom of God. The Gospel is "the Gospel of the kingdom of God." Whether He reign in absence spiritually, or in presence visibly, our duties, our allegiance, our responsibility are the same, though our enjoyments may be, and will be, indeed very different. But our subjectis the King, and our privileges and responsibilities to Him now.

Another word, as to the method of the treatment of the subject. You will notice that the arrangement is this, that at each of our meetings both sides of the subject will be dealt with. The first speaker will deal with the things touching the King; the second with the privileges and responsibilities of the children, the subjects, or the servants of the King. Thus it will be seen that each of the larger meetings will have the whole subject, so far as possible, brough before it. Our object then is to see the King, to hear the King, and to yield ourselves willing subjects and servants to the King. Many things might engage and distract our attention; let us be looking unto Him. I could not help thinking yesterday (Jubilee Day), as one witnessed some parts of the great manifestation of enthusiastic loyalty to our Queen, and as the various parts of the pageant or procession passed before one: What it would have been if by some accident the Queen herself had been absent—if at the last moment something had prevented her presence? Would the presence of the princes and princesses, the military, or all the magnificent features of the scene, grand as they were, have for one moment satisfied a single heart, if the Queen had been absent? The whole thing would have been an empty show. Is it not so now? We may hear instructive addresses, as I trust we shall; we may meet loving Christian hearts and hold sweet fellowship and counsel with them; we may consider the King's work in many aspects at the smaller gatherings; but if we lose sight of the King's presence what will it all avail? There is a danger. Satan would gladly lead us away from Christ to Christians; from Christ's person to Christ's work, whether his own finished work, or the work He now permits us to carry on in his name and for Him. If the enemy can divert our thoughts to any other object, however lawful and right at certain times and seasons, from that Glorious One who is with us to-day, seeking to manifest Himself to each heart, how much his object will be gained, and what irreparable damage he will have inflicted upon us. It is the work of the gracious Spirit to take of the things touching the King and show them to us; and it will be our earnest prayer, I know, that through this Conference, that which was true of old concerning the disciples, will be true concerning us here, "They saw no man, save Jesus only."

In the beautiful, Scriptural, and touching supplications that were offered by the nation yesterday, there was one particular prayer which I feel truly applicable to our condition. It was the prayer that our Queen might continue to reign over an united kingdom, and that we might lay seriously to heart our unhappy divisions. That had a national reference; but is it not true concerning the Church of God? How rent asunder, how divided! Is it an united kingdom He reigns over? How little has the prayer yet been answered, "That they may be one." How little have we learnt "to dwell together in unity." How disunited we are. And yet it may be different. God can make us all to be of one mind in this house: yea, in his whole house. What will gladden Him more than to see his people one, with one mouth confessing Him and serving Him? It will be true one day. It will be true now that in proportion as we draw nearer to the centre, the person of the King, we shall draw nearer to one another; our differences will seem but small, and we shall be united in holy, loyal allegiance to the King of kings and Lord of lords. God grant that this may be realised in great measure at our Conference this year, and thus bring great glory to Him, and blessing to the Church militant here on earth!

The Grace of the King.

REV. MARCUS RAINSFORD.

Beloved friends, the person of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ is the mystery of grace. As we have been singing—

> In Him humanity
> Is one with Deity.

It would seem that the purpose and thought of the God of all love and of all grace has been, from all eternity, to unite his creatures to Himself, that He might be Himself the fountain of their life and their happiness. And this has been accomplished in our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ. You remember his own wondrous words, "I in them and thou in Me, and they in us." When our dear Lord appeared in our nature, the bosom of Almighty God was opened for our perusal. There is a passage in the end of 1 Cor. iii. which sets forth three wondrous manifestations of grace and love; and the least of them is unspeakable. You are all familiar with it:—"All things are yours; and ye are Christ's; and Christ is God's." I take it, brethren, that that last sentence is the greatest revealed truth on record—"Christ is God's." Oh, the depths there are in it! Then follows "Ye are Christ's"; and then follows as a matter of course, "all things are yours."

It is written that it pleased Jehovah (for "the Father" is not in the original)—it pleased Jehovah, Father, Son, and Holy Ghost, that in the Lord Jesus Christ our King should all fulness dwell. Mark it: all fulness—all Divine fulness; all creature fulness; all salvation fulness. You remember the marvellous description of the Spirit of God, by the Apostle Paul, in Col. i., as to the fulness of the Person of our King. There we read that He is "the image of the invisible God." There are images and images. But He is "the brightness of the Father's glory and the express image of his person.' He is the fore-ordained God-man, the firstborn of every creature. "By Him were all things created that are in heaven and in earth, visible and invisible, whether they be thrones, or dominions, or principalities, or powers; all things were created by Him and for Him. And He is (not was) before all things, and by Him all things consist."

Then you have his fulness as our Saviour. He is Head of the Church. Oh, how many crowns are upon that head! "He is Head of the Church, which is his body." What a near, what a tender, what an inseparable relation! And you read elsewhere, "He is Head over all things to the Church, which is his body, the fulness of Him that filleth all in all." "Who is (the Apostle goes on to say) the beginning, the firstborn from the dead." He was among the dead, but he rifled the tomb, emptied the grave, and conquered death. He spoiled the principalities and powers of darkness, making a show of them openly; and he now claims, upon the throne of God, by a double title, to be our King.

Then having made peace (what a satisfying peace it must be to God; oh, that it may be equally satisfying to us) by the blood of his Cross, it pleased God to reconcile all things to Himself, things in earth and things in heaven; and you, poor sinner, who believe upon Him, and have taken Him from the hand of God as God's gift to you—reconciled in the body of his flesh through death, that He may present you holy, unblameable, and unreprovable in his sight. This is our King; and this is the fulness of the person of our King.

In Ephesians iii. 19 we are taught what the fulness of God is. The fulness of God is love, and Christ is the manifestation of that love. In John i. 16 we see what the fulness of Jesus Christ is—grace. Think of the God we have to deal with; his name is Love; his fulness is love. Think of the King we have; his name is Jesus, and his fulness is grace. "All the fulness of the Godhead bodily" dwells in Him, and flows forth to the sons and daughters of men, in grace. Then we have this wonderful expression, "Of his fulness have all we received, and grace for grace." There are three thoughts in this, at least. One is abundance of grace—grace upon the top of grace; grace overflowing grace. "Where sin abounded, grace much more abounded. "Then there is the thought of the universality of it—all sorts of grace, all measures of grace all degrees of grace, laid upon the Lord Jesus Christ, to be received by the empty vessels that He has created for his glory. There is another thought, and what seems to me the principal one, so far as I understand the passage—grace corresponding to every grace in the King. Why is grace laid upon Jesus Christ? Does He want it for Himself? Nay. All that grace laid up in Him is to be communicated to the members of his mystical Body—grace for grace. Take grace for love. The Father loves the Son, and loves his people in Him. Take grace for life. We have our eternal life in Jesus. "When Christ who is our life shall appear, then shall we also appear with Him in glory." Take grace for election. Christ is the Father's elect One, and his people are all elect in Him and with Him. Take grace for heirship. Christ is Heir of all things; his people are heirs of God, and joint heirs with Jesus Christ. Take grace for unction. The anointing oil upon the head of Jesus goes down, down, down—even to the skirts of his raiment.

Take grace for light. Jesus is the light of heaven: they need no candle there, for He is the light thereof. His people are illuminated with his light. "Ye are the light of the world." Take grace for fellowship. Truly our fellowship is with the Father, and with his Son Jesus Christ. Take grace for promises. All the promises of God are in Him yea and amen. Take grace for union. "I in them, and Thou in Me, that they may be made perfect in one, and that the world may know that Thou hast loved them as Thou hast loved Me." Take grace for glory. When He comes by and by it will be to be "admired in his saints, and glorified in all them that believe."

All the offices of our King are offices of grace. What is his prophetic office? Teaching grace. What is his priestly office? Atoning grace. What is his kingly office? Soul-conquering grace. What is his Shepherd office? Carrying grace; tending grace; feeding grace; patient grace; long-suffering grace; watchful grace. What is his office as Surety? Debt-paying grace. His office as Mediator? Interceding grace. There is divinity in it, for He is God; there is humanity in it, for He is man. All his gifts are gifts of grace. Have you marked the little word "My" connected with the gifts of grace? "My life"; He laid it down that He might give it to us. "My peace I leave with you." "These things have I spoken unto you, that my joy might remain in you, and your joy might be full." Are you tempted, troubled, tossed about, and worried? "My grace is sufficient for you." Weak one! My strength is made perfect in thy weakness. My rest: "Come unto Me, all ye that are weary and heavy laden, and I will give you rest." My glory: "The glory that Thou gavest Me," saith He to his Father, "I have given them; that they be one as We are one." Have you ever thought that glory is just the qualification for union with God?

Now I come to a wonderful truth. All the attributes of Christ are attributes of grace. All the attributes of God are turned into attributes of grace, through the finished work of the Lord Jesus Christ. Do you remember that glorious verse at the end of Romans v.? Grace reigns through "righteousness unto eternal life, by Jesus Christ our Lord." So, brethren, grace is God's darling attribute. And grace is sovereign. "He will have mercy on whom He will have mercy." He will be gracious to whom He will be gracious. None of the other attributes of God are sovereign: they must be; they are necessary attributes. He cannot say, "I will be just to whom I will be just." He must be just. He cannot say, "I will be true to whom I will be true." He must be true. Or, "I will be holy to whom I will be holy." He must be holy. So, in order that grace might reign Christ came down, took our nature, fulfilled all righteousness, satisfied the demands of justice, holiness and truth. Now Incarnate Grace sits upon the throne of God, King of Grace as well as King of Glory, and bids us come boldly to that throne, to obtain mercy and find grace to help in the time of need.

Do you remember, how, when God had communicated to Moses that, notwithstanding Israel's wanderings and waywardness, He would not leave them, Moses said, "Show me thy glory." And the Lord said to Moses, "I will make all my goodness to pass before thee." He put Moses in the cleft of the rock, and proclaimed Himself to be "The Lord merciful and gracious, long-suffering, abundant in goodness and truth; and that will by no means clear the guilty." Jesus came down from heaven to settle that question of guilt. His own self bare our sins in his own body on the tree, and brought in an everlasting righteousness. And now He is able (it is not physical ability, but moral ability) to make all grace abound toward us, without any disparagement of his justice, or denial of his truth. To the poor hell-deserving sinner He makes all pardoning, accepting grace to abound. To the believer He makes all grace—all sorts of grace—to abound, "that he always, having all-sufficiency in all things, might abound unto every good work." This is a tempting theme. Our King is our Peace: that settles the question of the past. He is our Life: that secures us for the present. He is our Hope: that assures us for the future. When Paul would magnify Christ he says:—"By grace are ye saved, through faith." We are accepted in the Beloved to the praise and the glory of God's grace. We are forgiven and redeemed according to the riches of God's grace, in his kindness toward us through Christ Jesus, "that in the ages to come He might show forth the exceeding riches of his grace."

Now listen to the Commands of grace: "Receive not the grace of God in vain." "Come boldly to the throne of grace." "Be strong in the grace that is in Christ Jesus"—not the grace that is in you. Stand in grace — justified by faith, we have peace with God and access with confidence, and stand in the grace of our Lord Jesus Christ. Then may God give us grace to apprehend and enjoy it. "Grow in grace." We are pigmies in this matter. Our faith is no faith at all. We are very dwarfs, while all the immensity and fulness of Jesus Christ lie before us; when we might sing, and triumph, and boast, and have an abundant entrance into the kingdom of glory. You remember, in Rev. xxii., where He showed us the beautiful city, by his servant—the streets of gold and the walls of jasper. Imagine how the soul of the beloved Apostle would long for an entrance; and do not our souls long for an entrance, that we may behold its beauties, and listen to its songs, and share in its glories? You remember the last verse in the Bible, given to support and sustain us, until the golden gates open, and the welcome sound is heard,

> Come in, come in,
> Eternal glory thou shalt win—

"The grace of our Lord Jesus Christ be with your spirit." That is the supply for the meantime. God grant that the King, in his fulness, may supply his grace to all of us to-day, for his name's sake.

REQUESTS FOR PRAISE AND PRAYER.

At this stage of the meeting a number of requests were read out by Mr. J. E. Mathieson, and afterwards presented in audible prayer by Rev. D. B. Hankin. Among them were the following:—

PRAISE.—For a more general disposition among Jews to hear the Gospel and to read the Hebrew New Testament, several thousand copies of which lately had been sent by post to Rabbis all over Europe. PRAYER.—That the Church of Christ may be awakened to a sense of her responsibility towards the Jew.——Miss Daniell asked prayer for work among soldiers this summer.——For work at Soldiers' and Sailors' Homes.——For guidance as to special services for children at seaside places throughout the summer.——For blessing on the work of Miss Whately at Cairo.——For Morocco.——For the Dera-Ghazi-Khan Mission in Beloochistan; that a lady doctor and a much needed hospital may be provided.——For children of God led astray by an appearance of special spirituality, or by claims of gifts implying marked favour of God; that He would recover such out of the snare of the devil, and disappoint the teachers of error who creep into houses and lead captive silly women; also that in his mercy He would bring these false teachers to repentance and a knowledge of the truth.

Privileges of the King's Children.

REV. H. LINDSAY YOUNG, Portsea.

Turn with me for a moment to Rom. viii. 17:—

> If children, then heirs; heirs of God, and joint heirs with Christ; if so be that we suffer with Him, that we may be also glorified with Him.

The Apostle seems to lay great stress on that little word "if"—"If children, then heirs." And that little word is, as it were, God's real barrier, which shuts in his own children into the enjoyment of the spiritual Canaan, flowing with the milk and honey of God's eternal privileges. It is also as much a real barrier to shut out the world that still rejects the gift of God's Son. There may be some timid soul here who asks the question, "How may I know that I am a child of God?" That question is answered here:—"As many as are led by the Spirit of God they are the sons of God. How does the Spirit of God lead? I take it that the first work of the Spirit of God is to cut a man down, and leave him neither root nor branch; then to lead him, in a humble, broken frame of mind, to behold the Lamb of God, which taketh away the sin of the world. Then, by Christ's stripes, that soul is healed. "As many as received Him (Jesus), to them gave He the right to become the sons of God."

When we speak about God's children we are sometimes apt to take too meagre a view of the glorious doctrine of Adoption. I think the Word of God teaches us that the child of God is not merely called a child of God, but that he is born a child of God. If you look at Eph. i. you will find there a verse which teaches that this is the full meaning of the doctrine: "Having predestinated us unto the adoption of children by Jesus Christ to Himself." Dean Alford translates it thus: "Having predestinated us unto the adoption of children by Jesus Christ into Himself." Our brother (Mr. Rainsford) has told us that God in Christ opened up his bosom of love for our perusal. I take it that this text teaches us God goes further than that, for here He opens up the bosom of his love for our reception, and thus the child of God is taken into Himself, and becomes a child, not merely by name, but by being born into the very family of God. Does not John i. 13 teach us this? "Which were born, not of blood, nor of the will of the flesh, nor of the will of man, but of God."

All the privileges which belong to God's children are, of course, family privileges, and they may be divided into two classes: (1) those in connection with Sonship, and (2) those in connection with Heirship. It is a very wide subject, but I think we may sum up the privileges of the children of God under four heads—Confidence, Conformity, Chastening, and Care. The first privilege we are introduced to here is Confidence. "Ye have not received the spirit of bondage again to fear, but have received the spirit of adoption, whereby we cry, Abba Father." These words simply express the language of true confidence. God has planted within the heart of his children that confiding and loving spirit whereby we can draw near to our Father in heaven, and cry "Abba Father!" What a contrast is this to the former part of our experience—the old spirit of bondage, which, as it were, paralysed our souls, kept us in a state of misery, and filled us with all sorts of misgivings and forebodings about the future. That has now taken to itself wings, and fled away; instead of it there steals into the soul, implanted there by the Spirit of God, that filial, confiding spirit, whereby we can look God in the face with the most perfect confidence, and cry continually, "Abba Father." This privilege teaches us to walk in the presence of our Father; to live in his presence without restraint and reserve, but in the most perfect child-like confidence.

Let us be practical. Is it a matter of fact that we avail ourselves of this privilege? Do we confide in our Father the smallest trifles of daily life? Do we tell Him the little frictions of daily experience, the petty cares and worries, the vexations of spirit, as well as the big heavy storm-clouds of severe trials? If we do not, are we not coming far short of the privileges which He has conferred upon us? You who are parents know that your children cannot give you greater pleasure than by honouring you with their confidence. And can we delight our Father in heaven more than by honouring Him with our confidence continually? Sometimes we are apt to think that the small things of this life are too insignificant for God to be concerned about. Listen to what Christ says: "A sparrow shall not fall on the ground"—a little worthless sparrow—"without your Father." If he knows about the sparrow that flutters in the country lane, and if its fall has been determined and willed by Him, should we not say, "There is nothing in our lives too small, about which to confide in Him, and trust to his loving care."

But it is a mutual privilege. God comes and takes up the position of confiding in us. Recollect what the Psalmist says: "The secret of the Lord is with them that fear Him, and He will show them his covenant." In proportion as we confide in Him will He confide in us, and show us more of his bosom of love, and more of his purposes of love, that we may grow in grace and in the knowledge of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ.

Look now briefly at another privilege—Conformity. "Whom He did foreknow, He also did predestinate to be conformed to the image of his Son." This is the purpose of God and the privilege of every child of God. The Lord Jesus Christ is brought before us as the brightness of the Father's glory, and the express image of his person. He is held up before us as he model to which all his people are predestinated to be conformed. I take it that Christ came to this world and became incarnate, not merely to undo our death, to deliver us from eternal condemnation, to leave us an example that we might follow in his steps; but that He might be the perfect man to be reproduced in each one of his believing people. What said Paul? "My little children, of whom I travail in birth till Christ be formed in you." Can that be anything short of the reproduction of Christ in the hearts and lives of his people? Is it going beyond the teaching of Holy Scripture to say that it is the work of the Spirit of God to make Christ incarnate as it were in the hearts of his believing people, that He may reproduce his life again in us, and make us Christ-like in the fullest sense of the word? Some of us recollect that remarkable sentence written by Professor Godet upon this subject. He says:—

> What is the work of the Spirit of God? It is to impart Christ to us, with everything that is his, so as to make Him live again in us, as the grain of wheat which lies dead in the earth is made by the power of nature to live again in each of the grains in the ear.

Is not that a full commentary upon the words of the Apostle, "Till Christ be formed in you"? I take it that the very moment the Spirit of God flashes the light into the soul, at conversion, there is the perfect image of Christ put there, just as much as when the babe is born, that child is a perfect man or woman. The work of the Spirit of God is to develop the Divine image in the soul, and in proportion to our conformity to Christ, we are made like to the Father.

There may be some here who are amateur photographers, and will understand this illustration. We take the sensitive plate, uncap the lens, and expose it to the object we wish to photograph. The flash of light produces the image perfect in every part, but when you take out the plate you can see nothing. Still there is an invisible latent image there, perfect, as I say, in all its parts. You pour upon it what is called a developing solution. Then, first of all, there is a very blurred and indistinct image, but one after another the details come out, and at last there is the perfect image portrayed on the plate. But there is one more process. There is poured upon it what is called the fixing solution; then it is fixed and stamped so that it will not fade before the action of the light. So, it seems to me, we receive the image of Christ at conversion. The work of the Spirit is to bring out the details day by day. Then at the resurrection the likeness is fixed with the fixing solution. "When He shall appear we shall be like Him, for we shall see Him as He is."

Another privilege of the child of God is Chastening. You all know the passage in the Epistle to the Hebrews, "Whom the Lord loveth He chasteneth." We are there told that the great test whether we are legitimate or illegitimate children is our endurance of chastening. This is our privilege, and it is to teach us to sit loose to the world, and look more at the image of Jesus; to turn us away from earthly objects, that we may set our affection upon things above. It is not pleasant to the flesh to go through chastening, but "afterward it yieldeth the peaceable fruit of righteousness to them that are exercised thereby." "Our light affliction, which is but for a moment, worketh for us a far more exceeding and eternal weight of glory."

Another point on which I can only touch is Care. It is a wonderful thought—some person has mentioned it—that the only Being in the world who is never free from care is God; because He has upon Him the care of all his children, and He accepts the responsibility. Just look at the care that God bestows upon the children of the King. First of all, He feeds them. What with? "Except ye eat the flesh of the Son of Man and drink his blood, there is no life in you." In 1 Cor. xv., we read that "all flesh is not the same flesh; there is one flesh of men, another of fishes, another of beasts, and another of birds." The flesh denotes the nature of the creature that possesses it. The flesh of the Son of Man denotes the nature of Christ. Unless you spiritually assimilate and digest, as it were, the very nature of Christ, there is no real life in you. "And drink his blood." Then the blood is the life, and is the emblem employed to represent the life of Christ. Unless, therefore, we are feasting upon Christ, and imbibing his nature and assimilating it, there is no proof that we have any real life of Jesus at all. Besides feeding, God clothes his people. In Isa. lxi. 10 we read:—"He hath clothed me with the garments of salvation; He hath covered me with the robe of righteousness." He not only clothes but protects them. "Thou hast covered my head in the day of battle." We are exhorted to put on the Lord Jesus Christ, for He is Himself a complete armour of his people. Then He puts them to sleep. "If we believe that Jesus died and rose again, even so them also which sleep in Jesus will God bring with Him." The best translation is:—"If we believe that Jesus died and rose again, even so them also which have been laid to sleep by Jesus will God bring with Him." There are no second causes in the matter of death, but the bodies of our dear ones have been touched with the hand of Jesus, and laid to sleep till the morning.

Lastly, those whom He has laid to sleep He will awake in the morning. Thus He wakes them up after the long sleep of death, and presents to the Father those who are glorified together with Him.

O base, ungrateful thought,
To call the grave the last long home of man!
'Tis but a lodging, held from week to week,
Till Christ shall come.

We might have dwelt upon the responsibilities of the children of the King, but the time has gone and no doubt they will be referred to to-night. One word in conclusion. We who listen to these truths—can we be identified as the children of the King? As we move in and out of our offices, or amongst our companions in life, can we be really identified as the King's children? Can it be said of each one of us that we resemble the King? God grant it may be so. Then we shall rise from the contemplation of our privileges to translate them into habits of daily life, and we shall become responsible to glorify the King.

WEDNESDAY EVENING.

The Kingship of Christ.

REV. EDGAR N. THWAITES, Salisbury.

In Numbers xxiii. 21 these words are written:

> He hath not beheld iniquity in Jacob, neither hath he seen perverseness in Israel: the Lord his God is with him, and the shout of a king is among them.

Yesterday in the streets of London there was a shout of a Sovereign in the midst of the great population of London. One of the most interesting parts of the pageant was this, that the bodyguard of our beloved Queen was the members of her own family. Is it not somewhat the same at Mildmay on this occasion—that the members of the family of the King are gathered to give honour to the King? While everyone of us has a heart beating in loyalty to our beloved Sovereign Lady the Queen, I hope we have a heart beating truer still in loyalty to the King of kings.

Yesterday, while eyes were fixed upon a great deal of the beauty that was to be seen, there was one person upon whom everybody fixed their eyes, and that was the Sovereign. What can we do better this evening at Mildmay than get our eyes, by the Spirit's power, fixed upon our King? Therefore, I shall ask you to notice, first of all, that our Lord Jesus Christ is King. In five ways He is King. First, He is King by inheritance, just as the Prince of Wales, if nothing unforeseen occurs, will, by his very birth, be the king of this great country. We trust the day may yet be far distant; but at the same time he is by inheritance the king of this country. In regard to the Lord Jesus Christ, God said, "This is my beloved Son." Thus we have it in Heb. i. 4, "He hath by inheritance obtained a more excellent name than they" (angels). But there is one great difference. The Prince of Wales is only the Heir Presumptive to the Throne. Our blessed Lord is Absolute Heir, and no accident can make Him fail of the kingdom which is to be his for ever. The kings of the earth may set themselves, and the rulers may take counsel, against the Lord and his anointed, yet God says, "I have set my King upon my holy hill of Zion."

Secondly, the Lord Jesus Christ is King by choice. You know that the President of the United States is elected by the vote of the people. The Chief Magistrate of the Republic of France is elected by the will of the people. Christ is not only a King by inheritance, but he has been chosen. Not chosen by the will of the people; for the people said, "We will not have Him to reign over us." But in Ps. lxxxix. 19, God says, "I have exalted one chosen out of the people," so that the Lord Jesus comes before us in the double character of the King. The man who is living in rebellion against Jesus as King is, therefore, committing a double and most awful sin.

Again, the Lord Jesus Christ is King by his anointing. You remember that Samuel anointed Saul to be king; and nearly fifty years ago, upon the coronation of Queen Victoria, the Archbishop of Canterbury of that time anointed the Queen with oil—oil upon her head and oil upon the palms of her hands—and she was anointed the sovereign of this country. Every king of this country has been anointed from time immemorial with oil, but they have been anointed by the hand of another. In regard to the Lord Jesus Christ He stands upon a pedestal quite alone. He is the unique King, for it says (Psalm xlv. 7), "God, thy God, hath anointed thee by the oil of gladness above thy fellows." The only one ever anointed by God is the Blessed Jesus.

The Lord Jesus Christ is King because He has his ambassadors. Our Sovereign sends her ambassadors to all the Courts of Europe. There are representatives of our King as ambassadors to-day who are representing Him in India, in China, in Africa, in North-West America, and in the islands of the sea. But who are the ambassadors; who are the men that are called to this great and high calling? St. Paul says (2 Cor. v. 20): "We are ambassadors for Christ; as though God did beseech by us, we pray in Christ's stead, Be ye reconciled to God." I am speaking in this hall to-night to a body of believers; but I am also speaking to a body of ambassadors. Are you obeying your King's command? The command has not yet become old, and passed away, which our Lord gave to his ambassadors between 1800 and 1900 years ago, "Go ye into all the world, and preach the Gospel to every creature." I am earnestly praying, as many of us are, that one of the results of these three days' Conference will be that some ambassadors who have been slothful in their business will be stirred up to go and make known the name of the Lord Jesus in the regions beyond.

Let me, before passing to the second head, bring one more thought to your notice—that the Lord Jesus Christ is the King by the kiss of allegiance. There used to be an old custom in this country, that the sovereigns upon the day that they were crowned received in Westminster Abbey six hundred kisses from the lords spiritual and temporal, of this kingdom, upon the left cheek. Our beloved young Queen, however, dispensed with that; but she received a large number of kisses upon the hand. Princes of the royal blood kissed first, then the nobility of this country gave the kiss of allegiance to their sovereign. Is there not to be with us the kiss of allegiance?—the kiss that says we are no longer the servants of the world, no longer the servants of sin, no longer the servants of our own desires. Let us rather say, "Lord Jesus, I give Thee the kiss of allegiance, and henceforth Thou shalt reign and rule in my heart."

Notice, now, the grace of the King. The subject is so large that I hardly know how to begin, and one scarcely knows how to finish. But I asked God to guide me, and perhaps He has led my thoughts to three or four points because He has had some message for one of his children here to-night.

The grace of the King comes out, first of all, in his humiliation. I think of the Lord Jesus crowned with glory from all eternity; but when I want to see the grace of the King, it is not in all the splendour of his heavenly court, but it is in his birth and in his lowly life. If we want to see the grace of the King in all its fulness, its brightness, and its glory, we see it best as we go to Calvary. At the Cross the grace of the King is written in the very clearest letters, so that, written above those words in Greek and Latin and Hebrew, "This is the King of the Jews," we see, "Here is the Grace of the King." If we want to put in one short sentence the whole of the work of Jesus upon Calvary, I say it is "The grace of the King." See the King, crowned with thorns, until the blood trickles down his brow; the purple robe hangs from his shoulders; the reed is grasped by his right hand; and we hear the words, "Behold the man!" But we say, "Behold the King of Grace." There is blood from his brow; blood from his back, which has been given to the smiters; blood from his face, where the hair has been plucked from his cheeks. I look at the great King of Grace and I hear a shout that rends the air. It is no shout of indignation from men and women whose blood is boiling with anger at the treatment of their King; it is no shout of suffering from the lips of the King Himself; it is the cry of the cruel and angry mob who said, "Crucify Him!" "Crucify Him!" Pilate says, "Behold your King;" and upon the cross was written—surely it was not Pilate's own suggestion, surely it was not the suggestion of any counsellors; it was the Holy Ghost wrote the words, "Jesus of Nazareth, the King." The men and women in those days would not have Him, but we claim Him as our King. What is this? He is purchasing to Himself a universal Church. He is here saving you and me from going down to the pit. He is paying our debt, which, if left unpaid, would have consigned us to eternal punishment. He went into the battle, and his poor body is blood-stained. Behold your King of Grace! "Ye know the grace of our Lord Jesus Christ, who though He was rich, yet for your sakes He became poor, that ye through his poverty might be rich." Like Mordecai the Jew, who in seeking the welfare of his people rent his clothes and put on sackcloth, the Lord Jesus Christ put on the sackcloth of humanity, because He was the King of Grace, in securing the welfare of his people.

Notice, secondly, the grace of the King in his saving power. In 2 Sam. xix. 9 you get two thoughts in regard to the King. The tribes of Israel said: "The king saved us out of the hand of our enemies, and he delivered us out of the hand of the Philistines." He delivered the children of Israel from their general foes and from their special enemy. The Lord Jesus saves his people in two ways—He saves us from the condemnation of sin, and, if we trust Him, He saves us from the power of sin, too. He saves us, not only from our enemies, but also out of the hand of the Philistines—and the Philistines are not dead yet. I sometimes look at my own salvation, and at my own conversion. Before I was converted to God I was a poor prisoner in Satan's power; I was a slave working the devil's work; the chains of sin, the manacles of iniquity, and the bonds of death, were strong upon me. But how did I become converted to God? If you look at Ps. cv. 20 you will read: "The king sent and loosed him; even the ruler of the people; and let him go free." And if you want to know how I got rid of the devil's power, it was the King who sent and loosed me, and the Ruler of the people let me go free.

Now, let me take you to the third thought, the grace of the King in his speech. We are told in Dan. i. 19, that the king communed with Daniel, Shadrach, Meshach, and Abednego. Some of us know what a blessed thing it is—the communing of the King with his people. In Ps. xlv. 2 it is said in the Revised Version, "Grace is poured upon thy lips." And what is this? It is like honey poured only that it may drop. The grace was poured upon his lips only that it might drop. And did not it drop? It dropped so wonderfully that even people who had no love for Jesus were compelled to say, "Never man spake like this man." You will see what this was for, in Isa. lxi. 1. Grace was poured into his lips "to preach good tidings unto the meek;" and we are told in St. Mark's Gospel that "all wondered at the gracious words which proceeded from his lips." Grace, we are told in Isa. l. 4, was poured that He might know "how to speak a word in season to him that is weary." I have sometimes come up to Mildmay very weary and faint, but I have gone back refreshed and able to do my work more efficiently. Is there a weary one here to-night? The Lord Jesus had grace poured upon his lips that He might know how to speak to the one who is weary. Is there one who has been fighting with some besetting sin? You have made your resolve, you have made a pledge, you have joined a guild, and yet you have been overcome. Now grace was poured upon his lips that He might speak a word and say—what? "Come unto Me, and I will give you rest." Is there one here who is weary of temptation? You hardly know what to do; for when you have knocked down by God's grace one temptation, another that, and you are almost overcome. The Lord Jesus says, "Poor tempted one, come to Me and I will give you rest." Is there a poor soldier here who has been battling for the Lord and has got the sweat upon his brow—a Sunday-school teacher, or some missionary whose battle is so hard that you are almost ready to throw down the sword and give it up in despair. Listen to the words of your King: "Come unto me, and I will give you rest." To-day is the day for the fight; to-morrow may be the day for complete and perfect rest in the presence of the King. Is there one here who is weary in body, in mind or in soul? Listen to the gracious words that proceed from his lips. He says, "Come, and I will give you rest."

The grace of the King is displayed to unbelievers. Is there any unconverted man or woman here to-night? The King is full of grace. It is only by his grace that you are not lost; it is his grace that brings you into this place to-night. If you are ready to trust Him, He is ready to take you as one of his servants to-night. To his saints it is all grace—grace in loving, choosing, calling, saving, keeping, and by and by glorifying. By God's mercy I have been one of his servants for a great many years, and the older I get, the more I am bound to say it is all grace.

My word to you in closing is this:—In 2 Sam. xiv. 28 we read that "Absalom dwelt two full years in Jerusalem, and he saw not the king's face." I cannot help thinking that I am talking to some here to-night who have never seen the King's face. You have been dwelling in Zion for years, and you have never seen the King. You have seen the Lord Jesus as your Saviour—blessed be God for that, that is something; you have seen the Lord Jesus as your Advocate—thank God for that; you have seen the Lord Jesus as your friend—thank God for that; but you have not seen Him as your King, a King to reign over every action, every thought, over your family, over your money, over everything — to reign over you, to guide you, to guard you—Jesus to be your King. In the same chapter (2 Sam. xiv.) we find "Absalom said, Let me see the king's face." Is there anybody here to-night who says to Jesus Christ, "Oh, King, show me thy face; I shall be satisfied when I awake in thy likeness"—only to see the King. There is a very remarkable verse in 1 Pet. iii. 15 (R.V.) It says there, "Sanctify in your hearts Christ as Lord." "Sanctify," or set apart. Everyone of us, as believers, have got Christ; but in that verse it says, "Set apart in your hearts Christ as King." What we want to-night is to let the Lord Jesus Christ be King. I wonder how many there are here to-night who are ready to say, "Oh, Lord Jesus, from to-night my body, my soul, my all is yielded to thee." If the Lord Jesus Christ is King you will say, "Behold, thy servants are ready to do whatsoever my Lord the King shall appoint" (2 Sam. xv. 15). A great many of us Christians are picking and choosing the work to which we call ourselves: God very often calls his people to do some disagreeable work. Thank God when we can do the work without being patted on the back. Paul got on very well without a newspaper to praise him. I sometimes wish that some of these newspapers would not praise Christians. We want the praise of the Lord, and not of man. A pat on the back hurts a man a great deal more than a blow in the face. Let us learn that what we want is just to say, "I am ready to do whatever came to Solomon, she came prepared to give him something. When she had seen the King, and heard his wisdom, and seen his servants, she gave the king 120 talents of gold, spices, and precious stones; she came prepared to give. I wonder how many in this hall have come prepared to give. How many are ready to say, "Lord, I am ready now; I have come into the hall to-night prepared to give my heart, my life, my character." If you want a good character from Christ, you will be sure to lose your character with the world. Are you ready to give up your character? If you were to go and preach at the corner of the street, do you say, "What would Mrs. So-and-so say if she were to roll by in her carriage?" and "What would Mr. So-and-so say?" What we want is this: whatever the Lord the King commands we must be ready to do it.

Give up the one hundred and twenty talents of gold. I do not know whether I may dare to say this, but I suppose I may if the Lord has led me to it, and it is this. I do not know whether any of you are ready to give some of your gold. In regard to Mildmay, there are many needs—needs in all directions. I am quite sure that a great many Christians are too heavily weighted with their money. You know that the balloon goes up higher as more sand is let out; and so a great many Christians would get nearer to their Lord if they would only get rid of some of their gold. The Queen of Sheba gave her spices. The spices may represent your talents. They may represent your voice. Go and sing for Christ in some Mission Hall. Go with your winsome ways, your kindness and gentleness, and use them for the Lord Jesus Christ. The Queen of Sheba gave precious stones. I do not know whether I speak to some ladies with jewel boxes. It would be a good thing if they were all given up for the King. Let our religion be a giving as well as a receiving religion. As soon as the Queen of Sheba gave all she had, then the king broke out royally, and gave all he had to give—all that she asked, all that she desired, besides what he gave of his Royal bounty. I wonder if some of you can trust your King as well as the Queen of Sheba trusted Solomon. I cannot help thinking that I am speaking to some to-night who may say, "I did so in the days gone by; Jesus was my King, but He is not my King now. He does not reign in my heart as He did before." What are we to say? I will give to any backslider this verse:—"They made Solomon, the son of David, king the second time" (1 Chron. xxix. 22). If, by God's grace, Jesus reigned over you in days gone by, and you are a backslider now, make Jesus the King the second time to-night. Oh! that you may have the grace to give all up now.

Children of the King.

REV. J. HUDSON TAYLOR.

Our subject this evening is "The privileges and responsibilities of the children of the King." Perhaps we need to ask ourselves a first question, Are we the children of a King—the children of the King? It may be that we do not sufficiently realise this as a fact; and if so, how can we realise our privileges and responsibilities in the position into which grace has brought us?

Some of us were listening this afternoon to an address on Africa. I do not know how it affected the minds of others, but as those vast regions were described to us—regions so vast that it seemed almost impossible for the mind to grasp them—it seemed to fill me with awe. Think of the great, the unattempted, the unbegun work in the Soudan. We all must have felt overwhelmed when it was pointed out that even the Congo region would embrace the whole of India from the Himalayas to Ceylon, that the region of the Soudan was immensely larger, and that in all that district there was not one witness for the Lord Jesus Christ.

Two thousand years have very nearly elapsed since the Great Commission was given, and at present we are told that there is not one believer in all that vast region. One could not but ask oneself, How comes it that the Lord has not sooner thrust forth some of his many servants into that vast region? We cannot tell all the reasons, but it seems to me that we may tell some of them. It may be that the children of the King are not fit to go; it may be that they are not worthy of the honour. It may be that we are not sufficiently saved ourselves to be used in regions like that, in carrying the glad tidings of salvation to others. I do think it immensely important that we should realise ourselves to be in very deed the children of the King.

We are told in the Word of God that Satan is the god of this world. No wonder they give him a high position. But do not we believers sometimes give him too high a position? It is natural that he should be this world's god, but cannot we look higher? Cannot we see him the servant, and not the master? Do we realise ourselves the children of the King—the King who is almighty, the King to whom is given all the resources of grace; as we have been hearing, all power in heaven and earth. Is not our want of recognition of this fact one source of our weakness, and one reason why we are so willing to stay at home? We do not feel, we do not realise, that we have a sufficient portion in Christ, and we cannot leave the other portion that we have—the enjoyments, the surroundings, the comforts of home. We do not realise that we have sufficient strength and grace in Christ to whom belong all things. We dare not launch ourselves into untold difficulty because we do not know that we are the children of the King. Oh! that we realised more fully our position as children of the King.

Now, as to some of the privileges of the children of the King. It has been very much laid upon my heart lately that very few of us have really entered as we should do into our privileges. Is it not one of the privileges of the children of a king to abide with him? Is it not one of the privileges of children to abide in the father's house, to see his face continually, to have precious intimacy with him, and to find his resources, and not their own, those on which we must fall back for the supply of every need? What is the branch in the vine? Is it something distinct from the vine? Is it something that in time of special danger may run to the vine and find a shelter there? Is it something that in time of special need may look to the vine, or is it a part of the vine? Is it not in vital union with the vine? Does it not spring out of the vine, and is not the whole life of the vine shared by each branch? Do we realise this privilege of the children of the King to share in the fulness of the blessing that there is in Jesus Christ our Lord? I fancy many of us may be feeling as I have often felt—that there was sap in the root of the vine, but how was I to get it into my poor, puny branch? What a mistaken thought! Christ says, "I am the Vine"—the whole Vine. "Abide in Me, and I in you!" We are indeed really one. What is this abiding that we are exhorted to? It is to recognise, to realise, to live in the strength of this fact, that Christ and I but really one; and that all his life is in us. That just as the blood of our whole body circulates through every part of the body, and brings life and strength to each member, so, one with Christ, his fulness is ours.

Is it not one of the privileges of the children of the King to have the "eyes of our minds enlightened," as the Apostle prayed for the Ephesian Christians, "that we may know" (that we may not be in any doubt or uncertainty) "what is the hope of our calling, and what the exceeding greatness of his power to usward who believe"? We cannot discharge our responsibilities unless we understand our privileges.

Again, do we, as the children of the King realise the truth of Rom. viii. 2, "The law of the Spirit of life in Christ Jesus hath made me free from the law of sin and death"? Take one of those beautiful succulent branches of the vine, and you will see it in the spring full of sap, with beautiful green leaves bursting forth, and with the promise of fruit; but separate it from the vine, and what will become of it? How soon it will wither, how soon the leaves will fade, how soon it will die and putrefy! Why does it not putrefy when on the tree? Why were the leaves so full and green? The law of the spirit of life in the vine so used chemical laws, which lead to death and putrefaction when the branch is separated from the vine, that they were for the building up of the branch and the ripening and perfection of the fruit. Have we, as children of the King, realised these glorious truths? Have I taken it home to myself that "the law of the Spirit of life in Christ Jesus hath set me free from the law of sin and death," and has made those very tendencies and temptations and stumbling blocks, which, apart from the law of life, are ruin and slavery to me, the very instrument through which Christ will gain victories, and through which fruit will be found to the praise and glory of God's grace?

Have we realised another of the privileges of the children of the King? That of living all along in glorious relationship to Him. The Prince of Wales is not the Prince of Wales to-day and someone else to-morrow. Have we realised the constancy of our own position in relation to our blessed Lord, and expected permanency of blessing? If one may speak for others, we have utterly failed in this. We have expected that sometimes we should fail, and not be abiding in Christ; that the flesh would get the upper hand, and we should need to come back again to the Lord as poor penitents seeking restoration. This should not be so. We are told of one who walked with God for three hundred years. Now we may be quite sure that God never walked with Enoch in the dark. God never walks with anyone in the dark. If a believer wanders away from his position of separation from the world, the loving Master will come to woo him back again, and with endearing words will say, "Arise, my love, and come away," but He will never say there, "Open to Me, and let Me in." So long as there is that wall, He will never attempt to cross it. Enoch must have walked with God in the light; and if he did that, and before he was translated had this testimony that his ways pleased God, is not the same grace that was sufficient for him sufficient for us?

Let us look at God's Word together, and see how God has sustained his grace in the lives of some of his servants. Look at Paul's words to the elders of Ephesus. He refers to the way in which God's grace had upheld him, and says, set foot in Asia, after what manner I was with you all the time." (Not sometimes; not at his better times.) "Serving the Lord with all lowliness of mind and with tears, and with trials which befel me by the plots of the Jews.... remembering that by the space of three years I ceased not to admonish every one night and day with tears" (Acts xx. 18, 19; 31 R.V.). For three years he was with them, they knew perfectly well after what manner he had been with them, from the first day, serving the Lord "all the time."

Again, how does the Holy Spirit lead him to speak to the Thessalonian believers? "Our Gospel came not unto you in word only, but also in power and in the Holy Ghost, and in much assurance; even as ye know what manner of men we showed ourselves towards you for your sake" (1 Thess. i. 5). There was not merely the word preached, but an object lesson shown. There was the life manifested in the Apostle. "And ye became imitators of us, and of the Lord." Why, that branch in the vine bore no leaves but vine leaves; and no fruit but vine fruit! Those who became followers of the Apostle became followers of the Lord. In chap. ii. 5, he says again, "Neither at any time were we found using words of flattery, as ye know, nor a cloke of covetousness, God is witness." And in ver. 9, 10, "For ye remember, brethren, our labour and travail: working night and day, that we might not burden any of you, we preached unto you the Gospel of God." "Ye are witnesses, and God also, how holily and righteously and unblameably we behaved ourselves toward you that believe." What was the end of all this? "To the end that ye should walk worthily of God." He believed that God's grace was able to make those Thessalonian Christians walk worthily of God. These are very important words, and if you carefully read, as I have read, the Scriptures, with this thought in view, you will be surprised how many passages there are to encourage you and me to expect that God's grace will enable us to walk in the light; and not sometimes merely, but to abide in Christ, and to find constantly his blessing resting upon us.

Then take the words of the Lord Jesus Christ to the Samaritan woman: "Whosoever drinketh of the water that I shall give him shall never thirst again." Does He not say the same truth in John vi., "He that cometh to Me shall never hunger"? "He that believeth on Me shall never thirst;" and you know that expression means "at any time." The same word is used there, as is used in the passage, "No man hath seen God at any time." Now we are warranted to believe that feeding habitually on Christ we should not be hungry or thirsty at any time; and should never be left, wherever the Lord may take us, and whatever He may give us, to live poor and hungry. We shall always find in Him that which will supply our need.

But is even this all, blessed as it is? What does He tell us in John vii.? "He that believeth on Me, as the Scripture hath said, out of him shall flow rivers of living water." Is it not our privilege to realise this—that in Christ Jesus we are so abundantly supplied with blessing, that without any personal fear of need we may have our hearts at rest before Him; living lives absolutely without anxiety, and without care, and without carefulness, we may be able to carry out literally the Master's command "Be careful"—be anxious, be troubled—"for nothing; but in everything by prayer and supplication, with thanksgiving, let your requests be that passeth all understanding shall garrison your hearts in Christ Jesus."

Now comes the responsibility. If we are so blessed in Christ it is not simply for our own enjoyment. It is not simply for their own enjoyment that these gaslights are lit here. Is it not that the light may be spread throughout the hall, and that we may all see together, that the lights are lit? If the lights should fail in their duty and not diffuse the light around, would not the directors of this hall soon cease to light them? Perhaps we may find a reason for our lack of blessing in this—that we have failed in our responsibility. We have forgotten that God has given us this grace in order that we may give it out. What is living water? Is it not running water? If you could take a stream of living water and run it into a reservoir and say, "We will keep it there," it would cease to be living water, and become polluted and stagnant. If you want to keep your reservoir full of living water you must open an outlet as well as an inlet, so that there may be a continual circulation. If you ligature an artery in the human body, say in the arm, the heart will pump fresh blood in by other channels; but if you close the main vein of the arm you cannot save it, and the arm will die and mortify. And this is one reason why we do not find more blessing at home: we have not carried the blessing sufficiently abroad.

Mr. Reginald Radcliffe has drawn our attention to this fact—that we are not meeting with the blessing that we might expect at home. So far as statistics are obtainable, we are not adding to our churches as we should do. The increase of membership is in smaller percentage than the increase of population; from which it follows that there are more unconverted people in Great Britain to-day than there were twelve months ago. And if this is so, is it not a serious thing for those who work at home and are interested in the home work especially, as well as for those who work abroad and are interested in the foreign work, to take this matter to heart, and remember that our responsibilites are essentially connected with the enjoyment of our privileges, and that the enjoyment of our privileges cannot be had without fidelity to God in regard to our responsibilities?

But if we are the children of the King should not we bear his likeness? And what is the great fact of all facts which are recorded of our Lord? "God so loved the world that He gave his only begotten Son." GOD is the great Giver. Christ, also, humbled Himself and left his royal throne to take his place in the poor manger in Bethlehem. Can we know Him; can we enter into fellowship with Him unless we tread in his footsteps, to rescue the perishing, wherever they may be? Unless we empty ourselves as He emptied Himself, we cannot be filled as He was filled.

The command rests upon you and me to be filled with the Spirit. Many persons seem very much perplexed about this. How are we to be filled with the Spirit? I do not think it is at all a difficult matter, if we only approach it in a teachable spirit, willing to do his will. Unless we are willing to do the will of our Lord we cannot grow in knowledge or in grace. If I had a glass of water in my hand, how should I get it filled with air? Empty it of the water, and the air will come in of itself. And if we want our heart to be full of the Spirit of God, if we only empty out those worldly things which occupy so much space there, and surrender ourselves to God, willing to be made what He would to do what He would have us do, there will be no difficulty about being filled with the Spirit.

Let us bear in mind that the Spirit of God is not a thing; the Spirit of God is a person. God giveth not his Spirit by measure. The Spirit of God is a glorious person. What is it for those who went yesterday to see the Jubilee celebrations to be full of the Queen? What is it for the politician to be full of his leader? What is it for a mother to be full of her babe? What is it for a merchant to be full of his business, or for a miser to be full of his wealth? That is what you and I want to be with regard to the Spirit of God. The minding of the Spirit brings life and peace, while the minding of the flesh brings weakness and corruption. May God make us willing to know our privileges by making us willing to discharge our responsibilities!

We have been hearing of Africa this afternoon. Every quarter of an hour 300 precious souls are passing to Christless graves in Africa, and you have never taught them a word about your King. Every fifteen minutes 300 precious souls are passing to Christless graves in India. Can we enjoy the smile of the King while we are disobeying his command to carry the Gospel to every one of them? And in China, again, the same number, 300 souls every fifteen minutes, are passing away, without having been reached by the Gospel. Did Christ leave his throne in glory, did He come down here to die that whosoever believeth on Him should not perish, but have everlasting life? Does this Book tell us that those who sin without law are saved because they have no law? This Book says that those who sin without law perish without law. But does not their blood rest upon those who have the Word of Life and leave them without it? Does it not rest upon those who know the truth which has made them free, and who would be set much more free by the truth if they were to discharge their duty and carry the Gospel to them? As we all have our privilege of never being hungry or thirsty or weak again, but of walking with Him on and on and on, and finding his mighty power and his sovereign grace able to hold our members in his grasp, able to utilise all our powers, able to bring into subjection to Christ every imagination of the thought of our hearts, bringing them captive and making them his servants—shall we not think of those who are bondservants of Satan, and bring them also to light and to liberty?

I cannot tell you the privilege it is to go forth as Christ's messenger. I have lately returned from a visit to China, and it has been, not an occasional thing, but quite the usual thing, to find the missionaries full of blessing and boiling over. One who reached China about a year ago was not there very long before the natives gave him a name—"Mr. Gloryface"—because his face was always shining for the Lord. He left a large business in which over two thousand hands were employed. He left a very precious work for God, in which he had been happy and much blessed. But what was his testimony? "The Lord promised me," he said, "a hundredfold more than all I left for Him. He has given me a very large hundredfold. It has been the best investment I have ever made."

Ah! if we would only let the Lord invest us, He would invest us well. If we would only put ourselves in the Lord's hands, He would bless us. Many of you would know what it is to have comfort and joy and ceaseless peace, and a rest that knows no interruption, if you would only put yourselves into the Lord's hands.

the Master his own due. Only put yourself into his hand, and see if He will not bless you. I wish I could give you some idea of the blessing that God has given some dear friends known to me out in China and other lands. In the very darkest time, so far as external appearance goes, in the very bitterest trial He has been with them and blessed them. Ah! it has been out there, and not here, that some of us have learned to know the Master as "a living, bright reality" indeed. May the Holy Spirit bless you with the full blessing in Christ, and then give you to discharge the responsibility of your holy privilege and calling, for his own Name's sake!

THURSDAY MORNING, JUNE 23.

The Power of the King.

REV. E. A. STUART

I doubt not that during the past few days you have noticed, in wandering through the London streets, strange devices of gas piping adorning the fronts of many of our buildings. You may be able perchance to make out the outlines into which these gas pipes have been twisted, and you can discern crowns, stars, and loyal mottoes. But it has seemed a poor decoration in the day time. When the shades of night began to fall, and one little touch of fire was applied, the whole started out in tongues of flame, and all brought glory to our Queen. Is it not so oftimes with the Word of God? We trace the crown, the star, the loyal mottoes, but we need the darkness, the sorrow, and trial and difficulty; we need the touch of fire of the Holy Spirit of God, and then all those things that we trace out theoretically become branded upon our very souls.

I shall never forget the first time this thought of the power of the King was thus brought home to me. I was travelling in Ireland from the Dublin Convention to speak at Belfast, when I entered into conversation with a gentleman in the carriage, who, I very soon discovered, was very deeply interested in the government of our poor unhappy sister isle. After a long journey with him, we parted before I reached Belfast. As he closed the door he took leave of me in these words: "Well, sir, the Lord reigneth." Left to my solitary cogitations as the train passed on, those three words—"the Lord reigneth"—seemed to be lit up with fresh meaning. They occur in Psalm xciii. and following Psalms, which have been described as giving to us the mystery of the Messiah. In Ps. xciii. we have the fact laid down for us that "the Lord reigneth," despite the waterfloods raging, and the seas roaring. In Ps. xciv. there is reference to Him for the adjustment of all that is now out of gear, and is going wrong, and the Psalm closes with the assurance that He will take our cause in hand. Therefore, in Ps. xcv. his Church is called upon to praise Him. In the first five verses, reasons are given for our praise; in the last six, warnings are given if we praise Him not.

But in Psalm xcvi. the desire of the Psalmist is not only that his Church might praise Him, but that all the world might praise Him. In this Psalm you have the second occasion when these three words are represented, "Tell it among the heathen that the Lord reigneth." Ps. xcvii. seems to be the Psalm of the second advent of Christ. He is coming. The very hills are shaking beneath his tread. Clouds and darkness are round about Him. Now He will overthrow every enemy. Now every idol shall the Lord. In Psalm xcviii. we have the coronation hymn of the Great Messiah as He takes his throne. In Ps. xcix. He is reigning among his people, high in Zion, exalted in holiness; and in Psalm c. this glorious oratorio closes. You have all nations conspiring to praise the Lord their King. In Psalm ci. comes the practical application—viz., the crowning Him King in our homes and in our hearts; walking before Him in uprightness and holiness all the days of our life. And surely it is not without reason that Ps. cii. follows, reminding us that the way to the crown is through the cross; for it is the Psalm of the suffering Messiah, following the Psalms of his Power, his Majesty, and his Glory.

You notice that three of these Psalms commenced with this declaration, that "the Lord reigneth" (xciii., xcvii., and xcix.). In Ps. xciii. we have the assurance that He is the King of nature. The most unbridled, the most unruly, and the wildest elements are brought before us—the storms, the waves, and the waterfloods; but He remaineth King for evermore. In Ps. xcvii., it is his kingship over the unruly man: far more unruly than the unruly elements of creation. He sits King. Even though they may be worshipping images, those images shall be cast down, and the worshippers shall be confounded. But in Ps. xcix. He is brought before us as the King of his own people, the King of saints. We are reminded of a solemn lesson in verses 8 and 9, that He is God, that He reigneth, and that He forgives our iniquities. Nevertheless, He takes vengeance upon our rebellion; though He is a God of love, of pardon, and of pity, He is also a God of holiness. I want to bring before you just these three thoughts: first, the King; secondly, the manner of his kingdom; and thirdly, the way in which He reigns.

First of all the King.—What do we mean by the King? I find there is only one Hebrew word translated king in the Word of God—"Melech"—and it signifies "the counsellor." God's idea of the king is the "one mighty in counsel." Listen to Him—He will counsel you. But, while there is only this one word translated king, I find there are four words translated by the cognate word "Prince." Grouping these thoughts we may get an all round view of what we mean by "the King." We find first of all in Ezek. xlvi. 10 the word nasi translated "Prince." "The Prince shall be in the midst of them as they go out and as they come in." The root idea of this word seems to be the honour and dignity of the King. We love to know that He is above all principalities and powers, that He has a name which is above every name. If we have followed Him in his sorrow, we rejoice to look upward and know Him in his glory. And notice that in this passage we have the condecension of this glorious King, for the Prince is in the midst of his people as they go out and as they come in. "Thus saith the High and Lofty One that inhabiteth eternity, I dwell with him that is of a meek and contrite spirit." Oh! that you realise this glorious truth, that the King of Heaven is in your midst as you go out and come in.

I find in Isaiah ix. 6 a word representing "The Prince of Peace." He can command peace; and as when He said, "Let there be light, and there was light," so when He commands peace there must be peace. For, in the word of a king there is power, and He is the Omnipotent King. In the Song of Solomon, vii. 7, you have another Hebrew word, bringing before us the personal character of the King. He is not only the Prince in the sense that He is excellent—the noble, the great-hearted King. Then we have, lastly, the word used in Daniel, ix. 25, where He is spoken of as the Messiah or Prince—the idea seeming to be the Leader, both for our own example and in our battlefield; the One who will win the victory and who must win it, and the One whom, therefore, we are to follow. This is our King, of glorious Omnipotence, perfect in his own upright, noble character, and the Leader whom we are bound to follow.

Then with regard to his kingdom, there are different spheres in which He exercises his kingship. There is the kingdom of Providence. Although a multitude of things seem to be out of gear, I do not believe He has abdicated his throne. Although there are many difficulties, and many things that seem to be wrong, yet I believe He sitteth King for evermore, even upon the throne of Providence, and we shall see that all things are working together for good, according unto the Eternal Counsellor. There is the kingdom of Glory still to come, both in the Millennium and in eternity; that kingdom of glory which inspires our hearts, for we know that our labour is not in vain in the Lord, but that it is all tending to the establishment of his kingdom, and to the glory of our Christ. But there is also the kingdom of his Grace in outward manifestation, and the kingdom of his grace in the inward experience of the individual heart. There is the kingdom of his grace in its outward manifestation.

The Gospel of Matthew seems to be pre-eminently the Gospel of the Kingdom. Fifty-eight times in that Gospel are the King and the kingdom mentioned. The subject of the kingdom forms the key-note of the whole Gospel. It may be divided into four great divisions:—The first four chapters, down to chap. iv. 23, brings before us the advent of the King. Then you have the proclamation of the kingdom. He proclaims from the Mount (chaps. v. to vii) the character of his citizens, the law of his kingdom, the regulations for carrying it on; and in chaps. viii. and ix. He comes to the practical proof of his kingdom. He shows how it is for the amelioration of this earth's sorrows and sicknesses. He proclaims what shall be the character of the kingdom, in the wonderful series of parables from chap. xiii. and onwards. From xvi. 5 to xx. 28 you have the King revealing the teaching of his kingdom to his more immediate circle. He tells them they must keep separate from the world. He fires their ardour with the revelation of his own glory, and then reveals the sacred principles of his kingdom—love and humility and confidence in God. From xx. 29 you have the King mounting his throne through the path of suffering by way of the cross. You have the King changing his capital, sitting upon his cross as upon his throne, and so winning the victories and laying the foundation in righteousness of his throne which shall be established for ever.

Such is the manner of the outward manifestation of the King of Grace, but we read in Luke xvii. that there is the inward kingdom of grace—the kingdom that is within you. What a joy this is to many of us. We have accepted Him as King because of the protection we receive; but have we experienced the liberty of his kingdom, that new birth which when once a man receives shall be like the wind blowing where it listeth? Do we know something of the provision of his a little theocracy in ourselves—the King reigning there and all brought under his dominion.

Lastly, How does the King reign? If you look into Ps. xciii., you will be able to trace your way clearly through these five great divisions which were suggested to us by Matthew Henry. He first of all shows how the King reigns, majestically—"The Lord reigneth, He is clothed in majesty." I must leave that to your imagination; we can only say, "O Lord, my God, Thou art very great." He reigns, secondly, powerfully—"The Lord is clothed with strength wherewith He hath girded Himself, the world also is established, and cannot be moved." Not only is He the Prince in the court, but He is the Commander in the camp. Not only is He clothed with majesty; He has girded Himself with the armour of his strength. He has the power to assert his sway. It is self-derived power. What is it? In the first place, I fancy it is the power of life. What a marvellous power is life. You may crush a little seed under the heaviest weight of stone, but it will make its way to the upper air. And your King has the power of life, that power which was displayed in the creation of the world, that power which is displayed in dead souls when the seed of the Word of God is sown therein, and it must spring forth. Our King's power is the power of truth. Truth must prevail. We have had philosophies that have held their sway in days gone by, but they have all passed away. Why? Because they were not founded upon truth. But our King must reign for ever, because his power is the power of truth and of holiness. There is a marvellous power in holiness. Our King scattered away all iniquity from before his eyes. Lastly, there is the power of love—a marvellous power, which draws the hearts of men unto Himself. This power is peculiar to the Lord Jesus Christ. You remember when He was upon earth He so emptied Himself that He never claimed for Himself more than the derived power—"All power"—in that passage read to us to-day—"is given unto Me." He had power upon earth. In John xvii. He says, "Thou hast given Me power over all flesh." But when He ascends up on high there is something else to be ascribed to Him. When the hosts of heaven see the Lamb upon the throne they shout with one accord, "Worthy is the Lamb that was slain to receive power." He was worthy to receive his own inherent power—the power He had before the ages. May we know what is the greatness of this power.

Then He reigns eternally—"Thy throne is established; Thou art from everlasting." The proudest earthly monarch must bite the dust, and the most beloved sovereign must be followed to the tomb. But our King is everlasting. He reigns triumphantly. "The floods have lifted up their voice; the Lord on high is mightier than the noise on many waters; yea, than the mighty waves of the sea." He is on high; the waves cannot reach Him; they are the breaking waves. It is just when the wave is breaking that it makes most noise. Therefore, be not afraid of the waves. If they toss themselves tumultuously, the noise that they are making is a sign that they are now breaking upon the shore, where He has set the sand as a barrier, that they cannot pass.

I would point out seven great floods which the Lord thus restrains by his omnipotent power. I see in Gen. vi. 7, the floods of the punishment of sin. The whole world is corrupt before God. He opens the windows of heaven and pours out away. It is an awful flood when God draws up the sluices of heaven. We have not often seen these floods of the punishment of sin, but I believe they are in the treasuries of God. They are only dammed up for us just now by the grace of the Lord Jesus Christ. But that same flood of punishment which swept away the ungodly, will one day sweep away, with a flood of fire, those who exalt themselves against God. He can make an ark for his people, and save the teachers and learners of righteousness even as He did Noah and his family. Then there are the floods of difficulty. In Exod. xv. 8, there are the floods before the children of Israel. The floods of the Red Sea, and a great difficulty they were in. The floods before, and Pharaoh's host behind; which way could they turn? Has God sometimes brought you into these floods? Has difficulty after difficulty surged round about you till there seemed to be no way of escape? God sitteth above these water-floods, King for ever and evermore, and He makes a way through the waters for his people, and can lead them safely, so that they need not fear. In Matt. vii., there are the floods of temptation. We have the two men, the one who built his house upon the rock, the other upon the sand, and presently the floods came, and they beat upon that house. Ah! have we not felt sometimes the floods how strongly they have surged round about us and almost carried us off our feet in a moment; but He sitteth King above the water-floods of temptation, and can make a way of escape, so that you may be able to bear it. There are the water-floods of ungodliness—"The floods of ungodly men have made me afraid" (Ps. xviii. 4). We see the floods of infidelity, Sabbath-breaking, forgetfulness of God, but He sitteth King for evermore. There are the floods, in Ps. lxix. 2, of sorrow—"They compass me about"—floods of bereavement, of temporal difficulty, of sore soul distress; but He can bring us even out of these floods. He sitteth still the King. In Jonah ii. 7, there are the floods of self-inflicted woe and chastisement for the servant of the Lord who leaves his work, and these floods have swallowed us up quick; but God can draw us out of the deep mire, and set our feet upon the rock, and send us back again to our neglected work, and inspire us with fresh power. Behind all these floods there is the seventh flood, in Isa. lix. 19, the flood of Satanic malice. Remember that there is an enemy, and that our warfare is not against flesh and blood, but it is against principalities and powers, and behind all these floods there is one great enemy against whom we fight. Many of us have felt his power, and know the struggle is real, although some deny it. When the enemy shall come in like a flood, the Spirit of the Lord shall raise a standard against him.

Lastly, He reigns in truth and holiness—"Thy testimonies are very sure. Holiness becometh thy house, O Lord, for ever." This is our King. This is our kingdom, and this is the honour of his reign. I see seven visions of my King. I see Him in the power of his holiness upon Mount Sinai, as the whole world rocks beneath his tramp, and He sends forth his fiery law into the world. I see the power of his eternity in Isa. vi. Earthly kings fail, but Isaiah says, "The Lord sitteth King upon his throne." I see Him in the power of his omnipotence in Rev. iv. St. John is sitting upon his lonely isle of Patmos. He is distressed because of the persecutions without, and the heresies within, and, as he lifts up his eyes he sees the throne, and the throne is not untenanted, for One is still sitting upon it, be the earth never so unquiet. I see Him in the power of his sorrow, brought forth by Pilate as He says unto the assembled masses, "Behold your King." We accept Him though He be crowned with thorns, and though there be the blood-stained Roman sagum about his shoulders. He is our King; the King of sorrow—King of love. I see Him in the power of his dominion, in Rev. v. 12, when all heaven and earth conspire to cry, "Worthy is the Lamb that was slain to receive power," that is dominion. I see Him in the power of his victory, conquering and to conquer, upon his white horse, King of kings and Lord of lords; and I see Him in the power of his judgment seat, when He sits upon his great white throne, and gives his verdict to the assembled sons of men. "Then shall the King say to them upon his right hand, Come, ye blessed of my Father, receive the kingdom prepared for you from the foundation of the world." And to those who have been disobedient, "Depart, ye cursed, into everlasting fire." Oh that our hearts may be lifted up to-day as we behold the power of our King, and that we may be led into the deepest humiliation, that ever we have distrusted his power or have spurned his love.

A GREETING TO NORTHFIELD.

The President said he rejoiced that God had put it into the hearts of two friends to supply with great liberality the needs of Mildmay and its work. So he had not to urge the claims of these on their support on the present occasion. But he hoped that this kindness would provoke others to jealousy to help forward the work which might be said to be capable of indefinite expansion. There was another matter in which he was sure many would take an interest. Their friend and brother, Rev. H. W. Webb-Peploe, was about to pay a visit to the United States, where he would attend as a representative of this country at Mr. Moody's Conference. It might strengthen his hands, and it would certainly show their friend Mr. Moody, to whom they owed so much, if he were to be made the bearer of a kindly greeting from Mildmay. Perhaps the Conference would best signify their assent to this proposal by standing up, as a sign of sending their hearty love and greeting and sympathy with the work which has been entrusted to Mr. Moody. The entire assembly immediately rose. Sir Arthur Blackwood added that he was sure this would both cheer the heart of the friend who was leaving as well as that of the friend to whom he was going.

REQUESTS FOR PRAYER.

Mr. J. E. Mathieson read the requests for prayer, and asked all present to receive these requests with as much sympathy, love, and reality as God would enable them to feel. A request was made that prayer might be offered that God would save England from the power of the Papacy, and that the encroachments which had been made on English fidelity to truth might be swept away; that we make no compact with death, and that England may awake to see what the mystery of iniquity is doing. A loud Amen followed the reading of this request. Prayer was earnestly requested concerning our national sins—drunkenness, impurity, and Sabbath-breaking. In reference to Sabbath-breaking the writer of the request added:—We see in the East-end multitudes profaning the Lord's Day, and in the West-end there are smoking concerts and supper parties. "Shall I not visit for these things saith the Lord?"——For a mission engaged in sending the Gospel by means of some of the striking passages of God's Word; Mrs.

Grimké's Mission, as it is generally known.——Praise was asked for the great good done in Auckland, New Zealand, and that the mission efforts might still be for the glory of God.——Prayer was asked for a poor woman at Santa Maria who, having refused to bow down as the Host passed, has been imprisoned. A Christian minister has twice seen her through the bars of a strong prison. Many friends feel that this should be made a test case, and are preposing to take whatever steps may be necessary to prove whether such persecution shall be permitted.——Madame Vernier, of Poitiers, asked for praise to be offered for the blessing which attended mission work.——Earnest prayer was asked on behalf of the Medical Missionary Association in their efforts to multiply mission dispensaries in the needy districts of London.

Serving the King.

REV. H. M. WILLIAMSON, Belfast.

Let me read to you the King's words:—"We meet with the King as He goeth out, and as He cometh in." "Behold, thy servants are ready to do what my Lord the King shall appoint." "Surely in what place my Lord the King shall be, whether in death or life, there also will thy servant be." "Christ shall be magnified in my body, whether it be by life or by death." "Say among the heathen that the Lord reigneth." Commenting upon these sayings of the King that we have read, is like an attempt to darken counsel with words. Suppose we look at the second of these sayings. It is a grand saying, "Behold, thy servant is ready to do what my Lord (individualising it) the King shall appoint." Oh! may there be from the King such a wave of power in the heart of each believer here that we shall go forth from this Conference not to talk, but to do. Think of the King. We have been listening to the words of the previous speaker about the King. The King is one. There is no room for two kings in the human heart. Jesus, if He reigns, must reign as the only King. "The Lord God Omnipotent reigneth." He must reign until his enemies be made his footstool. "Who is this King of glory?" "Unto us a Child is born: unto us a Son is given, and the government shall be upon his shoulder, and his name shall be called Wonderful, Counsellor, the Mighty God, the Everlasting Father, the Prince of Peace." This is our King. Uncover; bow the knee, and not in word only, but with the heart, saying, "Crown Him Lord of all." It seems to me, if we were to stop all speaking, and all with one act upon our knees crown Him King in our hearts, and went forth to our homes, saying, "Christ is our King," a power would go from us that would show to the world that He reigns, and that we are really his servants. The King is invisible, therefore men despise and his enemies mock Him; but

> The crowning day is coming,
> Is coming by and by;
> When our Lord shall come in power
> And glory from on high.

"Every eye shall see Him, and they also which pierced Him, and all kindreds of the earth shall wail because of Him." This is our King. If now in this hall our eyes were touched with the eye-salve of the Holy Ghost to see the King, the place would be filled with the spiritual—the real glory of the King, and if our ears were opened we would hear a voice we have not heard these days: "Ye are my brethren, my bones, and my flesh: why are ye the last to bring the King back?" This is the King of whom we have been hearing; let us keep our eyes on Him while we talk about his servants.

There was a confession made by an old servant of his many years ago in trying circumstances. You remember, on the deck of a vessel, in the midst of heathen scoffers and the rude soldiers, this servant of the King stood forth and said, "Whose I am, and whom I serve." Oh! if it were only so with each of us here to-day, it would make us sources of power wherever we dwell—a time of power in London also, such as it has seldom seen. It is the highest glory of mortal man to be able to write under his name "a sinner saved by King Jesus, whose I am, and whom I serve." We must serve. Man was made to serve, for he is a creature. Unfallen he served the Creator; and, falling from that, he served divers lusts and passions—the world, the flesh, and the devil. Serve we must, and serve we do. Though other Lords have had dominion over us, his claims were still upon us, and when God, according to his eternal purpose in Jesus Christ, made us new creatures, his purpose was that we should serve. The highest thing we can predicate about man is that he serves God. This is the declaration concerning him yonder in the glory, "his servants shall serve Him." We talk about serving Him in heaven, in our fleshy imagination, as we talk of the new song, but the new service, as the new song, is learned here. No man sings the new song yonder who has not learned it on the plains of earth; and no man shall serve in the glory who does not serve here. "If any man serve Me, him will my Father honour. Where I am there also shall my servant be."

The highest thing you can there aspire to is to be a true servant of this our adorable King. But let us not misunderstand the matter. Jesus, our King of glory, is not a beggar. He does not ask, and will not receive, the service of other men's servants. He has his own servants, his own messengers, his own workers, his own warriors; and He will subdue the world by his own. There are many men nowadays who run away from their Master, and many who are ready to give a helping hand to Christ under some emotion or pricking of conscience; but Jesus Christ rejects all such service. Many men will give of their substance under excitement, or to be seen in a subscription list; but such service is not received by the King, and it may be rather said to them, Thy money perish with thee. The Lord's servants are free-born sons, and they serve because they are sons. They serve Him because they love Him, and they do his will because they delight to do Him honour. Therefore, if we are to be servants, if we would enter this service, we must enter it in a covenant ratified by blood, and become sealed thus to serve Him henceforth and for ever.

Let us look at the privileges. We were told yesterday that when the Queen of Sheba came to Solomon, she first wondered at his glory, and next at the glory and the privileges of his servants. "Oh!" said she, "happy are these servants of thine; they are always before thee, and hear thee, and receive tokens of thy glory and power." We serve a greater than Solomon—the King of kings and the Lord of lords; and surely we shall say to-day, "Happy are those servants to be in thy presence continually!" Privileges! why this is the first of them, "To dwell in thy presence." All true servants know this in measure as they obey Him, in measure as they yield themselves to Him. They are conscious of his presence, as much so as we are of each other. This depends measure of whole-hearted obedience. There be some servants—so called—but they are like the elder brother in the parable; they are always in the field—always doing duty. They are never in the house when the younger son comes home, to welcome him, or to share the joy of the father. They are servants of a different kind, they are always waiting for the kid, to make merry with their friends; for they have their merriment as much away from the Father as the prodigal had. Not so the true servants, they are always in his presence. It is wearisome when they are away from Him. They cannot live or work out of his presence. It is midnight, it is darkness, it is the withering of all their joy and strength, when some cloud, rising from earth, hides the King's presence.

And then they have fellowship with the King, which just means friendship and friendly intercourse. His heart and theirs are one. I make that the test of a man's growth in grace: he has sympathy with Jesus. His heart throbs with that of the Man Christ Jesus. He feels with Christ as He weeps over sinners. He feels with Christ as He waits to bring in the heathen in their millions. He has sympathy with Christ in the travail of his soul, and in seeking the Father's glory. Whatever is in the heart of Jesus, is, in its measure, in the heart of the true servant. There is union of heart with Him as well as communion. They have fellowship together about all these things, into which I cannot at length enter.

Let us add, they are fellow-workers with the King. Oh, my sluggard brother! Oh, my idle sister! here is a privilege. No man ever had fellowship with the King who did not go forth to be a fellow-worker with Christ. The first call to man is to be a son; the second is, "Go, work in my vineyard." The Lord Jesus Christ is engaged in a great enterprise. Did not our hearts tremble as we saw that awful map of dark Africa, as we thought of the millions for whom nothing has been done? I do not envy the feelings of the man who could look upon it with indifference. The servants have the privilege of being fellow-workers with Jesus, in the in-bringing of his kingdom, which is righteousness, and peace, and joy in the Holy Ghost. They do not dwell merely in the King's presence; but much more, as beside them, but separate, He is in them, and they in Him. He is in their hearts; they, body and soul, are the temple of his presence. So as fellow-workers. They are fellow-workers, not merely as in the same field, like Boaz and his reapers, but closer; they are fellow-workers as being one body. They work because Jesus works in them and by them. That is a wonderful word of the Master's, "The works that I do shall ye do also." I question if anyone has begun to understand it. As if the Master had said, He works, and yet not he, but I work in him; and he works out as I work in. "Greater works than these shall he do." Mark, He does not say, "greater works than I do," but "greater works than these shall I do in him, and he by Me.' It is greater work than Pentecost work, to evangelise the millions of China, Africa, and India. Oh, to have any place in the subjugation of this world to King Emmanuel!

Still another privilege—"They suffer together with Him." They are like comrades in the same battle; they have had the same conflicts, the same enemies, the same wounds. Apart from the wounds which our own sin gives us, we have the wounds we receive in the battle spiritual, which wounds we receive like the wounds Christ

He was opposed, we are. Here, how sweet to overcome by the blood of the Lamb. How sweet to tell Him of victories won over sin and self, and of souls gathered; and how pleasing it will be, when the last battle is fought and the victory gained, when the Conqueror returns on high leading captivity captive, how sweet to follow in his train. Still higher—it is written, or I would not dare say so—we have the privilege of sharing his throne. I do not know what it means beyond this—that we are all one, and where He is we shall be; the glory of the Head, the glory of the body; and the glory of the body, the glory of the Head. For He says expressly, "To him that overcometh will I grant to sit with Me on my throne." In the darkest hour, in the din of conflict, as they are ready to faint, the voice of the Captain of Salvation may be heard saying, "Fight the good fight of faith, resist the devil, and he will flee from you." And when heart and flesh are ready to fail, a word like this from the Captain's lips fills the soul with boldness and sends him forth conquering and to conquer.

What shall I say more? Who can enumerate the privileges of being a servant of Jesus Christ? It passes the intellect of an archangel; he does not know it. Who can conceive it, much less express it? To be his very own, to be bought with his blood; to have nothing about me that is not his—my body, my brain, my hands, my feet—to be wholly his; master also of my intellect, affection, will; to sit at his feet, to gaze into his eyes, to be covered with his righteousness, to enter his very heart to do his will—oh, who can realise the wonderful glory of all this? This is open to all of us. We are called to realise it. Our little sufferings for Jesus Christ, as the Apostle says, are not worth speaking of in comparison with this weight of glory.

We now come to the main thought—our responsibility. Let me say that the sum of our responsibility to the King may be embraced under these two things: first, to know his will; and, secondly, to do it. As subjects of our Queen we are all supposed to know the law, and ignorance of the law is no excuse. With the Bible in our hands, we, as the subjects of King Jesus, are inexcusable. We ought to know his will, and we may know it if we so desire. You with the shut Bible, who come to Mildmay Conference for a good time, you are inexcusable on the score of ignorance. You who do not make Bible reading your daily privilege, you who do not feel it a privilege to know all you can about your Master's will, it is a sin, and, I say it kindly, it is a shame. I am afraid there is not so much Bible reading now as in old times. There are many things taken from the Word and neatly dressed, and sweet and profitable, specially to babes in Christ, in the little books which adorn our tables, but at best they are the truth watered.

Let me say to my young friends, If you want to be strong, do not take anything at secondhand. Go right to the Word. Say, "Lord, by the Holy Ghost show me thy will, and help me to do it." It is our duty first to know his will, and secondly to do it—not to hear about it, not to pray about it, but to do it. How often we have prayed concerning duty, and when we were ready to do it, some passing trifle kept us back; and when night came, vexed we prayed, tried to think ourselves devout because we prayed so much. Many will engage in prayer as to their Lord's will, and when the side glint comes into the mind, "You ought to do this or that," we go on praying, and neglect the voice. But you should do it at once. Do not vow about it; do it. Let us exhort one another to go forth from this Conference a company of doers. We were born to do, and we are born again to do. God is glorified, not so much in what we are, as in the Holy Ghost using all the gifts He gives us as fellow-workers with God for the inbringing of his kingdom. It is a soul-moving thought that all creatures do the will of God except man. The crown of creation—man made to do the will of God, and made again in Christ Jesus to do the will of God; how imperfectly he does it! We would not do it when we were sinners, and now, when we are converted by the Holy Ghost, you know, and I know, what innumerable excuses we make, and how feebly and sinfully we do the will of God. It should move all our hearts to say with confusion of face and confession of sin, "Other lords have had dominion over us, but now thy servants are ready to do whatsoever my Lord the King shall appoint."

Do you not think that selfishness is a mean vice? I never knew a true Christian who would not admit this to be the very incarnation of sin—putting self where God ought to be; it is the very dethronement of God. Of all kinds of selfishness the most subtle and the most satanic is spiritual selfishness. What is too often the end of all our religion? Is it God or self? Is it not very often to feel happy in the enjoyment of pardon and peace, and so on? Is there any one thing in the life of Christ like that? No. He came down, not to do his own will, but the will of Him that sent Him. He came down not to be ministered unto but to minister, and to give his life a ransom for many. He came down not to please Himself, but to bless others. Our Christianity is most Christlike and genuine and spiritual when it is turned away from self altogether. Ah! unselfishness in Divine things is a high attainment. Whenever we get poor "I" blotted out, and Jesus Christ written over the "I," we begin to have the mind of Christ, who pleased not Himself, who, though He was rich, yet for our sakes became poor, that we through his poverty might be made rich.

Suppose you were asked to-day to look at some delicate piece of machinery. You examine it accurately, and observe its adaptation. Would you not at once say it was made to work—to produce something special? Look at a converted man! What a wonderful piece of workmanship of the Holy Ghost is there! For this purpose Jesus Christ was incarnate. For this purpose He served and suffered, He died and rose again, and is in heaven the Advocate. For this purpose the Holy Ghost is given, and you are born again. The Holy Ghost quickens you every day. For what purpose? That you might be a living witness and worker for Jesus. Thus the end of all that God does for us and in us is when all is done that God can do to make us the servants of the Most High. What a sin and shame it is for myself and you to live this idle, lazy life, when the world is perishing around us. Do we Christians really believe in heaven and hell?

Let us realise, then, that the Lord Jesus has made us servants, to go forth and do his will. Sometimes I hear it said about this service that men are either to give or go. I do not find that in my Bible. I find in the Bible that every servant of Christ must give and go. There is no alternative. The Lord Jesus Christ will have no service by proxy. How much shall a man give to Christ his Master? Where shall a man go for Christ, the Master, whether to his own homestead, or to the sunken in the East of London, or to the harder work in the West of London? That the Master and you must settle alone together. But if you are his servants you must give and go, and go and give. The Lord has no stewards that do not give, and no workers that do not go, and no warriors that do not fight; and when we cut ourselves off from this work we cut ourselves off from all the privileges.

We can convert nobody, but we can carry the Word. The Church of God is responsible for the evangelisation of the world, and whilst there is one being who has not heard of Christ, there is sin upon the Church—I mean upon all who profess to belong to the Lord. In the army it is not alone the officers who fight. None who have any hope that they belong to the sacramental host of the Lord God Almighty can shirk or shift their responsibility. They have their portion according to their gifts and graces and opportunities. The Lord has one instrument—the Church, and this is the work to which we are called. We are waking up a little. All power in heaven and earth is given to Him, Jesus has told us. "I beheld Satan like lightning fall from heaven." We are on the conquering side, so we must go on. Hitherto, it has been but an affair of outposts—skirmishing. The time has now come. The Captain of Salvation has ordered an advance along the whole line. Forward! "The Son of God goes forth to war; Who follows in his train?" If we do fail to evangelise the big towns we will have revolution, and we will be punished for it. Look at the work there is abroad. There is hope for India, and Ethiopia, and China. They are beginning to ground their arms at the feet of Jesus. And the sons of Jacob are doing the same. Shall we go forth from this Conference resolved, by the power of the Holy Ghost, to go on with this work in our individual places?

THURSDAY EVENING.

A Strong Man and a Stronger.

REV. EDWARD W. MOORE.

Having read Luke xi. 21—26, the speaker proceeded:—

There is a picture, justly celebrated for its beauty, which depicts Satan playing with a man at a game of hazard for his soul. But if a painter could depict it upon canvas, in the passage that I have read to you there is a more wonderful subject for his skill. Here is a siege that excels in interest all the sieges that this world's history can narrate. Here is a conflict, a single combat, before which the most stirring battles of antiquity fade into insignificance. Two mighty champions enter the arena and dispute the field, and the prize of the contest is the soul of man.

Our subject to-night is "The Power of the King"; and I am not sure that any better illustration of that power can be given than the account which these verses give of the way in which the King of kings encounters and over throws the great adversary of our race. I want for a few moments to ask your attention to the three great acts in this drama—the three leading features of this passage. There is first the condition of the sinner; there is next the conquest of the Saviour; and there is lastly implied, if not expressed, a caution for the saint. There is, first, the condition of the sinner. What a condition it is. It is summed up in verse 21: "When a strong man armed keepeth his palace, his goods are in peace." I will ask you to notice five particulars here specified—first, the strong man's personality; second, his power; third, his panoply; fourth, his palace; and fifth, his peace.

Satan is a person. We find in the days in which we live many descendants of the Sadducees of old, who say that there is neither angel nor spirit; who, when confronted with the sin and misery that are in the world, though forced to admit their existence, tell us that they are due solely to the folly and sin of the human heart. But the Word of God speaks with no uncertain sound. It tells us that Satan is a person. See how he is described—as "a man," active, intelligent, resolute, understanding his position, prepared to hold his own against all comers, to maintain his place at all hazards. Could there be anything more exactly in harmony with the purposes and designs of the arch-deceiver than that he should circulate a report that he does not exist? It seems to me that Satan is well content to hide his personality, if thereby he can the more effectively keep his victims in their chains. If a gang of housebreakers, on entering a neighbourhood, could succeed in persuading the inhabitants that no such persons as burglars existed, could any advice be better adapted to serve their purposes of evil? If we begin by questioning the personality of the evil one, we may end by denying the sinlessness of our Lord. Those who deny the personality of the tempter have to explain how it was that the Lord Jesus Christ was tempted. There was nothing in Him that could for a moment induce Him in the direction of disobedience to his Father's will; and yet the suggestion to disobedience came, "If Thou be the Son of God, command these stones to be made bread." Where did it come from? It came from without. Therefore there is a personal tempter.

Secondly, notice his power. He is not only a man, but he is "a strong man." No good soldier despises his enemy. Satan is not "a hobgoblin of the nursery," at whose name we can jest; he is a terrible being. Have you never experienced his power? If you let him alone, it is more than possible, while it suits his purpose, that he may let you alone; but once begin to attack his kingdom and you will soon discover what a terrible foe you have to meet. In Mark v. you find the case of the demoniac, and you see there the power of the unclean spirit. No fetters or chains could bind him; nor is there any created power equal to the task; it must be the Divine Champion alone who can overcome him and destroy his work. His power, too, is backed by his panoply. You have it here—he is not only a strong man, but he is "a strong man armed." He is not content with his own strength, so to speak, for the defence of his citadel, but he arms his victim with the helmet of presumption, the breastplate of pride, the iron shield of unbelief, and the fiery darts of venom, and spite, and envy, and jealousy, and lust, and greed. He is armed to the teeth; and in this attitude he defends his palace. Yes, here is a palace held; a city guarded. Mark it well. A palace is a royal dwelling; but what is this palace, this dwelling? It is the human heart. Have you fully realised that you and I are nothing less, and are intended to be nothing less, than residences of Deity? Have we fully grasped the great thought that habitation is the culmination of God's dealings with us? And so habitation is the culmination of the devil's dealings too. The mystery of godliness and the mystery of iniquity run side by side, and they are both mysteries of dwelling.

You may trace the parallel in Scripture:—Does God enlighten? (2 Cor. iv. 6): Satan blinds (2 Cor. iv. 4). Does God work in us? (Phil. ii. 13): Satan works in the children of disobedience (Eph. ii. 2). Does God fill the hearts of his people? (Acts iv. 8): Satan fills the hearts of his victims (Acts v. 5). The sad counterpart is complete. Do you believe in haunted houses? "What," you say, "ghost stories and fables about spectres and the like." No, I don't mean a haunted house of that sort, but I do mean something far more real and far more terrible. Has it ever occurred to you and to me that except Christ be in possession of us we are haunted houses—houses in which the devil lives? It is one of the most startling descriptions that Scripture gives of the sinner—that Satan is "not near him, but in him." What an awful word is that in Luke xxii. 3, where you read that Satan entered into Judas, being one of the twelve! What does it imply? Every man can do what he will in his own house. An Englishman's house, we say, is his castle. What is this description that is given? Why, that Satan reigns and rules in the heart of those who are his slaves; that he goes in and out; that he opens and no man shuts; that he shuts and no man opens. When the man sleeps, it is under the gloomy shade of the evil one. When he rises, it is to do his bidding and work his will.

There is but one feature wanting, and the picture is complete. "When a strong man armed keepeth his palace, his goods are in peace." "Peace!" I thought I had read, "There is no peace to the wicked." No peace! Yes, there is. Come with me to yonder graveyard; stand there in the cemetery of the forgotten dead. How still it is this summer evening; not a breath is moving; scarce a blade of grass flutters; the sighing of the wind is hushed; no busy hum of voices, no tramp of living men. And yet there are hundreds with us. Yes, at our very feet. What peace is this? It is the peace of death. Is that the peace that you and I desire? That is the peace in which Satan lulls his victims to their doom. Their consciences are seared, their understanding darkened, their affections perverted, their will enslaved. Only about half an hour ago I heard a lady who had been travelling in the Riviera, the scene of the late earthquakes, say that, before the rumble that told of the terrible disaster was heard, there was a stillness that was oppressive, a preternatural stillness. It seemed as if all nature held its breath. It seemed unnatural, and it was unnatural. It was a presage of the coming storm. Even so is it with the souls that are wrapped in this deadly slumber by the prince of darkness—their slumber and peace are a presage of a terrible awakening. If the righteous scarcely be saved, where shall the ungodly and the sinner appear?

As we look at this tremendous enemy of the race we are ready to say, "Shall the prey be taken from the mighty?" Satan himself seems to stride before us like Goliath of old, and say, "Give me a man that we may fight together." But, thanks be to God, the power of the enemy only throws into stronger relief the superior power of the Conqueror. Let us return from the contemplation of the picture of the sinner to see the conquest of the Saviour. See it in the title He wears; see it in the assault He delivers; see it in the victory He achieves; see it in the transformation He effects.

See it in the title He wears. He is "the stronger than the strong." Satan is strong, but the Divine Master is stronger. "Who is this that cometh from Edom, with dyed garments from Bozrah? this that is glorious in his apparel, travelling in the greatness of his strength? I that speak in righteousness, mighty to save." The "Lion of the tribe of Judah" is equal to the task. Alone He descends into the arena. In the wilderness, in the first great encounter, He met his enemy alone, and He left him baffled and defeated. All through his ministry He cast out the devils by his word. They recognised Him as the Holy One of God; but on Calvary it was, as He entered into the darkness of the conflict, that the victory was complete. Then it was that He "destroyed him that had the power of death, that is, the devil; and delivered them who through fear of death were all their lifetime subject to bondage." Then it was that the prince of this world was cast out; then it was that He laid the foundation for all the individual victories which He since has gained in human souls.

The passage, however, goes on to speak of the assault that He delivers "when a stronger than he shall come upon him." Blessed be God, upon that citadel, so closely defended and guarded, armed to the very teeth, the Lord Christ does not hesitate to advance. He sends his trumpeters to summon the town. By the silver trumpets of invitation, by the rough blast of warning, He makes an entrance for his truth, and sullenly and slowly the usurper gives way. But the town is not only entered, the enemy is overcome. See the proofs of the victory He achieves. He strips him of the armour wherein he trusted; He causeth the shield of unbelief to fall; He strips away the coat of mail of secret sin; He takes off that iron breastplate of the hardened heart; He throws on one side all the prejudice and pride which so successfully and so long resisted his attack; and He finally divides the spoil. He takes away the heart of stone; He gives instead the heart of flesh. What is the transformation that He effects? The image is taken from the conqueror who, having reduced a fortress, proceeds to distribute among his victorious soldiers all the accoutrements, the treasures, and the stores found in the citadel. So here a mighty transformation takes place in the soul of the believer. Christ does not destroy the spoil, He divides it. The faculties and powers of men, ransomed and redeemed, are not to be destroyed; they are to be distributed. "What does it mean," asks one, "this division of the spoils? Is there a reference here to the Eternal Three? Are Father, Son, and Spirit represented as claiming the service of the soul they have redeemed, or is the reference to the different fields of service to which man's powers are to be devoted?" Whether this be so or not, this much is plain that the whole of the powers of ransomed man are to be laid at the feet of his Deliverer.

One word more only on this point. We read concerning Satan that he keeps his goods in peace. Blessed be God, when the transformation is effected, the greater and the stronger than Satan is also able to keep his goods in peace. I know of no proof of Satanic power so great as that recorded by the fact that the unconverted man is unconscious that he is in possession of an evil spirit. He believes he is his own master. "Who," he asks, "is lord over me?" The dominion is so complete that the peace, so to speak, is complete, too. Now, if where sin abounded grace did much more abound, may we not expect that the Victor can do for us, his willing servants, what Satan has done for his enslaved and blinded victims? He can so possess us, my brethren, that we may be in perfect peace. He has said in his Word, "Thou wilt keep him in perfect peace whose mind is stayed on Thee, because he trusteth in Thee." It is a glorious picture.

I close with a note of warning, for the Master closes this same parable, or history, whichever it is, with a note of warning too. He gives a caution to the saint. What is it? "He that is not with Me is against Me: and he that gathereth not with Me scattereth." He is saying to us, "Beware of compromise—beware of a half-and-half work in this matter of the full surrender of your being to Me."

If you are not wholly mine, Satan will come back. Mark those solemn words at verse 24: "When the unclean spirit is gone out of a man, he walketh through dry places, seeking rest; and finding none, he saith, I will return unto my house whence I came out." What, you say, do you think that text has any meaning for the saint? Yes, I do. No doubt its first application is to the case of a man who, though convicted, is not converted; but I cannot help feeling there is here a caution for the believer, too. "Satan does not act as if he believed in the final perseverance of the saints," as I once heard a Scotch Divine say. Not a bit of it; "he desires to have you, that he may sift you as wheat," and if he can find a foothold in the house, out of which he has been cast, he will return, rely upon it. Satan always takes possession of unoccupied spaces. I am struck by the fact that it is an unclean spirit who is specially mentioned. We are not told what the seven other spirits were that he brought back with him, but we are safe in concluding that they were unclean spirits too. Perhaps he who was cast out as an unclean spirit in his grossness came back in sevenfold power in more subtle and refined temptations, but an unclean spirit still. Such things have been before now. Remember the man of God who came from Judah. He was triumphant over the world and the flesh, but he fell a victim to the lie of the old prophet of Bethel (1 Kings xiii. 18). Take heed that ye be not deceived. Is it not written that "Satan is transformed into an angel of light"? (2 Cor. xi. 14). What is the remedy for a change so alarming? There is only one that I know of—it is to let God have all. You must let the flag of Calvary float from the floor to the roof, and from the turret to the dungeon of the castle of your being; it is to let God be in possession. Light expels darkness; health expels disease; and God will keep out Satan.

Failure and its Causes.

REV. F. B. MEYER, Leicester.

Our King Himself is here to-night. I long that everyone of you should lose sight of the servant and prostrate yourselves wholly before his Master—his King and yours. Let me ask you first, if your hearts and feet and hands and head are clean? Then, if they are, come for a moment into the most holy place, and let us adore Him. As you look up into his face, does He not look benignly and lovingly upon you? And yet, methinks that in this vast audience there are some who cannot meet his glance with pleasure. Why is it that you are not perfectly happy? Why is it that your Christian life has been so much a failure—sometimes like the summer in its beauty, and then like the winter with its biting cold? What is the cause of the failure of your Christian life—for that you are a Christian there is no doubt? I think that you world and your place in it. Perhaps some of you have read, at least, the title of a book, "The World and my Place in it." Are you quite sure that you understand your place in the world?

The great law of this world is gathered up in one word—service. Every fish in every stream; every bird in every woodland; every flower in every copse—all nature serves. The angels are ministering spirits; and our Lord Himself occupied the position of the true and chief Servant; for He came not to be ministered to but to minister. He took upon Him the form of a servant; and He tells us the day is coming when He will gird Himself and come forth to serve the men and women who have waited for his coming. Lift up your eyes for a moment and see the ideal servant of God—the Prince on whose escutcheon appears this motto, Ich dien ("I serve").

If you would know your true place, understand that you are a slave. I am addressing a congregation of emancipated slaves. Our origin was a slave origin. We were in bondage to Satan and to sin, but Jesus Christ bought us with his own most precious blood, and expects that we now should be what St. Paul in his Epistle to the Romans gloried in being, "Paul, the slave of Jesus Christ." When you truly understand that this universe is one great universe of service, and when you take up your true place in it as the slave of Jesus Christ, then the failure will pass out of your life, and you will rise up to the dignity, the glory, and the blessedness of an emancipated soul.

There are many spheres of service; I note them as I pass. There is first, in my esteem, the service of praise. "Praise Him, ye servants of God that stand in the house of the Lord." Praise is our loftiest duty; it is higher than giving thanks. Thanksgiving has in it something of self, for we thank God for that which we have received; but in praise we forget even the very gifts of God, and we take our stand side by side with seraphim, and prostrate ourselves before Him, and praise Him for what He is in Himself. (2) There is the service of duty. The kitchenmaid and shoeblack may equally serve Christ with Gabriel himself, if they only black the shoes and do the kitchen work for the love of God. There need be nothing common in this world, nothing menial, nothing small; for the worth of everything is the motive that prompts it. A man sweeping a crossing for the love of God, makes that action as great as the guiding of a planet by an angel from the same motive. There is service, therefore, of common life.

(3) There is also the service of suffering. Take it home to those of your dear ones who lie day and night in one posture, and long to be fed at such a Conference as this. Tell them they also serve who lie, and suffer, and wait. The Lord must have his passive virtues reflected to the gaze of angels in heavenly places. It is not enough to have only the active qualities of the Christian life revealed. He must have a great army of sufferers, who shall reveal the patience, gentleness, and sweet willingness to wait; so let the sufferers know that they serve. (4) There is also the service which comes from cultivating the gifts with which we have been entrusted. There is not one in this great audience but has been entrusted with some one gift at least, to use for the church; and it should be our province to find it out and use it to the uttermost. And, lastly, there is the service of witness-bearing. Not to make Christ King, for God the Father hath made Him so; not to convert the world; but to go through the world as heralds crying every-

Lord and Christ." That seems to be our fivefold sphere of service.

And now where is the failure? (1) Perhaps you are doing nothing in the busy rush of this great universe; you are inactive, idle, slothful. Do you remember that the sea which is called the Dead Sea is the one sea which receives everything and gives out nothing. There is no truer sign of incipient death than that you should be receiving everything from God, and giving out nothing in return. Why, that piece of ground that bears nothing is nigh to cursing. How nigh to cursing may some be! God has in his army fishermen, ploughers, sowers, reapers, lamplighters, lightbearers, builders, nurses, soldiers. Find your place amongst one of these and serve Him, and in serving Him begin to live as you should, not to be saved, but for love of Him who saved you. (2) It may be that you are serving unwillingly. There is a submission of must, and there is a submission of choice. There is a submission of a heifer unaccustomed to the yoke, but which is bound to carry it, though it chafes and frets sorely; and there is the yielding of the pliant animal that takes the yoke. What is God's plan for you I cannot tell; but God's purpose shall be fulfilled. Yet, if all the while you are murmuring and fretting and complaining, you shall still have to bear that yoke to the end of the furrow, but you will come sorely out of the conflict with bruised shoulders. How much wiser, therefore, no longer to sin against God's law, but to will God's will. And so shall you come to choose it, and to love that which at first was a yoke from which you shrank.

(3) But, granted that you are working willingly, there is a great mistake that sometimes comes in Christian work, against which we should guard ourselves, because it is opening the door to unhappiness and failure. Does not self too largely enter into all our schemes of service? For instance, do not we often work for our own glory? We like to see our names in the public prints. We are much more interested in the success of our class, our church, our sect, than we are consumed by one passion—the glory of God. We are not prepared to fail, if by our failure Christ will be even more glorified than by our success. If we see some other servant more successful than ourselves, we find it very hard to be glad; though it would be the easiest thing in the world to be glad, if we were only living for the glory of God. Is this not a constant difficulty with us? Does not the "I" rise up before us, and is not self constantly asserting itself?

Some of us find it a snare to be earnest, because sometimes we are tempted by our very earnestness to plume ourselves on the fact that we are more earnest than others. There is a temptation to the most spiritual, lest they should vaunt themselves upon their superior spirituality. Thus, sometimes in our most earnest efforts we are inspired by the thought of adding some laurels to our brow, and this introduces elements of unhappiness into Christian service.

And beyond this, does not self intrude in our laying down so constantly our plans of work? We say we will do this, that, or the other—never considering whether it be Christ's plan for us. When God called Moses to the Mount, He said, "See thou make all things according to the pattern I have shown thee"—every tassel, every fringe, every cord; and the man of God dared not use his own inventive faculty, for everything had to be received from God. Are we careful enough about this? There is a great difference between two schemes of work—work-us. How many there are of us who are working for the Master instead of allowing the Master to work through us! Surely the true thought of Christian work is to be an earthenware pitcher, or a clean mug, standing upon a shelf with a handle towards Christ for Him to use it if He sees fit; or to be as a pen in the hand of a ready writer, not writing its own thought, but pliant that the writer may use it as he will.

Then, also, self asserts itself in constantly prompting us to use our own strength. Most of us have too much strength for God to use us. If there is one subject more sad than another, it is to see how God takes up men, and, after a while, lays them down; takes up sections of the church and uses them, and then puts them aside; takes up some denomination and employs it for high service, and then that denomination falls into the shade. We sometimes wonder why this is. Is not the reason for it this, that the denomination, or the church, or the Christian worker has become too strong for God? When God wants to thrash a mountain and beat it small, He must have a worm for his purpose; and when God wants to bring back to himself the world that has fallen away, He chooses, not the Rabbis and the Gamaliels of Jerusalem, but twelve fishermen on the shore of the Sea of Galilee. Alas! that we do God's work for our own glory, and after our own plan and in our own strength; because we do so we are met by incessant failure.

How then shall we act to-night? If we are conscious that our life has been marred by failure and shortcoming, what is our duty? Surely our duty is to take our true place as the slaves of Jesus Christ. You will remember in Ps. cx. we are told that "Thy people shall be willing in the day of thy power"; the translation given in the Revised Version is, "Thy people shall be a freewill offering in the day of thy power."

Then what we all need to do is to look up into the face of our King. At the commencement we saw Him standing here; we looked up into his gentle and majestic face. We see still the marks of agony and death by which we were bought, and now as a great host of the redeemed slaves who belong to Him, but who have been robbing Him of the purchase of his own blood, some for five, ten, twenty, and forty years—who have been living for themselves, instead of living as his redeemed slaves—shall we not, one and all, quietly look up into his face and tell Him that from this very night we will be truly, only, and for ever his! Will you take the opportunity of so accosting Him? When you were first converted, you told Christ that from that moment you would be wholly his; but since then, though you have theoretically held that you were his servant, you have practically lived as you liked. You have spent your money as you chose; you have formed the plan of life that pleased you; you have furnished your houses and lived just in what locality your tastes liked. Practically, none of us, or very few, have been living as if we were really the bought, the purchased property, the slaves of Christ. Does it not become us to take our true position to-night? And again, I say, shall we not look up to Christ's face, and, with tears streaming from our eyes, shall we not confess to Him, with sorrow and grief, that we have been defrauding Him of his own, and have been living as if we were our own property; and then let us retrace our steps, and consecrate ourselves to Him? Oh! that there may be scores and hundreds of young men and young women especially, who, from this very hour, shall date the time when they shall begin to live as the purchased property of Christ, those who are not their own, but who are constrained by the love of the King to live no longer to themselves, but to Him who died for them, and who rose again. Will you, therefore, begin by yielding yourselves to Christ?

Next, consult his interests henceforth. A friend of mine was visiting a country house some time ago, and was interested to notice that in conversation the old butler, who had been in the family for many years, identified himself with everything in his master's ownership. "That is our house," said the old man. "This is our park land," said he. "Those are our flocks yonder." "These are our fruit gardens, and these are our children—bless them." He went forward to meet his master's children as if they were his own. Oh! when shall we become so identified with the interests of Christ that we shall have no thought for ourselves, but that our whole thought may be that what is his is ours, just as what is ours is his.

One thing more. When we shall have thus yielded ourselves to Christ, the very first thing He will do, will be to receive us; but the next thing will be to fill us. The moment you make the freewill offering of yourself to the Saviour, that moment He receives you. There may be no consequent emotion immediately; no rush of ecstacy, no lighting up of the soul. You will know it, not because any rush of joy has made you know it, but because you that you gave and reckon He took. So joy comes into the life that is taken up by the King. Just as in this hall to-night there is rushing in through every aperture the blessed cooling breeze, so into the heart there comes the gentle influence of the Holy Ghost. When the ditches are dug there is no sound of wind or rain, but the water percolates into them and fills them; and if you, to-night, shall present a surrendered, yielded spirit to the Son of God, He will receive it, and He will fill it, and He will fill it constantly, and then He will use you. Day after day, hour after hour, you shall wait upon his word, and He shall send you upon his most secret messages. He shall employ you in his most intimate work, and you shall not work for Him because He shall work through you.

The other day I heard of a great London artist whose father in early life had been the means of giving him the education which has made him what he is to-day, and it was told me that now he has brought his aged father to live with him in his mansion in this city. The occupation of this aged man in earlier life was moulding, and now that he has come to live with his son, he is still carrying on day by day the handicraft of his earlier life. The old man's great fear is lest his hand should lose its cunning and his eye its keenness. But every night when he has retired to rest his son spends at least an hour in the room in which he has been moulding all day; unknown to the father he goes over the old man's work, taking out all signs of failure, and bringing it up to the high pitch of perfection of which the old man's hand was capable in his best days. Is not that a parable of how, when our work has been done, and we are feeling that there has been so much failure and shortcoming at the very best, Jesus our King goes over it with his own hands, wiping out that which had been failure, and maturing and making it beautiful.

In closing, I would call upon my own soul, as upon yours, and would ask that this very night there may be at the foot of the cross a surrender of the whole being to Him, the reception of the Holy Ghost, and then a life of consecrated toil, which shall become a life of peace and bliss and perpetual summer, and of all the glory with which God can fill the human soul. Let this be our cry: "Oh, make of me as much as can be made during the short life I may yet have to live."

FRIDAY MORNING, JUNE 24.

The Glory of the God-Man.

REV. H. E. BROOKE.

OUR subject this morning is not the glory of God so much as the glory of the God-Man. You may see it brought before us in the opening text of those that have been set down for to-day —"Upon the likeness of the throne was the likeness as the appearance of a man above upon it." This was the appearance of the likeness of the glory of God. We have already been dwelling upon the grace and power of the King; and to-day we are brought to this wondrous subject—the glory of the King. May we approach it in that spirit in which God's Word calls upon us to approach such a theme. You will find in Ezekiel i. 26, and in part of ver. 28, these words:—

> And above the firmament that was over their heads was the likeness of a throne as the appearance of a sapphire stone: and upon the likeness of the throne was the likeness as the appearance of a man above upon it.
> As the appearance of the bow that is in the cloud in the day of rain, so was the appearance of the brightness round about. This was the appearance of the likeness of the glory of the Lord.

Bear in mind that the rainbow is the sign of the covenant; and the rainbow here is the sign of the covenant of justice having been satisfied. It was after God's justice was satisfied in his judgment upon the old world, after having swept away the ungodly with the flood of destruction, that He then revealed, in token of the covenant, the bow in the cloud. Remember that no amount of threatening cloud will ever cause a rainbow to appear. The rain must fall, and as the rain falls the bow is seen in the cloud. Now we look back to the day of rain when the floods of God's condemnation of sin fell upon the Substitute. In that rain is to be seen the brightness of the bow, which is to us a bow of hope and of covenant promise. "This is as the waters of Noah unto Me, saith the Lord; for as I have sworn that the waters of Noah should not go over the earth, so have I sworn that I will not be wroth with thee nor rebuke thee; for the mountains shall depart and the hills be removed, but my kindness shall not depart from thee, nor shall the covenant of my peace be removed, saith the Lord, that hath mercy on thee." Let us then take to ourselves this promise as we contemplate the glory of the King under the protection of the bow that is to be seen in the cloud in the day of rain.

Now, the person to whom our thoughts are to be directed is the Lord Jesus Christ. Before we speak of his glory, let us for a moment consider what we mean by the word "glory." It has already been said, and well said, that this word does not merely convey the thought of outward pomp, which is rather the recognition of glory, but glory points to merit—to worth which deserves outward recognition. The late manifestation of the outward pomp and earthly glory which has been bestowed upon our gracious Sovereign was not merely an outward display to which a sovereign may be entitled. I am sure that her heart must have felt that it was a tribute to a nation's sense of her worth during fifty years. So when we speak of the glory of the Lord Jesus, we must not merely think of the manifestation of the glory of the Second Coming. It is of his own Person, and inherent character and attributes as revealed to us in his sojourn here upon earth, that we should think—in fact, the moral glory of the Lord Jesus Christ. Remember that, owing to the fall, man has lost all claims to God's glory: "All have sinned, and come short of the glory of God." Man has failed to glorify God, and, therefore, God is unable to glorify man. You may remember the words spoken to a proud monarch—"God, in whose hands thy breath is, and whose are all thy ways, thou hast not glorified."

We cannot approach the subject of glory with any claim to it ourselves, but, thank God, One has appeared who has claimed the glory, and claimed it as his due. You will read of Him in John xvii., "I have glorified Thee on the earth. I have finished the work Thou gavest Me to do, and now, therefore, O Father, glorify Thou Me with thine own self, with the glory which I had with Thee before the world was." He claims it as his due, and so brings in that glory in human nature which Adam had lost. Look further in John xvii., "The glory which thou gavest Me I have given them." There is the free gift of the glory of the Lord Jesus Christ, given to all his faithful disciples and true believers. They are set free from any thought of having themselves to work out a merit or title to the glory, as He Himself wins the fight for them, conquers in the engagement, and then bestows upon them the glory as a free gift. Oh! that we may be all taken off the old ground of Adam to which we so cling, and may be enabled to cherish the hopes and expectations of those who have been brought by grace to a new ground, and that the ground of being joint-heirs with the Lord Jesus Christ.

These may seem to be simple truths. Somehow or other they seem in the present day to be sadly forgotten, and I think I may say on behalf of all believers that we wish them to be more deeply impressed upon our hearts, and that by the power of the Spirit of God we may approach thus the contemplation of Christ's glory as of a glory to which we are called—called by grace, without any merit of our own, but of which we are called to be partakers.

Now let me ask your attention to one of the most wonderful verses in the Bible, 2 Thess. ii. 14, which tells us what the Gospel calls us to: "Whereunto He called you by our Gospel, to the obtaining of the glory of our Lord Jesus Christ." Nothing less than that. The Lord Jesus Christ has won the glory by a hard-fought fight. He came down and carried out the purposes of the Father in that wondrous work by which He defeated Satan, the great enemy, by which He brought in everlasting righteousness in his own Person, by which He put away sin by the sacrifice of Himself, and, having won the victory, He has gone back to the glory, and He has it. As I understand the subject of this Conference, it is not so much that we should go on to the future, and so contemplate the revelation of the glory, as that we should realise what the world does not see, and consequently does not believe, that God hath glorified his Son Jesus, and that He is now at the right hand of the throne of the Majesty on high, enjoying the glory which He has won as the result of his work. And what we have to apprehend is this, that every true believer in Jesus is entitled to that glory by the free gift and grant made known through the Gospel and apprehended by faith. There is not one believer here who may not say, and of whom it may not be said, "Whereunto He called you by the Gospel to the obtaining of the glory of our Lord Jesus Christ." salvation. I say, "We call salvation," for I do not think it is what God calls salvation. I do not think that He contemplates anything short of a fully completed salvation. We are too apt to forget that there are three distinct stages of salvation: justification to begin with; sanctification to continue with; and glorification to crown with. In a very important sense none of us are yet saved. It struck me that one of the dangers of revival preaching when it was first introduced some thirty or forty years ago, was that souls were too quickly led to suppose that, having believed on Jesus, salvation was attained, and there was an end of it; whereas God's word makes that the starting-point of a course of which the final crown is full salvation. To my mind all those passages in Holy Scripture which speak of the "race" point to this:—"Know ye not that they which run in a race run all, but one receiveth the prize? So run, that ye may obtain. They do it to obtain a corruptible crown, but we an incorruptible" (1 Cor. ix.). "Not as though I had already attained or were perfected" (Phil. iii. 12). "Let us run with patience the race that is set before us, looking unto Jesus" (Heb. xii.). Again, where he is speaking of his own course, and that just before the end—"I have fought a good fight; I have finished my course; I have kept the faith" (2 Tim. iv. 7).

In all these passages the Apostle's object seems to be to stir up Christians to a sense of the fact that they are not yet in possession of the crown. I do not think it is intended to throw any doubt upon the final salvation of the children of God, but I do think it is a very solemn way of drawing the line of separation between genuine and spurious faith. I am not at all afraid of genuine faith failing, but I am very much afraid of spurious faith presuming. There is a vast amount of presumption nowadays from the fact that preachers of the Gospel are not sufficiently faithful to the Word of God in adhering to its way of setting forth salvation. But it is as Scriptural to say, "I am not yet saved," as it is to say, "I am saved." Thank God, we may say both. We may say, "I am saved," in the sense that I have believed the message, and have an assurance of the result, but the result has not yet come, and I am still in the flesh; still surrounded by dangers and difficulties of all kinds. I have malicious foes, and sad examples, on the right hand and on the left, of those who have begun well and have ended ill. Therefore it befits us all to speak with a modest hope, and surely not to be ashamed of the language the Apostle himself used, when he said, "Not as though I have already attained or am already made perfect: but I press on if so be that I may apprehend that for which I was apprehended by Christ Jesus" (R.V.).

I fear that one result of this teaching is that souls are very often drawn off from the contemplation of these passages as having anything to say to salvation. One often hears some of the passages to which I have referred treated in this way. I have heard it said that these have nothing to do with salvation, that the Apostle is speaking of a different thing altogether. He is speaking of a race which you may start for—or not, I suppose—after having been saved. Now, mark the effect of that! The very object of the Spirit of God in writing these passages is thus set aside, which is to arouse the flagging faith and energy of God's children, so as to lead them to run with patience the race that is set before them. We must not give occasion to any to say, "I am exertions to others." I commend this subject very earnestly to your thoughts. I know that upon these points Christians differ, and I would not presume to dogmatise or say that I must be right, but I do not think it would be faithful to say less than that the more I study God's Word the more I see that these passages have to do with salvation, and that it reveals a very perilous state of things in the present state of Christian life, when they are treated as though they had nothing to do with the subject. Of this crown which the Lord holds forth, He says, "Hold fast that which thou hast that no man take thy crown."

These are the encouragements to God's children to persevere in the course of self-denial and separation from the world, in godliness of life and holiness to which He has called us. Here we may rise above mere doctrine. I am very much afraid of the way of settling things by doctrine. When the Apostle Paul wanted to speak of his own assurance, he does not say "I know the doctrine of final perseverance and am persuaded," but he says, "I know in whom I have believed." He had to do with a person in whom he trusted. I do not make light of doctrine, God forbid. It is valuable to have statements of truth, the results of wisdom and experience of men of God of old, but I fear to take anything less than the Scriptural standard of personal trust in the personal Saviour. We are called to have to do with a person. He came from heaven in his own person, and gave his own person for us. He has gone back to heaven to make his person and his work the foundation of our faith, and the food of our souls. That is the meaning of the Lord's Supper. What do we mean by the bread and wine? We mean that our souls are to feed on the person and the work of the Lord Jesus Christ, and we are told to do this until He comes. And so our thoughts should go on to that day as the revelation of the glory, which we know is ours, if we are found then truly trusting in Him. These are days of great trial to faith. "That the trial of your faith, being much more precious than of gold that perisheth, though it be tried with fire, might be found unto praise and honour and glory at the appearing of Jesus Christ" (1 Pet. i. 7). One hears sometimes of faith as if it had no need to be tried. But this passage tells us a different story.

This is the thing in reference to which we are now on probation. We are not on probation as to whether we can be saved by works. That probation was long ago settled when Adam fell, and I believe from that day to this there has never been any probation as to whether man can be saved by his own doings. But the new probation of the Gospel is as to whether we are really trusting in Christ. We are made partakers of Christ "if we hold the beginning of our confidence steadfast unto the end." Does that mean anything? Does that mean that we are satisfied with a profession of conversion, made long ago or that forsooth we have made a confession at the penitent form? It means that this faith, if it be God-given, is a thing that God tries. All the events of our daily walk are intended to test the genuineness of our faith, and if our thoughts could be more filled with this, everyday life would become far more important in relation to the coming glory than it is to those who think they are saved when they are converted, and that the life of faith has nothing to say to salvation.

Let us on the one hand thank God for the exceeding great and precious promises which enable us to have full confidence in His faithful-will perform it unto the day of Jesus Christ." There can be no failure there. But do not let us presume, and do not let us treat this, as if every claimant to faith were already crowned. For the crowning day has not yet come. The Lord Jesus is coming again, and then those who are true believers in Him shall be crowned and made partakers of the glory of which the Apostle Peter speaks, as if he already partook when he said that he is a witness of the sufferings of Christ, and a partaker of the glory that shall be revealed. May we thus contemplate the glory of the Lord Jesus Christ, as given to us. When He bestows it as a free gift He gives it to us that we may accept it by faith, and hold it fast to the end.

A Glorious Inheritance.

REV. G. F. HEAD, HAMPSTEAD.

In the gathering of princes who rode round the royal carriage on Tuesday, there was one who was the heir to the royal glory which we beheld. When the Prince of Wales was a babe, he was the heir, not by virtue of anything he had done, but by virtue of his birth. As yet the full glory of that royal crown has not come to him, but, in due time, if God spares him, it will be his. I want you to realise with regard to ourselves that we too are heirs of glory, not by virtue of what we have done, but because we are born of the Spirit of God, begotten again unto a lively hope by the resurrection of Jesus Christ from the dead. The mere babe in Christ is as much an heir of God as those who have fought the good fight and almost finished their course.

I want to group together, in some measure, those verses which are placed upon the paper, in order that we may bear them away. There are four special privileges of those who are heirs of glory in Christ. We shall find, too, that there are four special responsibilities that seem to answer to the four privileges. First of all, we have in Ps. xlv. 13, "The King's daughter is all glorious within." The first privilege we have, then, is that of inner holiness. What does this refer to? The Church, the Bride, of course, is spoken of as "the King's daughter," as we see in the eighth verse of the Psalm. The bridegroom is spoken of as one having "all his garments smelling of myrrh, and aloes, and cassia, out of the ivory palaces, whereby they have made thee glad." The King's daughter is to be all glorious within—the same beauty within that He has without. So we must expect inner holiness. Very often we are too ready to be satisfied with a mixture within. We fancy a little of Christ and a little of the world may go together; a little of sanctification and a little of self. No, we are to be all glorious within. Every thought is to be brought into captivity to the obedience of Christ. How often thought takes to itself wings to fly away; even a Christian will indulge in vain imaginations, and then come back to find he has wandered. We are to be all glorious within also in the realm of will. Not so easy is it to take the will, and lay it at his feet, and say, "My meat is to do the will of Him that sent me, and to finish his work." "Not my will, but thine be done." It is only when we take that will and lay it at his feet, realising in some degree what He has done for us, not only in putting away the sin through his precious blood, but also in the baptism of the Holy Ghost. He comes and fills the heart until that heart is made his temple. Not only in the realm of thought and will, but also in all those countless little chambers of the heart, where so often a little thing here, or a little thing th is allowed to dwell. The Lord once said, when He was talking of prayer, that we were to enter into our closets and shut the door, and pray to the Father in secret, and the Father who seeth in secret will reward us openly, and in these secret places will make us all glorious within.

There is a second privilege, which you will find in Isa. lx. 1 and 19. I know that these verses have a primary reference to the future glory that the Lord will bring. I think the reason those who chose these texts placed them in the list was that we might get the spiritual thought to-day out of them all. This second privilege is increasing light. You will notice how there is the light given to us—"Arise, shine." What we want every day is more and more to feel that we do not stand still, and that we are to go on increasing, ever attaining unto the measure of the stature of the fulness of Christ. As the babe grows up we may claim as our privilege increasing light. The things that seemed to have at first a measure of light shining upon them, when we come to deeper knowledge are seen in a clearer light. We feel we are not so dependent upon little things. When climbing some mountain side you put your foot on one ledge and now upon another; you lay hold of some tree and again of some shrub; but you merely do so to enable you to climb, and as you rise higher the glory of the whole view breaks in upon your vision. We climb, and as we do so we may use these little helps the Lord gives. But as we climb higher, and the light breaks in more and more upon us, we leave these behind; so as Jesus Christ is revealed more and more to our souls we find that He is the all in all. He is the One in whom we are complete. As faith is tried more and more we find that we fall back on Him, and that He becomes everything to the soul. As the increasing light breaks in upon us we find that truths come out of his Word of which we scarcely had any knowledge before. The babe in Christ just learns justification by faith; then the words concerning sanctification by faith become clearer; the future glory breaks in more and more, and that which is the sunshine to-day seems to fade away before the grander light of to-morrow.

One of our privileges is this, that we may have increasing light through the fuller baptism of the Holy Ghost. Let us not stand still. The Apostle says, "When I was a child, I thought as a child, I spake as a child: but when I became a man, I put away childish things." So in spiritual things let us realise this. Let me seek now to take my place as the full-grown man in Christ Jesus. One into whom the full light has come, so far as it can be given to fallen nature. Then I shall realise the fulness of this gift granted to me, and know the glory I can claim.

There is a third privilege, which is spoken of in Isa. lxii. 3, "Thou shalt also be a crown of glory in the hand of the Lord." We read that there are many crowns upon the brow of Jesus. He wears the crown upon the brow of victory over death, and victory over Satan. Through death He destroyed him that had the power of death—that is the devil. He wears the crown of universal dominion. He wears the crown of power over nature. In fact, there are countless crowns upon that brow, but this passage does not speak of that. It says, "Thou shalt also be a crown of glory in the hand of the Lord." That crown in the hand tells first of all of nearness. There is the regalia in our Tower, and our children go and strain their eyes to look at it. They look at the royal diadems and sceptres kept under lock and key. How vast the distance between Her Majesty on the throne at Windsor and the regalia; but not so with those who can claim the privilege of the crown of glory. Had the Queen on Tuesday borne a crown in her hand, or we should have felt it was precious to her, and we should have said, "How she takes care of it"; but the Lord says that is the privilege which He gives to his children. It tells of wondrous nearness and safety. If I am in his hands, can anyone pluck me from his grasp? Paul says that he is persuaded that neither life nor death, nor principalities, nor powers, nor any other creature can separate him from the love of God which is in Christ Jesus our Lord. That is because, in his wondrous love, God has made us children of glory, and put us as a crown of glory into the hand of the Lord.

It not only speaks of nearness, but of his wondrous grace. A crown of glory! You say to yourself, What, am I a crown of glory? Am I not unworthy of such a name? I have so many infirmities, so many weaknesses, such coldness, such feebleness in prayer—I feel as though I never dared to claim the privilege of being a crown of glory in the hand of our Lord; but He gives you the glory. In one of the great empires of Europe there is the iron crown of Lombardy. You know what gives it its glory. Who would care to have an iron crown if he were king. You would say, let me have one of gold, of precious gems, and not the baser metal. Yes, but what gives the iron crown such glory? When Napoleon claimed to be crowned, he said, "I will have the iron crown," and he took it and placed it upon his head. It derived its greatness from the fact that it was used by Charlemagne. When you and I cannot claim the privilege of being a crown in the hands of the Lord remember this, it may be you are the iron crown. The very fact that the Lord has taken you and glorified you in one sense already and made you the temple of his Spirit—it is He that gives you the glory, so that you need not fear.

There is another passage we have in Rev. xxi. 11: "Having the glory of God: and her light was like unto a stone most precious, even like a jasper stone, clear as crystal." This is the glory of future perfection. You will see, in the passage which has been quoted, evidently reference is made to that future glory, that wondrous glory when the Bride shall descend from heaven: whether you take it as the Bride, or as the new Jerusalem, I think it is a future glory that is coming. We will take it with regard to the Bride having made herself ready, and descending from heaven ready for the Bridegroom. You will notice that the promise is that then it shall be so brought—just like the jasper stone. The jasper was a sort of crystal, and is not the jasper with which we are familiar, which is an opaque stone. So the promise is, "Her light was like unto a stone most precious, even as a jasper stone, clear as crystal."

Do we not long for that clearness now? How much opacity there is among us. When the glory of the Lord seeks to shine through us, we are like many a crystal—we seem to have something which has stayed the passage of the light. Now it is that terrible snare of egotism—we must talk about ourselves, and our own work, and what we have done. Perhaps it is the love of self, or of the world, or of something that seems to stay the glory as it is flowing through us. Men outside look at us, and say, "Is that altogether bright? Is that the character that you would call Christian?" We groan and this lack of brightness. What is the promise? It is one of future perfection—the promise that in that day, when we stand as the Bride, there shall be nothing of the old sinfulness left, and nothing of that which mars the beauty of to-day. We shall be clear as the crystal. We shall stand forth and see the Bride, and the glory of the Lord shall flow through us to the whole universe. What a glorious prospect! You remember how the disciples in Luke ix. manifested the little flaws within the jasper. They tried to cast out devils, but could not, because of their unbelief. Then they wanted to bring down fire from heaven; then they rebuked one because he was casting out devils, and because he followed not after them. Then they wanted to know who should be greatest. There we have so many proofs that the crystal was not clear. When the baptism of the Holy Ghost came, the crystal was clearer; but, as we find at Antioch, the crystal was not perfectly clear in Peter. We, however, anticipate the time when we shall be clear as crystal, and therefore we send up the cry again and again, "Even so, come, Lord Jesus—come quickly."

I am not going to keep you long upon the our responsibilities. First of all, the King's daughter was to be all glorious within. Her raiment also was of wrought gold. There is your responsibility; that the outside garment shall all be of wrought gold. The wrought gold is the real garment, like the Master and King, and, therefore, while we kneel and pray that the heart may be holy, pure, and Christ-like, we want to go forth, and let the character be wrought gold, that, when the world sees it, it may say, "He is like unto his Master." We want to take Jesus as our example. We want to be known far and wide as the most self-denying, the most self-restrained, the most tender, the most brave, the most noble. This is putting on the outer garment. The second responsibility we have in Is. lx. 1, "Arise, shine, for thy light is come." Others are to see the light. When the Lord had spoken those wonderful words in the Sermon on the Mount, and told the disciples the different characteristics of his children, He brought them to this point, "Ye are the light of the world," and, if the light, ye must shine. "Ye are the salt of the earth," and, if the salt, ye must be pungent. Take care that wherever we go the light is never placed under a bushel, but is streaming far and wide, that others may glorify our Father which is in heaven.

The third responsibility is that given to us in Ps. cxlv. We have the thought of nearness with regard to the crown. In that Psalm, at the 11th verse, we read, "They shall speak of the glory of thy kingdom, and talk of thy power." Let your lips be unsealed, and out of the fulness of an overflowing heart, realising what Christ is to you, tell it abroad and everywhere what the Lord has done for you, how the Lord keeps you, and holds you. The last of these responsibilities we have is in Rev. xix. When the Bride descends and comes prepared for the Bridegroom, the shout is heard in the first word, "Alleluia." To-day, in the midst of the difficulties of the world, and the testing of our faith, in the midst of the battle of the world, the flesh and the devil, our responsibitity is to catch the key-note of that song. Let us never stay our word of praise. Then shall we be ready in that wonderful day to join in the everlasting song, "Unto Him that loved us, and washed us from our sins in his own blood, and hath made us kings and priests unto God and his Father, to Him be glory and dominion for ever and ever."

FRIDAY AFTERNOON.

The Lord's Supper.

REV. A. N. MACKRAY, Croydon.

It becomes us, according to the solemn counsel of Peter, to sanctify Christ in our hearts as Lord. This has been the great purpose and endeavour of our present Conference, and now we are gathered at the Lord's table. It is of the Lord's Supper we are about to partake; it is the Lord's body that we discern in this commemoration, and it is the Lord's death we do show forth. This, it is well to notice, is the only name which the Apostle gives to Jesus throughout his narrative of the institution of the Supper, just as it was the name by which He was invoked in the first common prayer of the faithful addressed to Christ after his ascension. Now none can call Jesus Lord, save by the Holy Ghost, for it is He who moves upon the heart, who is the Divine voucher of the Lordship, into which are gathered all that grace, and power, and glory which are the fruit of his cross and passion. This is the Lord's table. None may appoint ordinances in his Church, save the Lord, for none but the Lord would willingly accept such a sacrament as a love token. "This do in remembrance of Me." He says He would be in our worship, as in our life and love, what the sun is in our sky. Let the Passover memorial go, let the rites, and ceremonies, and victims disappear. They have served their day. He has come and fulfilled them all.

It is the Lord's table. And how tender and sweet are the proofs of that grace and power and glory gathered into His Lordship. Let usgo back in thought to that upper chamber in Jerusalem and to the first communicants. How Divine is the prevision in the appointment of this simple rite on the night of his betrayal! And who but the Lord could have had the calm assurance that his followers would keep this loving memorial of his ignominious death, would make a sacrament of his shame, and, through all the rolling centuries, would partake at a common table of that which sustains our earthly body as tokens of how He sustains and nourishes the whole spiritual being in that communion instituted by Him? The prevision has been amply justified. In the Lord's table we have proofs of his Lordship. There never have been wanting willing hands to do this in remembrance of Him, though the forfeit was life itself. Let us not be occupied overmuch with thoughts of comfort, peace, and joy in the things of this life. Let us make Him the joy of our service. We are here in view of the supreme Lordship of Christ. We want once again to bear our part in witnessing to this great fact. In this great assembly we are knit together by nothing but by the bands of a common faith. Our meeting thus is an evidence that we accept Jesus as Lord and God.

Yes, it is the Lord's table to which we have come. We are all living witnesses of His Lordship. Paul describes himself as everywhere led about as a captive in bonds to grace His triumph. It was once said, and the confession may be made by every one of us, only in a different spirit to that which prompted the words, "Oh Galilean, Thou hast conquered." He has established in the secret life-story of each one his personal love. He has by his wonderful dealings made each one willing to be his in the day of his power, by that very love Divine which he inspires, but which fills our own hearts. We do want to bring everything into captivity to his will. And some of us are glad to say, with the immortal Dreamer, to the old tyrant who long oppressed us, "I have let myself to another, even to the King of princes; and to speak the truth, O devouring Apollyon, I like his service, his wages, his commands, his condition, and his country, better than thine. Leave off to persuade me further. I am his servant, and will follow Him."

We are here to proclaim that it is his death which has given Him the Lordship. The universal sovereignty is found in the infinite sacrifice. The pierced hand has won and wields the royal sceptre. His heart was broken in sorrow for my sin. To this end Christ both died and liveth again, that He might be Lord both of the dead and the living. Who can tell what righteousness and truth, what grace and glory, are gathered up in that Lordship for the possession of which Christ willingly identified Himself with us in all our guilt, and in the wrath which was its penalty, and which pierced through his soul, even unto death? It is the Lord's table, and it can be proclaimed only in the broken bread and outpoured wine. We must adore, for we can never comprehend the mystery of the love which would not, could not obtain the kingdom, except by the sacrifice of Himself. And if this has seemed a mystery—and it often has—has it not an answering mystery in the ways of the King with other people? Is not that what it ought to be? There is rest for us whose hearts are burdened with the weary and heavy weight of all this unintelligible world. There is rest in a Saviourship and Lordship that has been won by toil and tears, by love and blood.

It is the table of the Lord, who, by his death and resurrection, became Lord of the dead as well as the living. We are not solitary worshippers here to-day. We all partake of one life, are members of one body, and belong to one family. We can think of some who have sat often at the table of the Lord in Mildmay, and, if I mistake not, at Barnet also, whose faces now we see not. How this place must be filled with saintly presences, seeing that His Lordship covers the blessed dead whom we remember now, and with whom we have worshipped. He is Lord of the dead—their type, their pattern, their rule. It is all precisely as the Lord wishes it to be up yonder. Is not this enough for us, to know that the blessed dead are in his immediate presence and glory? This, surely, is enough to confirm our faith and life. Besides, unworthy though we are, by the condescension of the King we are his guests; we have our maintenance from the King's palace, and there is enough for each and for all for evermore—there is rest for the weary, comfort for the mourner, companionship for the lonely, and succour for the tempted; recovery for the fallen, and a new departure for all who have lagged and loitered by the way. Yet it is Himself we want. It is the table of the Lord, and we must try to get into the glory of his Saviourhood that we may surrender more absolutely to the power of his Cross.

Follow me as I read some words of self-dedication, written by John Howe two hundred years ago, and which as a young man I copied out and used for my good:—

> Thou Lord of my life and hope, who hast so long striven with me, so often and earnestly pressed me hereto, so variously dealt with me to make me understand thy merciful design, who seekest to rule with no other aim and interest but that Thou mayest save, and who hast founded thy dominion in thy blood, and didst die and revive that Thou mightest be Lord of the living and the dead, and therefore my Lord, accept now my self-resigning soul. I make free surrender of myself; I bow and submit to thy sovereign power; I fall at the footstool of thy throne, Thou Prince and King of kings, who hast loved sinners and washed them from their sins in thy blood. I glory in thy conquest. Thou hast overcome. I will from henceforth be no longer mine, but thine. I am ready to receive thy commands, to do thy will, to serve thy interests, to sacrifice my all to thy Name and honour. My whole life and being are for ever thine.

The memorials of the dying love of Christ having been partaken of, Mr. MACKRAY continued:—Let me urge you to apprehend and maintain the connection which exists between the observance of this Christian rite and the constant performance of Christian duty. The average Christian is too content with an experience in which faith and love, devotion and practice blend together as little as do the waters of the yellow Arve and the blue Rhone at their confluence below Geneva. There is an intimate connection between devotion and practice. It holds that worship to be spurious which is not seen in work, and it requires a life of such true blamelessness and innocence as that it needs all the aid of heavenly graces for the attainment thereof. The Supper of the Lord is to help us. We are preachers of the death of Christ in this communion, and we cannot better show the power of this in our own life than in the service we render and the trials we endure for his sake. No one can show a bill of divorcement between the exercise of spiritual powers and the drudgery of common, everyday life; and what God has joined together let no man put asunder. This sacramental communion with our Lord is to be the pledge and pattern of our daily intercourse with Him, and it is because life at its highest and best consists in fellowship with his suffering that we rejoice to proclaim his death in the breaking of bread, always bearing about in our body the dying of the Lord Jesus that the life also of Jesus may be made manifest in our body.

The dying of Jesus means, first of all, obedience to the will of God. In man's obedience there was a flaw or crack, growing, deepening, broadening, till it became perfect in the obedience of Christ. And we bear about in the body the manifestation of the death of Jesus, first of all, as we are loyal to God, and faithfully respond to his tests, and are simply, unquestioningly, and very often silently obedient. The dying of Jesus—it is the death of the Son. For this purpose the Son of God was manifested, that He might destroy the works of the devil, and his dying and living are to be shown forth in us. In so far as his power is manifest in us, it wounds, weakens, kills the lusts of the flesh; worldly ambition is consumed, and the soul is moved to protect others from wrong, to relieve the oppressed, to recover the fallen, and to save the lost. The dying of the Lord Jesus means more—it means the triumph of a holy, self-sacrificing, invincible life. Christ loved the Church, and gave Himself for it: He loved me, and gave Himself for me. And we are to bear about in our body the dying of the Lord Jesus. In so far as the love of Christ possesses us, our lives will be nobler and more beautiful.

But who is sufficient for this life of obedience, this holiness of life? How does the Lord's Supper help me to surrender to my Father's will, to maintain a constant conflict with the foe? First of all, in the Lord's Supper there is a lifting up, and making exclusively prominent the work and person of the Lord Jesus Christ. From the beginning to the end of life, in place of complete rules of conduct, it lays me upon the living, throbbing heart of Christ, and the love that is thus generated fills my whole soul. It is at the table of the Lord that we feel the force of the difference between a truly Christian life and all ethical distinctions.

Then if thus we are bearing about in the body the dying of the Lord Jesus, that life of Jesus is also to be made manifest in our body; in other words, if all the redeeming and regenerating forces of humanity have their focus in Christ, how should we be helped in proclaiming his redeeming and atoning love. Do all in the name of Jesus—that is the broad and comprehensive law of all Christian service.

Let me say a word now as to the social character of the Lord's Supper. This is a communion in memorial of one body as well as of one Lord. We eat of one loaf; we are partakers of one Body, and are members of one Church. How lonely life comes to be, to some as they advance along the way. Our individual labour seems so fragmentary; and what avails it thatI, in my little country parish, seek to bear about in my body the death of our Lord? But there is no such thing as isolation in Christian work, nor is there waste in Christian suffering. Even the imperfection of the individual member is necessary to the body.

Finally, there is a prophetic element in all true Christian life, and we are saved by hope. We are all Second Advent Christians at the Lord's table, and we will keep the feast till the King comes; and the kingdom cannot come till the King has come. Let us gird up the loins of our minds; let us be sober and vigilant, and then shall we enter with joy into the Lamb's great feast.

FRIDAY EVENING.

Christ's Communicable Glory.

REV. GEORGE C. GRUBB.

We all know the old story of St. Augustine: how, when the saint was very much troubled in mind about the doctrine of the Trinity, his cogitations much disturbed him. As he was walking by the sea-shore he saw a little boy taking water up in a shell and carrying it to a hole that he had made in the sand. "What are you doing that for, little boy?" asked the saint. "Oh, father," said the child, "I am going to put all the sea into that hole." The saint was just going to say, "Silly little boy," when a lightning-flash of conviction went to his own mind, and the voice within said, "Silly man, what art thou attempting to do? Dost thou think to fathom the incommunicable Deity and essential attributes of the great God?" It seems to me that I am that silly child to-night—that I, in one half-hour, have to set before you the glory of our King, eternal, immortal, invisible, dwelling in the light unto which no man can approach. Let us look at the subject very simply. I am only going to try and say a few simple words to-night as a little child. Firstly, What is the glory of our King? and, secondly, How may I get that glory into me?

What, then, is the glory of our King? Nothing is harder than a definition. We would not have time to trace the many meanings of the word translated "glory" in the New Testament. Suffice it to say that in profane Greek it denoted the recognition which anyone received. It comes to me in the appearance that commands recognition, and then it comes to me in splendour and brilliance. By a very ancient writer, Philo, a good definition of "the glory of God" is given. He says, "The glory of God is the fulness of the good a definition of "glory" as ever I have seen. It follows from that, that Christ, who is the Revealer, must be the "glory of God;" and also it follows from that, that we can only see the glory of God in proportion as we reveal Christ to the world. I offer you a very simple Bible-reading on "the glory of Christ as a servant, and the glory of Christ as the Son of God." I will merely mention the texts, and allow the innate glory of each precious jewel to shine and flash upon you by its own power.

Let us turn, of course, to the Gospel by Mark, as the Gospel of service; and let us notice something of the glory of our Lord Jesus Christ as a perfect servant. What is to be the result of this Conference, if it is not to be a renewed service, a renewed flame of devotion upon the altar of the heart? The Conference will be a huge failure, if we do not individually learn how to serve. Notice, then, the marvellous use of the word "immediate" in the Gospel by Mark. The word occurs eighty times in the New Testament and forty of those occurrences are found, in Mark. Notice the glory of the Lord's immediate obedience. I hope that one result of this Conference will be, that each Christian here will make up his and her mind to obey immediately. Oh that we may learn that verse in Ps. cxix., "I made haste and deferred not to keep thy commandments." God has been showing you some commandments that you have deferred to keep. He has shown me some, and I doubt not but that He has shown you some, too—some commandments that you have deliberately turned your eyes away from. Go out from this Conference Hall to immediately do his commandments. You will find that the word "immediately," in connection with Christ, is used in regard to his words, in the way, in the house, as He sat at meat, in the Temple. You may enlarge that for yourself.

Notice the glory that resided in the hands of Jesus Christ. We read He took them (namely, the little children) up "into his arms." Only Mark tells us that. Then when they were disputing amongst themselves, He took a little child "in his arms," and set him in their midst. Then He took Simon's wife's mother "by the hand," and lifted her up. Again, we read that He took the blind man "by the hand." I hope we will be humble enough to take blind beggars by the hand. I think we would see something of the glory of Christ if we only humbled ourselves to have fellowship with the blind beggar. Again, the Lord saw the child with the dumb spirit, and He took him, "by the hand," and lifted him up.

What is the spiritual lesson that we are to learn from that? There was a time in the history of the Church when the laying on of the Apostles' hands could communicate the Holy Ghost. The Apostle Paul was able to say, "Neglect not the gift that is in thee (the Holy Ghost) that is given thee by the laying on of my hands." There was a time when the very shadow of the Apostle possessed healing power. Are these days gone? I hope that we need not write "Ichabod" over the Church. If the Spirit of God is in our midst, then He can give healing power into our hands. We need, when the preaching is concluded, and the pulpit is empty, to go down to the pew, and lay the loving touch upon those whom we wish to bless. We must keep in touch with those to whom we speak. A great many ministers have almost a barren ministry, notwithstanding that their sermons are very nice and well prepared, because they have not the touch of sympathy with their congregation.

Notice, also, in Mark, the glory of Christ's about the looks of Jesus. We read in Mark iii., "They watched Him, whether He would heal on the Sabbath day; that they might accuse Him. And when He had looked round about on them with anger, being grieved for the hardness of their hearts, He saith unto the man, Stretch forth thine hand." There is such a thing as righteous anger; there is such a thing as being angry and sinning not. There is such a thing as the "wrath of the Lamb." What judgment there was in the angry look of Christ. Yes, we must not soften down the words, "He looked round about on them with anger." Christ will be angry one day; indeed, He will. A great many people do not believe it in these days, though. I would not like to meet the angry look of my Saviour. Then, again, in Mark iii. 34: "And he looked round about on them which sat about Him, and said, Behold my mother and my brethren! For whosoever shall do the will of God, the same is my brother, and my sister, and mother." Can we all meet the look of Christ to-night, because we are doing his will? In Mark viii. 33 we read: "When He had turned about and looked on his disciples, He rebuked Peter, saying, Get thee behind Me, Satan: for thou savourest not the things that be of God, but the things that be of men." Peter wanted to rob Christ of the cross—the cross which is the glory of Christ, which is the glory of every follower of the Lamb. "This shall not be unto Thee, Lord." "Get thee behind Me, Satan!"

A certain young man once came to the Lord Jesus. He seemed so earnest, and he knelt down before Christ, and said, "Good Master, what shall I do that I may inherit eternal life?" Jesus looked upon him and loved him. I want every young man here to-night to settle it in his own heart that Jesus loves Him, and I want that love so to conquer your soul that you may "forsake all and follow Him"; that you may hear the same words that Christ said to that young man when He looked upon him, "Come, young man, take up the cross and follow Me." We are told "he went away sad, for he had great possessions." You may imagine the sadness which dwelt in the heart of that young man when I tell you that the same Greek word is used there as is used to describe the agony of Christ in Gethsemane. No one ever goes gladly away from the Lord Jesus Christ. If you determine to reject Him you will be very sad. Young men, let Him have his own way with you, and you will never be sorry for it. "And Jesus turned and looked on Peter, and Peter remembered the word which Jesus had spoken, and he went out and wept bitterly."

I expect there are several backsliders here to-night—perhaps a great many. I hope that the Lord will give you a look before you leave the Hall. The Church is ruined because of the multitudes of backsliders. Now, brethren, notice that there may be a great deal of true service in a look. When words utterly fail the look may accomplish the eternal purpose of God in Christ Jesus. I remember being much more struck by a look that I once got from a very holy servant of God than by anything he ever said to me.

Lastly, I want you to notice, in the Gospel by Mark, the glory of Christ's grief and sighs. "Oh," you say, "I did not think there was any glory in grief and sighs." Yes there is. We read, "He was grieved because of the hardness of their heart." And we read in a certain Psalm, "Reproach hath broken my heart." What reproaches He went through! "Is not that the has a devil, and is mad." "He casteth out devils by Beelzebub, the prince of the devils." "Thou that savest others, save Thyself, and come down from the cross;" and one of the thieves that were crucified with Him cast the same in his teeth: "Come down from the cross, that we may see and believe." Those Pharisees did no know that when they said that they were praying for the damnation of the world. O Christian, when the world believes in you, you may be perfectly certain that you have come down from the cross on which the Lord placed you. As long as you stay on your cross, the world will think very little about you.

Now, the glory of the sighs of Christ. In Mark vii. 32, we have the sigh of sympathy with the wretchedness of that poor deaf and dumb creature that lay helpless before Him. I hope your hearts are moved with the sigh of sympathy for suffering. And there was another sigh that Christ once gave (Mark viii. 12). The Pharisees came forth and began to question with Him, seeking of Him a sign from heaven, and "He sighed deeply in his spirit, and said, Why doth this generation seek after a sign? verily I say unto you, there shall no sign be given unto his generation." This was the sigh over his rejected favours; the sigh over hardened hearts; the sigh over those who were rejecting the counsel of God against themselves. If you serve your Saviour, truly, you will often have to give these two sighs—the sigh over the suffering around you, and the sigh over the rejection of the Lord Jesus Christ. The Church does not like sighing in these days. Once upon a time two men came to Christ, and said, "Master, we would that Thou shouldest do for us whatsoever we ask Thee." "What is that?" said the Lord. "We would sit, one on thy right hand and the other on thy left hand, in glory." "Ye know not what ye ask," said Christ. "Are ye able to drink of the cup that I drink of, and to be baptized with the baptism that I am baptized with?"

In asking God to show you his glory, as Mr. Fox prayed this evening, you do not know what you ask. I think it would be almost better for some of you to take back that prayer, because I do not think you really want to see the glory of God. You cannot see the glory of God down here unless you are willing to drink of the cup that He drank of, and to be baptized with the baptism that He was baptized with.

Let us go on from Mark, and turn over to the Gospel by John, to see a few rays of the glory manifested by the Son of God. In John vii. 37, we have a marvellous statement: "In the last day, that great day of the feast, Jesus stood and cried, saying, If any man thirst, let him come unto Me, and drink. He that believeth on Me, as the Scripture hath said, out of him shall flow rivers of living water. But this spake He of the Spirit, which they that believe on Him should receive; for the Holy Ghost was not yet given; because that Jesus was not yet glorified." The first way in which we can glorify the Son of God is by the reception of the Holy Ghost, the satisfaction of the soul's thirst. I hope there are a great many thirsty souls here to-night. I believe with all my heart that the blessed Christ can satisfy fully the need of every human soul. But He cannot satisfy you unless you seek to glorify Him. Then you may expect a transfigured life very shortly. Look at John xi. 4: "This sickness is not unto death, but for the glory of God, that the Son of God might be glorified thereby." Has God cast any of your Well, I hope you will exhort them to seek the glory of God through that sickness, so that they may learn the power of Him who is the Resurrection and the Life; and if it pleases Him to raise them from their beds of sickness, they may come forth to walk without grave clothes, and to stand themselves "in the liberty wherewith Christ has made them free." How many Christians can bless God for sickness!

Turn to John xii. 16: "These things understood not his disciples at the first; but when Jesus was glorified, then remembered they that these things were written of Him, and that they had done these things unto Him." What things? Christ riding upon an ass to Calvary. "Rejoice greatly, O daughter of Zion; shout, O daughter of Jerusalem: behold, thy King cometh unto thee: He is just, and having salvation; lowly, and riding upon an ass, and upon a colt the foal of an ass." "These things understood not his disciples at the first." At conversion, very few Christians understand the glory of the coming King. They do not understand the coming of the lowly King to them riding upon an ass. They want to walk by themselves; they are not willing to glorify God by dying. "Certain Greeks among them came up to worship at the feast: the same came therefore to Philip, which was of Bethsaida of Galilee, and desired him, saying, Sir, we would see Jesus." Jesus' name is glorified when sinners seek to see Him. It is such a happy thing when a sinner really desires to see Christ. Probably there are some unconverted people here to-night who have never seen Jesus Christ at all. Let the desire rise in your heart, and say, "Lord Christ, open my blind eyes that I may see. At present I see no beauty in Thee that I should desire Thee, but I do want to see thy beauty. There are so many around me who tell me that Thou art beautiful; I would like to see something of thy beauty, too." Then the hour is come that the Son of Man should be glorified. But remember, if you wish to see Christ, it means death to self. "Except a corn of wheat fall into the ground and die, it abideth alone; but f it die, it bringeth forth much fruit."

In John xiii. 31, 32, we read: "Therefore, when Judas was gone out, Jesus said, Now is the Son of man glorified, and God is glorified in Him. If God be glorified in Him, God shall also glorify Him in Himself, and shall immediately glorify Him." Jesus is glorified when the traitor spirit is cast out from amongst his disciples. There are a great many disciples who have never had the traitor spirit cast out of them. They are betraying the interests of Christ's kingdom, and when you betray the interests of your Sovereign it is equivalent to betraying your Sovereign Himself. God grant that we may have such a revelation of the glory of Christ that all hypocrisy and evil-speaking will die out of us. "And shall immediately glorify Him." How was Christ immediately glorified? He was glorified immediately by the agony in Gethsemane; He was glorified by Peter's denial of Him; He was glorified by the rejection of the high priest and scribes; He was glorified by that vesture of blood on Calvary; He was glorified by being lifted up between heaven and earth—a spectacle to men, angels, and devils. What a strange, unnatural glory, was it not? Do you wish to have glory? That is glory. When the traitor spirit is cast out of you, then you will probable become a spectacle to men, angels, and devils. Glory leads to the cross.

Notice, lastly, in John xvi. 14, "He," that is receive of mine, and shall show it unto you." I have set before you things that seem very sorrowful, and perhaps you say, "Dear me, my heart sickens within me. If you mean glory by all that, I am afraid I am very doubtful whether I wish for that glory." Here is something that may encourage your heart. "The Holy Ghost shall take of mine and shall show it unto you." "Eye hath not seen, nor ear heard, neither have entered into the heart of man, the things which God hath prepared for them that love Him. But God hath revealed them unto us by his Spirit." No one, except he who has experienced it, can tell the glory that can dwell in the soul of that man to whom the Holy Ghost reveals the Lord Jesus Christ. It is a glory that the world knows nothing of, and can know nothing of; for Jesus will manifest Himself unto us in a way that He will not manifest Himself unto the world. Only the overcoming soul can know it. "To him that overcometh will I give to eat of the hidden manna, and will give him a white stone, and in the stone a new name written, which no man knoweth saving he that receiveth it." Oh, the glory of the vision of God.

How am I to get the glory into me? First of all by faith. "Said I not unto thee that if thou wouldst believe thou shouldst see the glory of God?" (John xi. 40). The same simple faith which you made use of in the moment of your conversion you must make use of in order to see the glory of God, and have that glory revealed to your individual spirit. You must believe that the glory is for you; that Christ means to manifest Himself to you. You must not be surprised if he does. Do not shrink from the manifestation. Then you will get the glory also (John ii. 11) by obedience. We read that Christ manifested forth his glory at the marriage supper in Cana of Galilee; but what was the condition upon which He manifested his glory? His mother said unto the servants, "Whatsoever He saith unto you, do it." That was the condition. You may go to the Mildmay Conference, to the Keswick Conference, and the Glasgow Conference, and you may sing the hymns, and you may pray and groan in your prayers, and ask for glory, and not a ray will come. Why? Because you have not the smallest intention of altering your life when you go out of the door. God, forgive us for our hypocrisy. Indeed, when I am saying this I am speaking to myself too.

Another way in which you will get glory into your soul is by suffering with Christ. "Our light affliction, which is but for a moment, worketh for us a far more exceeding weight of glory." "If ye be reproached for the name of Christ, happy are ye; for the spirit of glory and of God resteth upon you." What a privilege it is to be reproached for the name of Jesus Christ! "Blessed be ye, when men shall revile you, and persecute you, and shall say all manner of evil against you, falsely, for my name's sake. Rejoice, and be exceeding glad, for great is your reward in heaven, for so persecuted they the prophets which were before you." "Woe unto you when all men shall speak well of you." Suffering is our portion here. I beseech you never take a short cut to glory. There are a great many Christians who are trying to take short cuts to glory. That was the temptation that Satan gave our Lord in the wilderness. After he had shown Him all the glory of the world, and the kingdoms of the world, he said, "All this will I give Thee if Thou wilt fall down and worship me." "Get thee behind Me," He says. Satan offered Christ glory without a cross attaching thereto; and the Church of God is being ruined to-day because it is accepting glory from the world—glory without any cross attaching thereto. Who was it that gave Christ his crown and his purple robe? Was it the Father? Not a bit of it; it was the world. And when the Church of God begins to clothe herself with purple and scarlet, and to fare sumptuously every day, I fear she is becoming like the harlot of the Apostasy. God keep us from that glory! May we be able to say, "I glorified not myself!" Christ glorified not Himself to be made a High Priest, but He received the glory from the Father.

I beseech you, then, testify as the two witnesses did, clothed in sackcloth; for sackcloth is our clothing down here, and not purple and scarlet. The world sees no beauty in sackcloth. It is very mean, and only costs a penny or two. The world sees no beauty in ashes. Oh that we might, indeed, have the ashes of God upon our forehead; that we might, indeed, have the mark set upon our foreheads, as those who sigh and cry for the abominations that are done in our midst. God teach us to walk with Him in sackcloth, to walk with Him in glory! Oh that you may be able to say "the King's daughter is all glorious within." The world sees no glory without, but the soul, if you are walking with the Saviour, knows it has the glory within. "Lift up your heads, O ye gates; and be ye lift up, ye everlasting doors; and the King of Glory shall come in. Who is this King of Glory?" I feel certain there are many souls here that have no glory. What is the use of your temple if there is no glory in it? God wants to give you glory, brother. Then "lift up your heads, O ye gates." The gates are ponderous, rusty, cumbersome—they are choked with rubbish. Clear it away. "Lift up your heads,"—that is all you have to do. Will you do it to-night? "And the King of glory shall come in."

We all know the old story of President Lincoln. When the war was coming to an end—the war of the South against the North—the Southern generals said to President Lincoln, "Bring this frightful war to an end; think of the blood, think of the misery, think of the carnage." They proposed that the armies should retire, leaving each in possession of what they then held. Lincoln looked on the map, and brought his hand down on the table, saying, "Gentlemen, this Government must have all." That is the message I give to you to-night. God will allow the glory to flood your soul when you have really and not sentimentally given Him all.

Glimpses of Coming Glory.

MR. H. GRATTAN GUINNESS.

Our subject is the glory which remains, the glory in reserve, the life and glory which await the Church of God, the hope of God's calling. Our appeal is only to the Word of God. It must be so; we should endeavour to get rid, as far as possible, of mistiness on this great subject. We can only obtain certainty in our hope by the study of the Word of God and by faith in its teachings. We need light from above in order to understand this Word. We cannot understand the inspired Word without the inspiration of the Spirit. Oh, that the eyes of our understanding may be enlightened to know the hope of our calling!

In order to give definiteness to our expectation, to clear away the haziness that hangs over the hope, let us state some great facts which this blessed Book declares as to that which lies before the redeemed. The first glorious experience which lies before the redeemed, collectively, is resurrection; and, along with this resurrection of the sleeping saints, the transformation of the living. The Bible is full of this; even nature is full of it. The very ground on which you walk speaks about it. The leaves fall, and with them seeds which spring again. The insects have their transformations; and the most beautiful of God's terrestrial creations are those which have passed through some of the most wonderful transformations. I have sometimes thought that fairer than the beauty of any bird is the beauty of the perfect butterfly, some especially with their lustrous loveliness. Yet you know what they pass through—the three stages—first, the life of the crawling worm; then death, so to speak, of the chrysalis, and then the perfected, beautiful creature that floats upon the air, and in the sunshine. Now our lives, or our experiences, are triple. There are the three stages—the stage of life, the stage of death—the intermediate stage—and the stage of resurrection. You will find, if you study this Book, that this three-fold order is stamped upon it from beginning to end, and most markedly upon the experience of our Lord, as Him who lived, who died, who rose. It is stamped upon the very sequence of dispensations—the Patriarchal dispensation, the Jewish dispensation, and the Christian dispensation. The first was what might be called the dispensation of natural life. "I was alive without the law once." Then the Jewish dispensation was unquestionably under the law of death—the death of that which is natural, for the law was the ministration of death. The Christian dispensation is that of resurrection; it begins with the resurrection of Christ, it is marked by spiritual resurrection, and to be crowned even with physical resurrection. We know the first of these experiences, the low and terrestrial. If the Lord tarry we shall know the second; we shall sleep in Jesus. And when He comes again, then will follow the third experience, that of resurrection.

Now, what of our resurrection? You get rid of haziness in the subject at once, when you take such passages as those in 1 Cor. xv.: "It is sown in corruption; it is raised in incorruption: it is sown in dishonour; it is raised in glory: it is sown in weakness; it is raised in power: it is sown a natural body; it is raised a spiritual body." This seems to be the crowning thought of the revelation: "As we have borne the image of the earthy, we shall also bear the image of the heavenly." Well, then, that is what lies before us; this spirit, the renewed spirit, clothed at present with the body of corruption and of death, is to put off this, and put on the image of the risen glory of the Lord Jesus Christ. We are to get rid of all the weakness and all the degradation (there are dishonour and degradation in connection with the body), and all the pain, and all the unfitness for activity, and all the tendencies to slumber, and all the tendencies to decay and death—in a moment, in the twinkling of an eye, by the resurrection of the sleeping saints, and by the transformation of the living saints. Oh, crowning miracle, miracle of miracles, miracle of the almightiness of the Almighty God.

How will God exceed every other miracle, when, in a moment, in the twinkling of an eye, He builds those temples innumerable, perfect, spiritual, and glorious, which are to last throughout all eternity! These bodies are to be suited to the spirits which inhabit them, and the service in reserve for them, as instruments in the hand of the indwelling Spirit, as mediums within, the entire universe flowing into the spirit, through a perfect physical medium that can see and hear and touch, so to speak, as the body cannot now; and the spirit expressing itself, speaking, shining, looking, revealing itself in glory, in unhindered perfection, through these bodies, in the image of the risen and glorified Jesus. Oh! who can conceive the glory, the power, the incorruptibility, in reserve for the redeemed!

Then the second stage in that wonderful experience is this—after the resurrection the rapture. Now we are confined to earth; then, when we are fitted for heaven, we shall be set free to enter it, the earth being still the place of graves as it will be then, and more or less of imperfection and indeed the scene of judgment—the Church is to be taken out of it. When Jesus comes, He will not wait to descend to this earth, to remove his people. He will remove them before He reaches the earth. Let us try to be as clear as we can upon this. The air—what is that? People tell us that the atmosphere may be perhaps some 200 miles in height, an enormous height compared to our highest mountains, and it may be higher than that. There is plenty of room for the Church to meet Christ in the air. It may be the Church will meet Christ beyond the boundaries of that physical envelope of the world. The Church, when Jesus comes, is to ascend; when He descends, she ascends. He is free of that upper heaven. When He rose from the dead, after lingering a certain season on earth, He visibly ascended, and a cloud received Him out of their sight.

In earlier times, in the Jewish dispensation, Elijah ascended; and in earlier times still, in the patriarchal age, Enoch ascended. So, in connection with each dispensation, patriarchal, Jewish, and Christian, there is a rapture. In patriarchal times the rapture of the seventh from Adam; in Jewish times the rapture of Elijah; in Christian times the rapture of the Church. What will it be? Is it any use for me to try to say? Still, thought travels on. Oh, what will it be in this perfected form to be set free from this terrestrial life, and then swiftly to ascend, and ascend, earth fading beneath us, and the whole Church gathered and glorified! Every saint; all in Christ made perfect; gathered into one place, set free, manifested, caught up.

The next experience is clear. What is it? After the rapture, the meeting. The rapture is in order to the meeting. Jesus says, "I will come again. I would not go otherwise. I would not leave you, but to return. If I depart, I will come again and receive you unto Myself." "Caught up to meet the Lord in the air." What will it be for the Church to meet the Lord? And who is the Lord? He is the express image of God. He is one filled with all the fulness of the Godhead bodily. He is One in whom all power and perfection dwell. He is the brightness of the Father's glory. He is full of tenderness; his inclinations are to intimacy with his people. Wondrous condescension! Therefore it is written, "He that sitteth upon the throne shall dwell among them."

Think of the blending there of the most opposite elements and experiences. On the one hand, sitting on the throne of the universe; on the other hand, dwelling in lowliness among the redeemed. We talk about access to kings and queens, but what will be the access to the King of kings? And this will be the experience of those fitted for the society, and suited to the communion—for the saints will never see the Lord in glory until they themselves are in glory—they will not see Him until they are like Him; and then, oh! that marvellous experience—with the Christ whom we are to meet we are to be for ever; caught up to meet the Lord in the air, and so shall we ever be with the Lord—a meeting never to be followed by a parting.

That Christ is the Christ with whom we have become already more or less familiar; the Christ who spoke the Sermon on the Mount, who wept at the grave of Lazarus, who sat in the Upper Chamber of Jerusalem, who uttered the words in John xiv., and that prayer in John xvii., which seems to take in all the heights and depths of the necessities of the Church, and expresses more fully than anything else the desires of the heart of God for the Church—it is that Christ. It is the Christ who wept over Jerusalem in tenderness and in divine compassion as well as wondrous dignity. Oh, it is the Christ of time and of eternity, of Bethlehem, and of the bosom of the Father—the unspeakable Christ, the Redeemer, the Life, the Righteousness! And when you see Him you will be like Him, and you will be more like Him because you behold Him; and He will reveal Himself to you with increasing fulness, because you are limited, whereas He is divine and infinite. It will take all eternity for Him to communicate and unveil what is in Him—producing growth in perfection resulting from growth in knowledge. Perfect to begin with, yet growing in perfection, because growing in knowledge in his society.

Then, what lies beyond? Because it is wonder beyond wonder, and vista beyond vista. Beyond the meeting the marriage. What will that marriage be? There has been a marriage already. He that is joined to the Lord is one spirit. George Whitfield said that the clearest idea he could get of true religion was that of union of the heart with God. I have often thought of that. Our personal experience, as far as it is what it ought to be, has this for its very core—he that is joined to the Lord is one spirit. What will the marriage of the Lamb be, then? I cannot describe it. I can merely give some faint glimmer of its meaning and glory. The marriage of the Lamb must involve this. First, the gathering of the whole Church into unity, and then its association with Christ in publicity, before an assembled universe. There will be a manifest donation of Himself to the Church, and of the Church to Him—a publication and celebration of their oneness. It will be the commencement of a life of association with Christ, of co-operation, a union of perpetual friendship and ceaseless intimacy in the deepest oneness of mind and heart; perfection of friendship, perfection of trust, perfection of love. Oh, measureless vision! this union of the Church with Jesus Christ! The heart is overwhelmed that contemplates fairly what that oneness is, expressed by the marriage of the Lamb. It will be the joyful, blissful, and unspeakable entrance of the Church, as a whole, into an experience of oneness which is never to have an end.

Then, beyond the marriage, lies the manifestation in glory. I know nothing about times and seasons in such relations as these. Oh, the vanity of seeking to lay down chronologically these events, and to say this will take so long, and the other will take so long! But beyond all doubt that marriage will be followed by a manifestation. There will be the shining forth, the rising of the sun, the rising of the splendour of a day which shall never set, the revelation of the Church in that glory in which Christ Himself shall be revealed; because He shall be manifested, we shall be manifested as the sons of God, as the Bride of Christ, as the associates of his glory, as the heirs of immortality. The manifestation will not only be for the glory of the Church, and Christ in the Church (because He shall come to be glorified in the Church), but it will be for the purification of the world. It will be for the purification of the temple—the terrestrial temple; it will be for those judgments which will usher in his reign. In that Church is to be associated with Christ. If we are his, when He comes in that triple glory, we shall come with Hin.

What lies beyond this manifestation? There lies the kingdom. This is but the porch, the entrance to the kingdom. Do not imagine that you can easily fathom the depths, or measure the heights, or analyse the real nature of the kingdom. Do not run away hastily with superficial views upon the subject. Study the Word of God, and you will get more light. What says the Scriptures concerning that kingdom? It will be doubly double. Among the stars of heaven there are many stars which seem one to the naked eye; but apply the telescope, and you see that they are binary. So as regards certain truths. They seem one to the uninitiated, but those who study more deeply find single truths divide into binary glories. This kingdom is doubly double. It is double in sphere, and double in time. There is an earthly and a heavenly kingdom; a millennial and an eternal kingdom.

It is double as to its sphere. Paul says that in the dispensation of the fulness of times, it is the purpose of God to gather in one all things in Christ which are in heaven and which are in earth. I think that wonderful declaration casts an amazing amount of light upon the hope of the Church. The fulness of the times is that inaugurated by the Advent. The Advent will introduce the union of earth and heaven. This clears away a host of difficulties. There are all sorts of difficulties as to the Church being manifested on earth which for many a day perplexed me. The Scripture says that this is to be at the close of the fourth empire, and to be pre-millennial. But how can a glorified Christ, and his glorified Church, be here on earth in that Millennial age, dwelling among the imperfect and mortal in a dispensation which is to be closed by almost universal rebellion? I think a great many people overlook the double character of the kingdom, which is to be heavenly as well as earthly, and the declaration "If I go to prepare a place for you, I will come again." When you put together the various Scriptures on this subject. I think you will see this—at least, it seems tolerably clear and defined to me—that the glorified Church, which meets the Lord Jesus Christ at his Advent in the air, will go on with Him to that place which He has gone to prepare, and that in the millennial age the Church will enter into the experience of reigning with Christ in his kingdom and in his glory, which could not take place in post-millennial times, because at the close of the millennium He gives up the kingdom, and the Church is not to wait to enter on the kingdom, as post-millennialists imagine, until Jesus Christ is to give up the kingdom. No, no. The Church is to enter into the glory of the kingdom, and to reign while that kingdom, in its unlimited fulness, is in the hands of Him who is far above all principalities, and powers, and might, and dominion, and every name that can be named in heaven and earth.

While that kingdom lasts, while the entire universe, with its worlds, and all its powers, and angels, and principalities and dominions—while the whole of it remains subjected to Jesus Christ, as the One who was crucified and is exalted, the Church will share his kingdom and his glory; here on earth He will have another people. There is the earthly people as well as the heavenly; and therefore there are the two Jerusalems. There is a Jerusalem below, and a Jerusalem above. The natural seed of Israel below, and the spiritual seed above. Yet Christ will be manifested with his Church at the commencement of this period; heaven and earth, and all things in heaven and earth, will be under the government of the Lord Jesus Christ, in that thousand years of his unlimited kingdom, the Church being associated with Him.

Beyond all that, in the eternal state, and beyond the final acts of judgment, there lies another experience and another stage, entirely distinct — the descent of the New Jerusalem. During the millennial age, all things in heaven and earth are subjected to the Lord Jesus Christ and the government of the saints—everything is set to rights, all tyranny broken down, and ignorance banished, and every abomination removed. But observe this one point, that during the millennial age the unsaved dead will remain in their graves. At the end of the thousand years the sea is to give up its dead, therefore the sea will be there; whereas in the new heavens and the new earth, into which the New Jerusalem descends, there is to be no more sea. The descent of the New Jerusalem is then in the age which lies beyond. Then the tabernacle of God can dwell with men, the earth being purified. This earth, wet with the tears, stained with the blood of the Redeemer—this very earth, the scene of his conflicts and the conflicts of his Church and his saints—this earth is to be glorified and perfected, and to endure. And the very revolutions which it is following and pursuing, indicating continuance, harmonise with the whole system of the times and the seasons of redemption. In that age the tabernacle of God, which is the glorified body of the redeemed, will be with men. There will be the descended Jerusalem, and the nations walking in the light of that glorious Jerusalem. Oh, vision of exceeding and inexpressible glory, when every saint shall reflect or reveal something peculiar or personal of the glory and excellency of God, and all will be instinct with Deity, filled with all the fulness of God!

Try to realise this, in conclusion, that the great inaugural event—the coming of the Lord Jesus Christ—is distinctly placed in Scripture in a certain historical position. It is so placed by Daniel, and Paul, and John. It is the close of the fourth Empire at the destruction of Antichrist. Everything indicates the nearness of the termination, that we are on the eve of it now. How things ripen; how the chariot rolls; how He is moving heaven and earth. With what haste, that He may gather in his redeemed, complete his work, and clear the way by the Gospel being preached to the uttermost parts of the earth; that He may come to take his people to be ever with Him? Are you all in Him, and are you looking for that Advent? By all its exceeding and eternal weight of glory, compared to which all earthly glories are the merest vanities; by all its powers, before which all other powers wither and perish; by its eternity and perpetuity; by its height, its depth, its length, its breadth, and its divinity, I beseech you, I conjure you, count everything else but loss, and dross, and dung, in comparison with this. See to it that you gain Christ's righteousness, who is coming soon in his kingdom and glory; and that you have Him as yours. If you have never received Him before, receive Him now, that you may be ready whenever the event may happen; ready for the meeting, ready for the rapture, ready for the marriage, ready to be for ever with the Lord.

Smaller Gatherings.

EARLY MEETINGS.

As usual, the large gatherings were preceded by meetings for prayer at 7 o'clock in the morning of each day. These were held in Room No. 4, in the basement, and were well attended. On Wednesday morning Sir Arthur Blackwood, referring to the Scripture portion which some had been reading (Ps. cxxxvii.), said, though at Mildmay in body, it was possible to be in Babylon in spirit. He then read a portion of Genesis xviii., and, in commenting thereon, pointed out that Abraham recognised his position as a pilgrim and stranger walking with God. What a blessed thing if every believer could realise, like Abraham, that they had found favour with God. There is a very beautiful thought in the fact of God condescending to be refreshed by his servants. In coming to Mildmay the thought is of a time of refreshing for themselves; but, just as it is a pleasure to the parent to receive the most trifling gift from the little baby hand, so may God's people believe that He is gratified by the offerings of their love—that He in their midst is refreshed as He sees evidences of their love towards Him.

Mr. Mathieson, basing his remarks on Amos vi., pleaded for more prayer, more effort on behalf of Israel.

On Thursday morning Mr. Meyer pointed out three texts (John vi. 56, 1 John iii. 24, and iv. 16) as showing the intimate communion between the child of God and the Saviour, by faith. Implicit and instant obedience to the promptings of the Spirit, a cultivation of the spirit of forgiveness, and a tender love to all persons, are the conditions of this communion; thus may we have with us a sense of the conscious presence of God.

Captain Chapman, referring again to Psalm cxxxvii. said nothing stops singing so much as sin. We cannot sing when there is sin on the conscience. But, if the heart is right, the Christian may sing wonderfully sweetly even in a strange land. Paul and Silas were in a very strange land when they were in prison because of their testimony for Christ; yet with what power and sweetness they sang.

Rev. J. Gelson Gregson said, if we would have power, we must be content, like Moses, while God filled the tent, to stand outside. The secret of power is being as channels, without consciousness; as earthen vessels, used, but not conscious of what is in them. God can use such vessels. If we have Christ's presence, we must have power.

On Friday morning, Sir Arthur Blackwood spoke of the first manifestation of the glory of the Son of God, as recorded in John ii. We learn here that Jesus never fails to accept the invitation sent to Him, however ignorantly. Even his disciples did not know who Jesus was. We often think of glory in connection with heaven, but the glory of God is in the face of Jesus Christ, and is manifested here. His glory is seen in the conversion of souls. As we invite Jesus to a part in every circumstance of our lives, so shall we find that glory begins here.

Rev. E. N. Thwaites, drawing for illustration upon the Queen of Sheba's visit to Solomon, dwelt upon the wisdom and glory of Jesus, the satisfaction with which He fills the souls of those who come inquiringly to Him. How much more wonderful than Solomon's "house" is that which Jesus is building—taking even the vilest sinner and making him a living stone fit for a place in the glorious temple built without hands. When, like the Queen of Sheba, having seen the fulness of the riches in Christ Jesus, we are constrained to say, "the half was not told me," and to give of that we have to our King, then is the magnificence of his royal bounty displayed, and then He delights also to give us beside whatsoever we ask.

On Saturday morning the meeting was briefly addressed by Rev. F. B. Meyer, Rev. J. Wilkinson, and Rev. Gelson Gregson. The Conference was closed with a praise-meeting at 11 o'clock.

THE SOUDAN.

Mr. Reginald Radcliffe presided on Wednesday over the afternoon meeting in the large hall. We want prayer for Africa, he said, but not for Africa alone. In another hall the subject is, "Israel, the brethren of our Lord," and when we begin to pray for Africa, we cannot but think of the Jewish nation, and then our thoughts go on to Africa, and India, and China, to more than seventy millions of people without a single Protestant missionary. After prayer by Rev. H. M. Williamson, Belfast, Mr. Radcliffe read the passages in Genesis xii. concerning the call of Abraham, and that in Genesis xv. concerning the confirmation of the promise.

Mr. H. Grattan Guinness said: We need to be often reminded that the Son of God redeemed the world, and then left the Church to evangelise the world. God did not send his Son to evangelise all nations; He sent Him to redeem all people. And Christ having confined his ministry to a very small portion of Palestine, to a very few people, and to a very brief space of time—having accomplished the great work for which He laid down his life, He returned to the heaven which He had left. But ere He did so, He laid this burden on the Church—a burden of blessed fellowship with Himself, Go ye and do that work which I am not sent to do. I am the Light of the world; I am the Redeemer of the world; go ye everywhere and proclaim this great truth. Can it be that Jesus laid this command on his church, and that at this very time half the world is in darkness and ignorance? Yes, the church has kept the news from the heathen. The responsibility to evangelise the world means something tremendous, because salvation is dependent on redemption, and redemption is dependent on the knowledge of redemption, for "how can they believe on Him of whom they have not heard, and how can they hear without a preacher?" The heathen cannot hear this message unless it be published to them, and this publication needs the co-operation of those who go forth as missionaries, and of those who remain at home. There are none here to-day who have not some responsibility in this matter.

In speaking of Africa, let me remind you that the Soudan is a name which means a good deal, and it is a name also which will be more prominent in the future than it has been in the past. We have heard a good deal of Cape Colony, and Bechuana Land, and other parts of Africa. The Congo region is so vast that you might put India into it; but the Soudan, which has been almost entirely overlooked, is even greater. And yet in the Soudan there are one hundred millions of people, speaking a hundred languages. These people, unlike those of the Congo, are negroes, and they speak a monosyllabic language. Who are these negroes? It may interest you to know that we have had a good deal to do with them. The history of these negro people presents one of the most interesting of missionary problems. In the history of missions there is scarcely anything more wonderful and marvellous in the Divine dealings than is to be found in the page of God's dealings with this negro people. We talk of the number of those who have been converted from heathenism since our missionaries first went forth, but what are these compared to that vast multitude of those who have been converted from this vast region of the Soudan? You say, What do you mean? I reply, that more people have been converted who belong by right to the Soudan than from any other region occupied by the heathen. How? when? where? you ask. In Genesis xv. God says to Abram, speaking of the children of the promise, they "shall be a stranger in a land that is not theirs, and shall serve them, and they shall afflict them four hundred years. And also that nation, whom they shall serve, will I judge, and afterwards shall they come out with great substance."

Now, these Soudanese have gone through a similar experience. They were taken into slavery by thousands by the Portuguese, the French, and the English, for a space of 400 years. We English people; from 1680 to 1700, transported into slavery 300,000 of the Soudanese from the west coast, and in the next 86 years we transported into slavery, to Jamaica alone, 610,000. That makes about a million. Portugal and France turned into slavery a number computed to be by no means smaller than this. When you remember the horrors of the slave trade, the horrors of the middle passage, the immense numbers of those who, packed together like herrings, died on the voyage; when you remember how the people were oppressed in Jamaica and in America, how marvellous is this. A missionary, now staying with me, tells me that the negroes in Jamaica are all Christianised, and thousands of them are preaching the Gospel. In America it is the same, and at present the negro population of America is one-seventh of the whole—altogether about seven millions, and these professedly Christian.

There is nothing more wonderful than that in the whole history of God's dealings with the heathen. I believe if we had not set our slaves free God would have judged us. This we did in 1833 at a cost of twenty millions sterling. America did not follow our example. I was in New York when news arrived of the first shot fired at Fort Sumter, which lit the flames of civil war. The whole place was thrown into commotion. After four years' war, in which a million of men were slain, the power of the South was utterly broken, and then four millions of slaves were set free. Now there are seven millions of coloured people in America, and we are met to pray for, and to endeavour to evangelise, the people from whom these negroes have sprung, and who are still neglected and in the dust.

Mr. Guinness then gave a number of facts concerning the Soudan. This is a tract of country 4000 miles in length, interposed between the broad desert of Sahara and the great Congo region. It extends all the way from Abyssinia in the East, to the Gulf of Guinea in the West, or from the Nile to the Atlantic. Of all the regions of Central Africa, the least known is the Soudan, which remains for the most part terra incognita. A few courageous explorers, such as Mungo Park, at the beginning of this century; Denham and Clapperton, twenty years later; and Rholfs, Schweinfurth, Gordon, and Thompson, in recent times, have partially penetrated its western and central sections, or skirted its eastern fringe; but no thorough-going attempt has yet been made either to explore or to evangelise this vast, populous, and wonderful region. Geographically, the country consists of three principal parts, the western, central, and eastern, the first being the region of the Niger, the second round Lake Tchad, and the third immediately to the west of the Upper Nile. The principal countries along the western branch of the Niger, called the Quorra River, are—Futa Jallon, Bambarra, Messina, Songhay, and Gando.

Mungo Park, who first visited Bambarra in 1795, in 1805 made a second journey to the country, but never returned. The entire population is estimated to be about two millions, and among all these there is no missionary of the Gospel. Messina has a population of four and a half millions, but no missionary of the Gospel. Songhay two millions, and no missionary of the Gospel; Gando, five and a half millions, and no missionary of the Gospel. In Central Soudan there are a group of great negro states radiating in every direction from the shores of Lake Tchad. In the great kingdoms of Sokoto and Adamawa, with a joint population of twelve and a half millions, as in the Empire of Borna and Kanem, a civilised negro state, there is again no missionary of the Gospel. In the eastern division there are the kingdoms of Baghirmi and Wadai, the one with a population of a million and a half, and the other with two millions of inhabitants, and these also without any missionary of the Gospel.

When you remember, continued Mr. Guinness, that these people are sunk in fetishism or else in Mohammedanism, that slavery is universal, that polygamy is the rule, that atrocious cruelty abounds, that cannibalism is perfectly common, so that in many parts you can go into the shambles and buy human flesh, when you remember these things and the need of these people, is it possible any longer to ignore their claim? I have a book containing a vocabulary of the language of the Haussa people. That book was published forty-three years ago: yet, though we have been in possession of their language all that time, no missionary has ever gone to them with the Gospel. Mr. Schomberg, who reduced that language to a written form, also translated this sentence into the Haussa tongue, "Son, thy sins be forgiven thee," but there is no one to go and publish that sentence. The people remain in their ignorance as before. For a thousand miles along the course of the Niger there are to be seen the remains of slaves who have perished on their way to the sea. Oh! my friends, pray for that region that still lieth in darkness, and in the power of the evil one.

Mr. Graham Wilmot Brooke, who has been already twice to the Soudan, and who, accompanied only by a native, is about to return to that region, said he was to have sailed that afternoon, but delayed his leaving for three weeks in order to attend this Conference. There are, he continued, four chief things present to the mind in thinking of going forth to the heathen. There is the command, Go; there are then the qualities demanded from those going, the attitude of those chosen towards Christ and the heathen, and then the blessing promised. With regard to the first, in God's Word there is no foundation for the popular idea that the claims of the heathen should come as a burden to just a few scattered individuals, to whom this great privilege is specially given. If anyone is engaged in work at home because he really believes that is the one spot in the whole world where God would have him be, then he is in his right place. But if he is thus engaged in work for the Lord because it is the nearest to his own home, the most convenient to him in regard to the position in life which he has chosen for himself, then he is disobeying the Lord's command. The qualities demanded are not very complicated—no long list of qualifications stands at the head of the Divine order for admission amongst the number of missionary brethren. The movement in which I am personally concerned has been founded, not on missionary anecdotes, not on the advice of missionaries, but because step by step it has been ordered by God. The first qualification for this service is personal acquaintance with the Almighty—"Woe is me, for I am undone, because I am a man of unclean lips, and I dwell in the midst of a people of unclean lips." And another is, "Lo, this hath touched thy lips, and thine iniquity is taken away, and thy sin is purged." Then, as regards the attitude of the Christian towards those around him. For many years the Holy Spirit has been beckoning to some to go forth as missionaries. You remember how after Pentecost the first disciples were made to go forth by the fierce persecution which drove them out from their homes. And, alas! it has been a common practice for the Christian Church to neglect the command until compelled by adverse circumstances to obey it.

Mr. Brooke then contrasted the methods pursued by the present missionary church, seeking in too many cases the reformation of the natives rather than the revolution spoken of in Scripture as "turning the world upside down," which was the apostolic method. The first step in this was to send out everybody, except about two dozen men. These went everywhere preaching the Word; they told the people simply of the arrival of the Messiah; and then, as believers were multiplied and churches were formed, elders were appointed from their own body, and the evangelists passed on to other places. He would apply these principles not only to the Soudan, but to other fields. Speaking of the Soudan, he said in conclusion that there the harem system flourishes. He had himself seen among the Berber races an unfortunate woman who for forty years had not gone outside the mud courtyard in which she was detained. Women are very much cut off from the preaching of the Gospel.

The ordinary meeting was closed with prayer by Rev. Frank White, but those on the platform came down into the body of the hall, and brief addresses were given by Mr. Brooke, Rev. F. B. Meyer, and Rev. G. C. Grubb. Mr. Meyer said he had made it a special matter of prayer that Mr. Brooke's departure might be delayed for a short time to allow of his attending the Conference, and this answer to prayer should strengthen their faith with regard to the results of the work he was going forth to do.

[As will be seen, the foregoing report comprises all the morning and evening addresses, with the address on Friday afternoon at the Lord's Supper. In our next issue we hope to give the remainder of our report of the Smaller Gatherings.]

JUBILEE DAY ON THE CLYDE.

In company with a friend who devotes herself to prison-work and Gospel temperance in the dark dens of Glasgow, we left her lovely cottage, built so as to secure mountain views with a measure of Atlantic breezes coming up the lovely Firth of Clyde. Nothing could be more restful after the long strain of another privileged winter's service among the perishing orphans of our seething city.

Morning by morning we sail forth from Kirn on one or other of the steamers plying to and fro amongst these ever lovely lochs, surrounded by grand, quiet, old mountains, where our earliest summers were all spent.

But to-day (June 21) is a real Jubilee day of royal sunshine; we left in the Jeanie Deans about noon, and soon found we were in company with above two hundred girls of all sizes from the Industrial School, come for a day's holiday "doon the water."

Skirting the lovely Argyleshire coast we parted from our girl companions at Inellan and soon entered Rothesay Bay, passing steamers heavily laden with children. We found these steamers were chartered by a Mr. W. Wilson to give sixteen thousand of the very poorest waifs and strays from the streets of Glasgow, a true Jubilee treat after our own heart. In Rothesay Park we were not long ere we got permission from Mr. Wilson to go in among the bairns. They were all under fourteen, and some bits of real Scottish poetry and music did we listen to while they talked to ane anither. It is among such bare-footed, bare-headed crowds that nature oozes out the tenderest sympathy.

A fine large-headed laddie comes up to me with a confiding instinct, saying, "Leddy, see that wee lassie greetin', what's wrang wi' her?" taking me for one of the thousand voluntary helpers. On inquiry we found she had lost her boots, preferring to be without them in the great heat.

Another wee laddie sits, crying, holding his foot with a bleeding toe, and half-a-dozen girlies all round him in touching sympathy; and then the grateful "Thank ye's," when with a bit of a pocket handkerchief the toe was tied up. Another little fellow sat on the trunk of a tree crying like to break his heart, saying with heavy sobs between, "I've lost my wee sister, and I dinna ken whaur to find her."

Thousands of these children had never seen the bonnie mountains before, and such a taste of kindness from a merchant prince will not be easily forgotten; nay, it will give new and pure thoughts, and as they grow up they can take such trips themselves in days to come. The inborn sense of taking the circumstances of life calmly, made this waif and stray crowd much easier to manage than our East-end youngsters, who always feel that the pent-up steam must go off in hallooing and running.

Thousands of presents were to be distributed, and races run for them as prizes, but the hours sped whilst the lambs were being fed, and getting back from Rothesay Park to the various boats, for the four hours' sail back to the city.

We closed our day after seeing the children started, by visiting a lady friend to our blessed work, who helped us with many a garment twenty years ago.

The scene was a lovely one—looking out at ten o'clock, and not yet dark, upon the bay studded with yachts, small boats, and steamers at rest. As by an inspiration, on the hill above Toward Castle, and all along the shores at points, bonfires were burning, and rockets from the various vessels were sent up in the air, which was the balmiest that could possibly be.

A dinner was given to two hundred of the aged, waited upon by the Mayor and ministers, who also patronised the children's gatherings, visiting their burgh town. If the fine old castle walls could have spoken, what contrasts would they have drawn? No longer warlike clans bidding each other angry defiance, but the townsfolk vieing with one another who could show compassion and kindness to those who could never repay them. The chief magistrate even went to the park after the last boat was started, to find if any wee laddie or lassie had fallen asleep in a corner and had been forgotten.

Truly, in these days of Gospel temperance, and magnificent efforts like the above for the young who are poor and feeble, the heart of our blessed Lord must take joy over the Christian men and women of this day endeavouring to live unselfishly, and for uplifting the young from their misery. In all our beloved Queen's realms there could be no more happy, jubilant crowd rejoicing and wishing every year brought to them a jubilee; each accepting the Lord Jesus as their own Saviour is the glad sound to make for each heart an everlasting jubilee. In July we hope to take our old and young as usual to the Epping Forest and have our Jubilee outing. A third party for Canada is being rescued to be sent later on (d.v.). Annie Macpherson.

BELLEVILLE MISSION, PARIS.

A party of over seventy German people, young and old, were assembled last week for a little fête in a mission-room of Miss de Broen's, Rue Secrétan, where a meeting is held every Sunday night for the German-speaking inhabitants of that district. This Gospel meeting, as well as the children's Sunday-school, is well attended, and has by the grace of God been blessed to many. It was a pleasing sight, on this particular night, to see the smiling faces of these people as coffee and cakes were handed round, and a bunch of flowers given to each by Miss de Broen. Hymns were sung, and prayers were offered. All listened earnestly to the reading of Ps. xci., and Miss de Broen's loving words which followed.

"Ah, it is here I forget all about my pain and misery," said a poor suffering man, whose hands and feet are crippled by rheumatism. He and his wife are regular attendants at the meetings, and although the old couple depend for their living on the scanty earning of her needle, she testifies with tears of joy, "The Lord has never failed us, no, not once. Whenever the distress seemed greatest, He has sent relief." "The Lord has heard our prayer," whispered another woman that night, as I offered her some coffee, "My son has been perfectly sober and good, ever since we prayed together for him at the meeting some weeks ago."

This little gathering formed a bright ending to a busy day's work in the dispensary among our sick friends, from far and near. Will Christians at home remember to uphold us by prayer, and especially ask for much blessing on daily meetings, to be held in this mission-room by Mr. W. Hoste, of Brighton, during the summer months, when crowds pass it on their way to the beautiful Park Buttes, Chaumont, close by. E. B.

MR. JOSEPH COOK has returned to his summer home of Cliff Seat, Lake George, after a most successful lecture tour in the West. Since closing his Boston Monday Lectureship, he has been speaking six nights in the week, and often also to free audiences on Sundays. He has had, as usual, large congregations in the college towns visited. He met the students of Fisk University, and discussed the condition of the freedmen and their duties toward both America and Africa. He gave also at Nashville an outspoken discourse prepared and delivered at Sioux City, after studying the case of the hero and martyr, Rev. G. C. Haddock.

MIDNIGHT MEETING MOVEMENT.—During the last fortnight Mr. Christien, Organising Superintendent, with the aid of Mr. Knibb, of the Christian Community, High-street, Poplar, Rev. C. Neil, of St. Matthias, Rev. G. Small, and other friends, has been holding a number of meetings, at various times, of men, women, and young people, many of whom were in a most wretched condition, some not having had food or lodging for days and nights, being shoeless and homeless. They appeared to be very grateful for the kindness shown them when amply supplied with food, and listened with the most earnest attention to the truthful, affectionate addresses which were delivered. The above mission-hall is a bright light in a dark place, and the unselfish Christian workers, messengers of mercy.

STEP BY STEP.

Step by step, O blessèd Master,
 Guide us, lest we go astray;
Leading onward, leading upward,
 Leading homeward day by day.

Precept upon precept give us,
 Constant teaching we implore:
Here a little, there a little—
 Do not trust us with a store.

Lord, we are so weak and foolish;
 Line by line thy truth indite!
Word for word impart thy message,
 Else we cannot speak aright.

Side by side, O tarry with us,
 Till our pilgrimage is done;
Darkly now by faith we see Thee;
 Face to face is glory won.

PERSECUTION IN SPAIN.

Rev. J. M. Vila, the pastor of the Reformed Spanish Church at Malaga, recently commenced a mission in the adjacent village of Puerto de la Torre. He was received very cordially, the people were eager to listen to the Gospel, and it is said by the British chaplain at Malaga that on some occasions over two hundred persons were unable to gain admittance to the little room where the services were held. The village had been entirely neglected by the Roman Church and the people asserted that they had not seen a priest for twenty years. When, however, Señor Vila opened schools and began to gather a congregation, the priests thought it time to interfere, but in spite of great efforts to counteract the influence of the reformers, the people simply drove them out of the place. The cura then became very angry and issued a pamphlet full of reckless abuse and misstatements. To this Señor Vila replied by a pamphlet that was spirited and severe, but written in a polite and dignified style.

The priests have commenced a civil suit against Señor Vila, for "ridiculing the dogmas of the State Church," and, pending the beginning of the trial, he has been compelled to furnish bail for £80, or else go to gaol. This they did, thinking he would be unable to raise the sum in 48 hours, and would thus be put in gaol and kept there, while the church and schools would be closed. "These people have found their mistake," writes Mr. Bevan, a merchant of Malaga, "and, by the blessing of God, the work will go on, until Christ is known and loved and served by all." The Spanish and Portuguese Church Aid Society, 8, Adam-street, Adelphi, W.C., will forward any assistance sent by English Christians.

THE WRITINGS OF ST. PATRICK.

The Council of the Irish Branch of the Evangelical Alliance has undertaken the responsibility of issuing a cheap edition of the extant genuine writings of the Apostle of Ireland in a carefully revised English translation. The documents which will be published include St. Patrick's Confession, Hymn, and his remarkable Epistle to Coroticus. The simple evangelical character of these writings makes it extremely important that they should be widely known at the present time.

The task of editing the work has been kindly undertaken by Rev. G. T. Stokes, D.D., Professor of Ecclesiastical History in the University of Dublin, and Rev. C. H. H. Wright, D.D., Incumbent of Bethesda Church, Dublin, and Examiner in Hebrew, &c., in the University of London. The notes to the work will give the readings of the various MSS., as completely as possible, and will call attention to the quotations from Holy Scripture with which the said writings abound; but everything of a controversial character will be carefully excluded. The writings will be thus allowed to tell their own story, and it is hoped that the edition will be acceptable to all classes in Ireland, as well as to those elsewhere, who are interested in its early religious history, and the progress of the Gospel in the primitive ages of Christianity.

The Book World.

A Child without a Name. By Evelyn Everett-Green. 3s. 6d. Religious Tract Society. A touching story, well written, and full of healthy teaching for boys and girls. The charm of the book is in its naturalness and simplicity.

Hymns and Metrical Psalms. By Thomas McKellar, Ph.D. Porter & Coates, Philadelphia, U.S. Second Edition. A volume of sacred verse is sure to find some readers. We should call the present one better fitted for private than public use, though the author remarks that some of his pieces are used by congregations. The printing is clear, the binding handsome and combine to make Hymns and Psalms a pleasing gift-book.

Mornings at Mildmay: Notes of Lessons on the Beatitudes. By E. C. 1s. 2d. Partridge & Co. Among the many good things hailing from that busy centre of Christian life and influence, this record of Mildmay Bible-readings will hold a worthy place. Evidences of deep spiritual research and prayerful thought abound, and the heart and conscience are alike quickened by its perusal. The book will be very helpful to all who read it, and should have a large circulation.

Cookery for an Income of £200 a Year By Mrs. Warren. 1s. Bemrose & Sons. The authoress is well known in the circle of domestic literature, having contributed not a little to the comfort of many homes by her practical counsels on the important art of housekeeping. This, her latest production, will be found helpful to housewives who desire, on limited means, to provide as varied and satisfying a regimen as is any way possible. There are recipes for every month of the year.

Home Work for Willing Hearts. By Mrs. Brightwen. 1s. W. J. Overhead, High-street, Harrow. We commend this little book to the special attention of invalids who are incapacitated for active service, and of all who by being possessed of abundant leisure are in danger of suffering from ennui, or falling into habits of indolence. Ways of usefulness are opened up which do not suggest themselves to everyone, and which will be found as pleasurable to those who pursue them as they are likely to give pleasure, and do lasting good to others whose benefit is sought.

The American Sunday School. By J. H. Vincent, D.D. 3s. 6d. Sunday School Union. This is what our American friends would call a "live" book. One more crammed with sound, practical suggestions we have never seen, freshness and force mark every page, and one marvels at the comprehensiveness with which every aspect of Sunday-school work is treated. Sunday-schools worked on such lines as Dr. Vincent delineates, and possessed of the fervour and spiritual power for which he pleads, cannot fail to be instrumental in effecting great and gracious results. Dulness and routine would soon vanish from such institutions, if the spirit and wisdom pervading this volume were generally emulated. Superintendents, teachers, pastors, and, indeed, all concerned in the religious welfare of the young should read this book, they will find it stimulating and refreshing from every point of view.

The True Explanation of "The Mystery" which was kept secret since the world began. By James Johnstone, 8, Dalhousie-terrace, Edinburgh. This is in some respects an ingenious and able yet ill-balanced tractate, inspiring alike interest and misgiving. We fail to see with the author in his main proposition. We hold, for instance, that Abraham's faith was an evangelical faith, a faith enkindled with Gospel significance. How else could he have seen Christ's day afar off? No doubt there is a deep mystery of godliness in God's mode of justifying the believer in Christ. But we deny that all was dark on this point before the Pentecostal baptism came. On the subject of the baptism of water our author's reasoning is crooked and perverse to the last degree—a piece of sheer wilfulness. We know not what to say to a man who, on his own "ipse dixit," contravenes Apostolic precedent and authority. In Mr. Johnstone's judgment, Peter's appeal, "Can any man forbid water that these should not be baptized who have received the Holy Ghost as well as we?" is founded on ignorance; for in baptizing Cornelius and his household with the Holy Ghost, "the Lord," Mr. Johnstone tells us, "set aside water baptism as a useless thing." It would be folly to reason with a man who, in the name of Christ, repudiates Apostolic sanction, and builds up theory on the débris of Apostolic mistakes. Altogether we feel about this pamphlet that only those will find it really edifying for whom originality has a greater charm than truth.

Apostolic Missions for the Present Day. By J. Gelson Gregson. 1d. Marshall Bros. In this little pamphlet Mr. Gregson endeavours to show wherein our modern missionary methods have diverged from those of the Apostles, and makes a definite proposal with a view to bring about some return to an Apostolic line of things. His proposal is, not to supersede the missionaries already in the field, but to supplement their labours by evangelists, who shall go out to India for a certain number of years, and at the smallest possible cost. Mr. Gregson has an especial claim to attention when he speaks on this subject. All who are anxious to hasten the day of Christ's coming should read his pamphlet.

The Student's Handbook of Christian Theology. By Rev. Benjamin Field. Twenty-fifth thousand. 5s. Hodder & Stoughton, 27, Paternoster-row. While from some of the chapters of this work we strongly dissent, we do not wonder at its popularity among our Methodist friends. It is a faithful transcript of Wesleyan doctrine on every point, and is written in a clear and logical manner. The author, of whom a biographical sketch is supplied, was a much respected missionary and minister of the Wesleyan Connexion; a genuine enthusiast in the matter of preaching, and one who in much bodily infirmity laid himself out to the utmost in the salvation of souls. The profits of this posthumous work, which has been revised and enlarged by the author's friend Mr. Symons, are devoted to the support of his orphan children.

Doom Eternal: the Bible and Church Doctrines of Everlasting Punishment. By Rev. Junius B. Reimensnyder. Funk & Wagnalls. This is an important contribution to the discussion of the solemn subject on which it treats, and deserves careful reading by all who are in doubt as to the true doctrine of Scripture. The author first brings forward a mass of evidence as to the testimony of the Church in every age, proving beyond the possibility of question that, "if there be any doctrine ever taught in the name of Christianity which can claim to be really catholic, it is the doctrine of never-ending punishment." The teaching of Scripture is ably unfolded, and the fallacies and evils of Restorationism and Universalism clearly exposed. The chapter on "The Voice of Reason" is a valuable one, showing, as it does, that even from the standpoint of truly rational inquiry the teaching of the Bible is confirmed and enforced. The volume is worthy of earnest perusal.

The Scripture Doctrine of the Church. By Rev. D. Douglas Bannerman, M.A. 12s. T. & T. Clark, Edinburgh. This is a work of considerable scholarship and research, but somewhat too elaborate for the general Christian public. We are by no means satisfied with the author's reasoning on the subject of Circumcision and Baptism. The present age, as the dispensation of the Spirit, is not to be confounded with its predecessor, which was mainly one of natural lineage. With the interpretation of Matt. xvi. 18 we thoroughly concur. It has for long seemed to us that the rock on which Christ builds his Church is embodied testimony. It is the Petrine witness to Christ's person that tells in the erection of this edifice. So also we agree in the conclusion that "it is to Peter only as the representative of such faith and such a confession that the blessing and promise of Christ are given." Further, we note with approval the doctrinal grit of this work. It is refreshing to meet with an author who is not ashamed of God's elective purpose, or of our Lord's decisive words which so emphatically teach it.

Wherein Millennarians are Wrong. By Rev. James Gall 2s. 6d. Gall & Inglis. Everything Mr. Gall writes is marked by vigour and independence of thought, and, although we are millennarians ourselves, we feel free to acknowledge the undoubted ability shown in this work. The book is certainly readable, spirited, and original. We cannot, however, look upon it as based on a sufficient induction of Scriptural statement The pivot of Mr. Gall's work is Ps. cx. 1:—"Sit thou at My right hand until I make thine enemies thy footstool." By this verse he holds that the fact is settled that Christ has nothing to do with the overthrow of his enemies. But this is constructing a pyramid on its apex. According to Luke xix. 27, our Lord, having received the kingdom, and returned, executes judgment on those who would not that He should reign over them. And with this agree multitudes of Scriptures, among which is to be included Ps. cx. itself. Christ, in that very Psalm, is seen executing judgment, for He is bidden to "rule in the midst of his enemies." But Mr. Gall will have it that even the Father does not subdue Christ's foes by judgment, but by grace alone. How, then, does he interpret Ps. cx, wherein we read (ver. 5), "The Lord at thy right hand shall strike through kings in the day of his wrath"? There is no denying that Mr. Gall wields a vigorous pen, and that his book will command attention. But greater praise than that we may not offer. It is a book which ought to obtain an answer.

"Acceptable Words." John F. Shaw & Co. These are Notes of Sermons taken by one of the congregation of the late lamented A. A. Rees, of Sunderland, and form an interesting memorial of one whose ministry was greatly blessed of God, and highly valued by all who were privileged to attend it. These pages are, of course, fragmentary and only give "Gleanings" from a wide and varied field, but many will be glad to possess themselves of a book which, while specially prepared for those who knew Mr. Rees, will be found to contain many valuable expository thoughts, helpful to all readers.

Sundays at Balmoral. Sermons preached before Her Majesty in Scotland. By the late Very Rev. J. Tulloch, D.D., LL.D. 5s. Nisbet & Co. This is a disappointing book. As an essayist and man of learning Dr. Tulloch has a high reputation. But the weary, sin-sick soul, and the pilgrim to Zion, will find cold comfort in these sermons. Much is said about the higher life, Christian graces, and personal responsibility—the Divinity and example of Christ. But such foundation truths as Christ's atoning death, his priestly intercession, his glorious return, and justification by faith, &c., are conspicuous by their absence. "Lovingkindness" is tenderly written, and "the Ideal of the Church" contains much Scriptural truth. But Dr. Tulloch is a broad Churchman, and from a full, magnificent verse like John vi. 68, 69, he draws with a trembling hand a few drops of doubtful refreshment. The thirsty soul must resort to simpler preachers of the everlasting Gospel.

The Meditations and Maxims of Koheleth: A Practical Exposition of the Book of Ecclesiastes. By T. Campbell Finlayson. T. Fisher Unwin. A handsome book, and the result of much painstaking labour. The author's aim has been "to popularise the scholarship of others, to acquaint the ordinary reader with the results which have been arrived at by some recent critics and interpreters, and at the same time to bring home to the heart the practical teaching of the book." Altogether, we are not greatly impressed with the success of his effort, although thoughtful readers will find in the book a great deal of practical truth well put. We disagree entirely with the writer's standpoint. He abandons the idea of the Solomonic authorship, and holds to that of dramatic personation. We think, too, that he has not seen with sufficient clearness that the Preacher's search was not for the chief good. His aim was to find out how much of satisfaction this world could supply. If to find the highest good had been his object, his reference to God and his service must have been far more glowing.

Marriage. By Clement Clemance. 6d. John Snow & Co. This is an admirable exposition of a Scripture narrative, the lesson of which should be pondered well. In the exhortation there is also much of valuable counsel in regard to this momentous matter, which, with some model love-letters, one by a Puritan worthy, and some passages from the late Charles Kingsley's writings, indicate the true spirit which should animate those who are thinking of marriage.

Notes on Daily Readings.

SUNDAY, JULY 3.—PSALM CXLVIII.

"In this Psalm the loftiest consciousness of faith is united with the grandest contemplation of nature. The Church appears here as the choir-leader of the universe."—Delitzsch. "As a flash of lightning flames through space and enwraps both heaven and earth in one vestment of glory, so doth the adoration of the Lord in this Psalm light up all the universe, and cause it to glow with a radiance of praise. The song begins in the heavens, sweeps downwards to dragons and all deeps, and then ascends again till the people near unto Jehovah take up the strain."—C.H.S.

"The Psalm is divided into two nearly equal parts, of which the former (1—6) relates to the heavenly and the latter (7—12) to the earthly hallelujah. In both parts, the ground of the exhortation to praise is expressed. In the one case it is that at the word of God the heavenly hosts were created, and that to his decree they are subject. In the other case, it is that the name of Jehovah alone is highly exalted, and that it has pleased Him to raise up 'a horn of salvation' for his people."—S.C.

6.—He hath made a decree which shall not pass.—This is rendered in margin (R.V.) and in S.C., "Which none shall transgress." "The verb rendered 'pass,' when used in connection with bounds or laws, seems to denote their transgression."—Speaker's Commentary.

7.—Ye dragons.—"The word seems to denote any large water animals." The latter part of the Psalm is a prophetic anticipation of the day spoken of in Rom. viii. 18.

MONDAY, JULY 4.—PSALM CXLIX.

1.—Sing unto the Lord a new song.—"There can be little doubt that this Psalm, like those passages where mention is made of a 'new song,' has reference to the days of the Messiah and to his final victories over all opposing foes. This was the view of Rashi, the great Jewish commentator. The 'new song' is not the Psalm itself, but the ascription of praise which shall ascend from a regenerated world at the Advent of Jehovah."—S.C.

2.—Let Israel rejoice in Him that made him.—The Hebrew for "Him that made him" is plural, which calls to mind Gen. i. 6.

4.—He will beautify the meek with salvation.—"'The meek' is as frequently a designation of the oppressed Church, which has hitherto, amidst patient endurance of suffering, waited for God's own act of redemption."—Delitzsch. The "salvation" here spoken of is not "justification," the primary stage, nor sanctification, the second stage, but "redemption of the body," the final and completing stage of salvation. See Rom. xiii. 11; 1 Pet. i. 5; Heb. ix. 28. The verb for "beautify" is often rendered "glorify."

5.—Let them sing aloud upon their beds.—The expression is figurative of rest after toil. See Rev. xiv. 13, "That they may rest from their labours," where the context points not to death, but to the Lord's coming.

6.—A two-edged sword in their hand.—Christ's people are to be his assessors in judgment (1 Cor. vi. 2), so that the symbol of judgment which in other passages is spoken of as proceeding out of his mouth is here described as put into their hand to carry out his sentence.

9.—To execute upon them the judgment written.—"Expressed in the whole of the prophecies, more especially those of Isaiah."—S.C. And, not the least, those of Daniel (vii. 18—27).

TUESDAY, JULY 5.—PSALM CL.

"We have now reached the last summit of the mountain chain of Psalms. It rises high into the clear azure, and its brow is bathed in the sunlight of the eternal world of worship."—Spurgeon.

Each of the last five Psalms begins and ends with Hallelujah (Praise ye the Lord), "and now in the last Psalm of all each sentence begins with the ascription of praise. Thirteen hallelujahs according to the number of tribes (Levi, Ephraim and Manasseh making three) one for each."—J. H. Michaelis.

1.—Praise God in his sanctuary.—"In this passage 'sanctuary' is the heavenly temple."—Delitzsch. "These are 'the days of heaven upon the earth' (Deut. xi. 21). The kingdom has come, and the will of the Blessed One is done here as there. The mystic ladder connects the upper and the lower sanctuaries. Praise crowns the scene. The vision passes before us with the chanting of all kinds of music. Man has taken the instrument of joy into his hand, to strike it, however, only to God's glory. And this is the perfect result of all things—the creature is happy and God glorified. 'Glory and honour are in his presence; strength and gladness are in his place' (1 Chron. xvi. 27). What a close of the Psalms of David! What a close of the ways of God! Joy, indeed, has come in the morning, and struck its note for the 'one eternal day.' Praise ye the Lord. Amen."—J. G. Bellett.

WEDNESDAY, JULY 6.—PROVERBS I.

1.—Proverbs.—"A proverb is the wisdom of ages crystallised into a sentence; a gold coin in the currency of thought."—Dr. Thomas. A proverb is "the wit of one and the wisdom of many." "The proverbs of Solomon, being inspired, are the rays of eternal ideas mirrored in the diamonds of human genius." "Wisdom in a portable form."—Arnot.

> Jewels five words long,
> That on the stretched forefinger of all time
> Sparkle for ever.—Tennyson.

2—4.—The design of the book is moral more than intellectual—the culture of the soul and spirit, as well as of the mind. The book has a most practical end. "If the world were governed by this single book, it would be a new earth wherein dwelleth righteousness."

7.—The fear of the Lord is the beginning of knowledge.—This is the fear of loving reverence. It is "love venerating the majestic, and adoring the good," and is quite opposed to slavish fear, which is the child of ignorance and sin. Godly fear is begotten of true knowledge and love, and casteth out that craven fear which hath torment. Sooner or later every man must choose between these. There must either be the tender, sacred fear—the fear to grieve—of the child, or the heart will eventually be possessed by that awful fear of God which makes the very devils to tremble. Filial fear is the only root of true knowledge. "He knows nothing rightly who knows not God experimentally."—Thomas. Who so wise as Satan? Who so ignorant and foolish? To-day ungodly men of genius may despise the unlearned. It will soon be seen that the really ignorant are those who know not God.

8.—First, the fear of the Lord (ver. 7); then filial obedience. God gives "parents rank next to Himself. Filial love stands near and leans on godliness."—Arnot.

9.—Love of adornment is a natural instinct, which, though often perverted, is often appealed to in Scripture. Here we are reminded of the surpassing beauty of filial respect. It is an ornament that "will be worn on the golden streets of the New Jerusalem, when the fashion of this world shall have passed away."—Arnot.

THURSDAY, JULY 7.—PROVERBS II.

This chapter has two parts; part i. (verses 1—9) teaches that, True seeking is sure finding; part ii., that, Wisdom embraced is sin escaped.

1—9.—True seeking is sure finding. The condition (verses 1—4) of the promise (verses 5—9) is repeated four times, and with an ever increasing intensity, as though to remind us that indifference and sloth are probably the greatest hindrances to spiritual advancement. 1.—Receive my words.—"The basis of all religion is the word of the Lord taken into the understanding and heart."—Arnot. Hide my commandments, &c.—Though received, it will be lost unless it remains, dominating the conscience, enlightening the mind, giving tone to the spirit, and direction and purpose to the life. 2.—Incline thine ear, &c.—"Those who hide the word within them, feeding on it as daily bread, acquire an habitual bent of mind towards things spiritual."—Arnot. 3.—Criest after knowledge.—The same process advanced a stage. "While the man was musing the fire burned. It is no longer a Nicodemus inclined toward Jesus, he cannot tell how; it is the jailor of Philippi springing, and crying with a loud voice, 'What must I do to be saved.'"—Arnot. 4.—Seekest her as silver.—The passionate cry is good, but insufficient, standing alone. Balaam could cry, "Let me die the death of the righteous," &c., but he could not live his prayer. Here the crying is linked with the seeking—seeking as men seek for silver. In the great multitude of worshippers how few "cry after knowledge"; and, of them, how few "seek her as silver!" Laziness brings leanness in the spiritual world, even more surely than in the temporal. "The kingdom of heaven suffereth violence, and the violent take it." Many "search for money as if it were saving truth, instead of searching for saving truth as if it were money."—Arnot.

FRIDAY, JULY 8.—PROVERBS III.

This chapter blazes with splendour. Our narrow space forbids extended comment; we can only indicate some of the beauties. If each reader will only read the chapter through, quietly and carefully three or four times in succession, he will need no help from us.

Note the inwardness of the Christian life; it is a thing of the heart, and extends outward throughout the entire life (1, 5 and 6); the surpassing value of spiritual possessions (ver. 3, 13—20); the absolute submission to God, and confidence in Him, which distinguishes it (5—7); its delightsomeness, security, peace, and glory (2, 4, 6, 8, 10, 12—18, 22—26, 33—35). Yet this is not the estimate of a mere optimist. The sorrows of life are acknowledged and accounted for (11, 12).

Observe the thoroughness with which the prompt payment of debt is dealt with. First, debt towards God (9, 10); then, debt towards our neighbour (28, 29). It is not clear whether the debt is an ordinary one, or whether it be the obligation to the unfortunate which the law of mercy lays upon the comparatively well-to-do. Anyway, the law of promptitude is clear and emphatic. Many a struggling tradesman and overwrought dressmaker, and many hopelessly poor, would be saved from sorrow and ruin, if all Christian people would remember to pay their debts, and do their alms quickly.

5, 6.—When nearly eighty years old, Sir Matthew Hale left it on record that, whenever he had committed his way sincerely and unreservedly unto the Lord, his path had always been made plain before him.

SATURDAY, JULY 9.—PROVERBS IV.

10, 11.—Hear, O my son, &c. I have taught thee...I have led thee.—"Teaching and leading are closely allied, but not identical: to lead your child in right paths implies that you go in them before him. Only a godly man can bring up his child for God...An example of some kind parents must exhibit in their families. God, in the providential laws, permits no neutrality in the family. There, you must either be for or against Him."—Arnot.

13.—Take fast hold of instruction, &c. Keep her, for she is thy life.—As the crew of a vessel abandoned in mid-ocean will risk all rather than lose the compass, for "it is their life," so will the wise keep hold of truth and righteousness: it is their life.

14, 15.—Enter not, &c.—"He that is not afraid of temptation is not afraid of sin; and he that is not afraid of sin, is in danger of being destroyed by it."

18.—The path of the just is as the shining light.—"The march of the good is a bright march, a progressive march, and a glorious march."—Thomas. Some read this verse as though it likened the course of a good man's life to that of the sun. The sun is reserved as an emblem of the Lord God Himself. What is spoken of here is not the sun, but the light which comes from the sun, between the moment of earliest dawn and that of sunrise—for to the Christian death is the sunrise of life.

23.—Keep thy heart with all diligence, &c.—"We should have a constant regard to the suspicious parts of our real character."—Bishop Butler.

"In 'JAMES SCOTT, a Labourer for God,' Dr. A. Bonar finds a theme almost as congenial to his pen as Robert Murray McCheyne. Glasgow, the theatre of much evangelistic effort of the best kind, has known no more devoted or successful labourer among her lowliest than the subject of this memoir. A greater testimony to the worth of this ardent young spirit than Mr. Moody's friendship and commendation is the fact that no fewer than 30,000 people lined the streets on the day of his funeral, while the procession alone numbered 6,000. The memoir is in every way an inspiration to the love of man and the service of God."
Nonconformist and Independent, Feb. 3, 1887.

"From Messrs. Morgan & Scott we have a touching tribute to one who filled up a short life with bright and blessed service. The volume is entitled, 'JAMES SCOTT, a Labourer for God,' and is from the loving pen of Dr. Andrew Bonar. Mr. Scott was converted through the instrumentality of a devoted 'elder,' Mr. John Muir, of Glasgow, who visited him as a 'seat-holder,' and unfolded to him the way of life. A rich encouragement this to the 'elders of the church' to use their office well! Who shall tell how many James Scotts are just ripe for such influence as theirs?"—British Messenger.

"THOSE WHO ARE SPENT."

THERE are many engaged in the highest Christian work for the good of their fellows, who have heard and obeyed the injunction to—

"Go, labour on; spend and be spent,"

but who have been compelled almost to cease their noble toiling because of the failing power of concentration of thought, and the too-well-known weariness of an overworked brain. These would find in Odo-Magnetism the help so much needed. It is pleasant to know that many whose lives are consecrated to the good of humanity, who have taken their talents, their time, their all—the flowers and fruit of their lives, and bound them upon the altar of the commonweal; that these men have, by means of Magnetism, been able to continue to do that which unaided they could not have done; and there is an intense satisfaction in remembering that business-men and over-anxious housewives also have been helped thereby. In these days of competition, when every faculty must be strained to the utmost, and all the powers of body and mind pressed into service if success would be attained, when little time for rest or change of scene can be accorded to those who are overworked in the fullest sense of the word, there is surely cause for thankfulness that, by a means as simple as the wearing of a garment, power to think and act may be and has been regained?

Rev. JAMES LA TROBE,
Victoria Square, Cotham, Bristol.

DECEMBER 29, 1886.—"I have to-day recommended your Magnetic Treatment to a friend, and I feel it a duty to write a few lines to you, acknowledging the benefit I have myself received from it. I am sorry I have delayed it so long. A year ago a lady wrote me from Bedford, begging me to try your Appliances, and I then replied to her as follows:—

"'I am finding Mr. GARRATT's Appliance a real comfort. It diffuses a warmth through my enfeebled frame which I cannot get from good fires. It invigorates my nervous system during the day, and though I put it off on going to bed, it helps my sleep, thus enabling me to do some work for my dear Lord and Master, even in my old age.'

"I have not had any visit from my worthy medical friend since February 8, 1886. In the summer six weeks at Cromer was my strengthening medicine. As winter set in, however, and reduced my strength, I again took to my Belt, wearing it from a late rising till an early retiring; have experienced a beneficial influence even greater than last winter, and was able to preach a sermon of thirty-five minutes on Christmas Day, at the age of eighty-four. I am grateful to God, and thankful to you."

One could scarcely conceive of stronger testimony to the value of Odo-Magnetic Treatment in Debility and Brain Fag than that furnished by the foregoing. Many other instances are given in the "Uniform Efficacy of Curative Magnetism."

COMMENDATIONS.

The Christian says:—"Of this remarkable book this is the second edition, the first having been speedily exhausted. In it Mr. Varley deals with the moral government of God, as it is revealed in Holy Scripture, and in the history of men. In the great theme of the book there are few Christians who do not feel, at the present hour, a deep interest: and here the devout reader will find all the great principles enunciated, sustained by the testimonies of the Divine Word. Except to known matter of fact, beyond the Word, there is in the book no appeal; but in handling "the sword of the Spirit" the writer shows himself at home. . . . Mr. Varley's book is orthodox, evangelical, and sound in doctrine; clear and forcible in style; and, on the great questions handled, logical and conclusive in its reasoning. In exposition it reveals familiarity with both the letter and spirit of the Word. For the present time its great theme is one of the most important. And we think few, even though familiar with the prophetic Scriptures, will read it without receiving spiritual profit, and much instructive suggestion."

The Silver Morn, a Monthly Prophetic Paper. The Editor writes:—"'Christ's Coming Kingdom' by Henry Varley. We gave a selection of this most valuable book (p. 272 of vol. ii.) while it was in process of composition. And we have now great pleasure in commending it to all our readers as one of the most complete systems of prophetic interpretation for general use we have. It is greatly to our mind. We have seen no book, as a whole, so comprehensive and complete, so full and so clear. It should be in every library of the Young Men's Christian Association, and every pastor's study."

The Oldham Chronicle has the following:—"'Christ's Coming Kingdom; or, The Lord's Reign on Earth,' by Henry Varley. This handsome and substantial volume is a weighty and searching exposition of a difficult theme. The author approaches the investigation of Scriptural subjects with the fixed determination not to speak to the Bible, but to allow the Bible, in its own way and with its own tones, to speak to him. The result is a work which is as fresh as it is striking, as luminous as it is masculine, as profound as it is popular, and as solid as it is spiritual. It is a study, an inspiration, a means of grace. It edifies while it instructs; it builds up the whole character while it impresses and convinces. Every aspect of the great question of our Lord's Second Coming is discussed calmly, logically, and persuasively. No difficulty is overlooked, no arguments of opponents left unexamined, and no exposition, though the volume abounds in exposition, is slipshod. As an argument, and exposition, and an appeal, this work must take high rank. It is deeply interesting, as well as rich in suggestivness, and all who really wish to understand the important subject of the Second Advent ought to get and master the contents of this able and timely volume."

The Christian Commonwealth says:—"When the first edition of this book appeared it was appreciatively noticed in these columns. It is certainly complimentary to the author that a new edition has been called for. Mr. Varley has added a chapter on 'Miracle in connection with the Coming Kingdom,' and this is, in some respects, the most valuable chapter in the book. It certainly strikes some strong blows against those who would give us the husk instead of the kernel."

EVANGELISTIC NOTES.

Mr. Wm. Nobbs has been at work during the past few months at Hereford, Swindon, Stroud, and other places.

The Exeter Hall Y.M.C.A. have commenced holding open-air services on the Thames Embankment, near Cleopatra's Needle, on Wednesday evenings, at 8.30. They will be continued during the summer months. Friends who can assist will be heartily welcomed.

Rev. R. Montgomery, of Baptist Chapel, Uley, Dursley, is planning a six weeks' tour in counties Clare, Limerick, and Kerry, preaching, holding Bible-readings, visiting from house to house, and distributing portions of the Word of God.

Workington.—Mr. George Evens and his wife have been conducting special services in this town. The attendance increased each evening until the close, when the hall, seating 1500 persons, was completely packed. The addresses were intensely earnest, and many troubled ones professed to find peace at the Cross.

Dr. Pentecost.—In the beautiful miniature city of Montpelier, Vermont, Dr. Pentecost has finished a series of evangelistic services. The result has been gratifying beyond expectation. In a community which, from an unfortunate experience of a former revival work, has had no desire for the presence of an evangelist for the past fifty years the office of an evangelist stands amply vindicated, and for the evangelist himself there is among Christian people but one voice of appreciation and praise.—Independent.

Gibraltar.—Open-air Gospel meetings have been conducted on Sunday evenings lately in the Alemada (public gardens) by Capt. Armstrong (retired) and Mr. George Holmes. The gatherings have been large and attentive, including Spaniards, Moors, Jews, Maltese, and many English soldiers, German sailors, and others. Such a work has not before been attempted in Gibraltar. It is proposed to continue the meetings during the summer. The meetings at the Institute have outgrown the capacity of the largest room.

Rotherham.—An excellent work has been done in this town by Messrs. Wharton and Weaver with their Bible-carriage. Every night a crowd of working-men surrounded the van while the Gospel was being proclaimed, and many Bibles, &c., were sold. The Sunday meetings were especially blessed. Non-churchgoers listened attentively. The evening meeting, in which Christians of various denominations took part, lasted till after ten o'clock. Many received blessing, and some were led to decide for Christ.

Dunfermline.—Mr. George Clarke conducted a united town mission here from May 28 to June 13 with marked results. The features of this work have been the solidity and practical point of the addresses delivered, the harmony and hearty prayerfulness of all engaged in it, the close attention and deep earnestness of the audiences, the prayerful stillness and moral determination at the after-meetings, the general religious awakening over the town with little if anything to take exception to. Hundreds of all classes and of both sexes acknowledge that they have been helped and are glad.

Rev. Isaac F. Row, of the Anglo-Indian Evangelisation Society has returned from Upper Assam, says The Indian Witness, where he has been engaged for the past six months in evangelistic work amongst the widely-scattered European population. Mr. Row speaks in most grateful terms of the remarkable kindness with which he was treated everywhere by planters, Government officers, steamboat and railway agents, and others. The spiritual destitution of the province is very great, and ample employment could be found there for several earnest, godly ministers. Mr. Row hopes to re-visit Assam next season.

Dr. Munhall, assisted by Professor and Mrs. Towner, has concluded the mission at Toledo, U.S. Pastors and people of different denominations, says The Independent, have worked together in sweet and loving unity, and no discordant voice has been heard in the midst of the general harmony. The meetings close, but the revival will go on. Christians have been refreshed and quickened. Hundreds of precious souls have been converted. There is scarcely a church in the city, English or German, Protestant or Catholic, that has not a representation in the converts. Toledo will for all time be a better city for these glorious union revival meet-

Portsmouth.—A new hall has been opened in Rudmore-road, the Gospel work carried on for many years, chiefly by Mr. C. S. Vosper, having outgrown the old building. The Sunday-school too is very successful, many young people having joined the church from it. Mr. W. R. Lane gave the opening address and Bible-readings on several afternoons. The last fortnight in the old hall was occupied with a mission by Mr. Cornelius Smith, the gipsy.

Mr. George Clarke began a Gospel mission at Campbeltown, N.B., on Wednesday last. During July and August he will hold services in Greenock and Gourock, on Wednesdays and Thursdays of those months.

Church Parochial Mission Society.—The following missions have been arranged, for which prayer is requested:—July 17—St. Mark's, Bolton, Rev. W. S. Hill Bourne; July 6—Balne, near Selby, Rev. W. E. Cleworth; July 13—Buckhurst-hill, Rev. Jos. Cullin; July 16 to 25—St. George's, near Wellington, Shropshire, Rev. Dr. Morris.

Among the Churches.

* * We shall be happy to receive from our readers brief items of news for this page, respecting Christian work carried on, or progress achieved, in connection with any evangelical church at home or abroad.

CHURCH OF ENGLAND.

The Bishopric of Sodor and Man has been conferred upon Archdeacon Bardsley, of Liverpool.

Rev. W. H. L. Cogswell, Vicar of St. Oswald's, Chester, has accepted the Bishopric of Nova Scotia.

Rev. W. M. Statham will, it is said, be appointed to the vicarage of St. Paul's, Mill-hill, at the end of June, the present incumbent resigning in his favour.

At St. Mary Aldermary, on the afternoon of Jubilee Sunday, Rev. Dr. L. Borrett White, the rector, had a congregation composed chiefly of the lads of the Telegraph Department of the General Post Office.

The late Bishop of Sodor and Man, in a letter to Rev. J. B. Waddington on the subject of croziers, thus wrote:—"You may tell your friends that I have no crozier, and do not intend to possess one. 'Thy rod and Thy staff, they comfort me.'"

BAPTIST.

Forty-one converts were recently baptized in the river that runs by the village of Isleham, Cambridgeshire, by Pastor Callaway.

In a paper on "Child Piety," read by Mr. Pritchard before the Southern Baptist Association, he advocated the provision in the ordinary services of some special portion for children, who generally constitute one-fourth, in many cases one-third, of the congregation.

CONGREGATIONAL.

Rev. Jackson Wray is about to visit the United States.

Harley-street Chapel, Bow, has been re-opened after extensive alterations. The opening services were conducted by the pastor (Rev. D. Evans Hurndall) and Rev. Newman Hall.

At a census recently taken of the Sunday morning attendance at public worship in Birmingham, Dr. Dale's congregation was found to be 75 per cent. larger than that of any other.

PRESBYTERIAN.

At a social meeting of the members of North Leith Free Church, in celebration of the jubilee of Rev. Dr. Macdonald, the senior minister of the congregation, Rev. Dr. Bonar spoke at some length.

Rev. John Gray, pastor of the West United Presbyterian Church, Irvine, has since his ordination at the close of last year, received fifty into church fellowship. Several of these as the result of recent special services.

The quarterly Gaelic service, held in Crown court Church on the 19th inst., attracted an increased attendance, including several Scotch M.P.'s and a large contingent of Highland soldiers. Rev. Dugald Matheson, Free Church minister, of Tarbet, was the preacher.

The death is announced of a Free Church missionary, Rev. P. Rajah Gopaul, pastor of a native congregation in Madras, whose admirably managed Christian schools for native girls was one of the most interesting sights of that city.

SALVATION ARMY.

A high caste Brahmin has entered the Army as cadet in Gujarat.

One hundred and fifty men and women have been enrolled in the Bury St. Edmund corps.

At the Chalk Farm Slumpost there have been some most interesting cases of conversion amongst the children.

At the station at Abingdon, which was only opened quite recently, forty-two souls came out for salvation in the first nine days.

The Army has been very successful in Oldham. Hundreds have been saved, many of whom are witnessing for Christ either in this or distant lands.

In three places in the South of Scotland (Hamilton, Blantyre, and Saltcoats) over 2,600 persons have professed conversion within the last few months.

At Stamford recently two officers were fined twelve shillings and eight shillings costs, with the alternative of ten days' imprisonment, for singing in one of the METHODIST.

Mr. James Duncan, who has laboured for many years at Enfield, leaves England on July 2, for the United States, on a mission tour of six weeks at the special invitation of the Primitive Methodists of Boston.

Very successful services have been held at Penmaenmawr, in connection with the opening of an English church. Revs. T. H. Carthew (of Sierra Leone), W. Vivian (of Bristol), and Mr. W. Howe (of the Theological Institute), have offered themselves for service on the East African Mission stations.

"FALLEN ON SLEEP."

Right Rev. William Bacon Stevens, D.D., LL.D., Bishop of the American Episcopal Church.—Rev. Edward Marlin Chapman, rector of Low Toynton, near Horncastle.—Rev. R. F. Watson, rector of Aston-sub-Edge, Campden, Gloucestershire.—Rev. Robert Kerr, who took a leading part in the union of Primitive and Wesleyan Methodists in Ireland.—Rev. Thos. S. Scott, vicar of Holy Trinity, Anerley.—Miss Bowles, of the Church of England Zenana Mission, Amritsar, Punjaub.—Mrs. Briggs, of Cottingham, for many years an active Methodist worker.—Mrs. Pickering, of New Sheldon, wife of one of the Methodist ministers of the Bishop Auckland Circuit.—Mr. J. Bogle, who for more than twenty years led the service of praise at the English Church at Cefn, Wales.—Rev. William Jenkins, of Pentre Estyll, near Swansea, one of the oldest Congregational ministers in West Glamorganshire.—Mr. Richard Hall, formerly one of Mr. Spurgeon's deacons at Park-street.—Mr. Joseph Wilson, of Sheffield, a prominent member of the Baptist Church.—Colonel A. Angus Croll, of Beechwood, Reigate, a warm friend of the Baptist cause.—Rev. Thomas Roberts, an eminent Congregational minister.—Mr. Thomas Thistlethwaite, of Askrigg, for over forty years a faithful local preacher.—Rev. J. L. Carrick, of Spring Hill House School, Southampton.—Mr. James Ball, sen., for thirty-three years an ardent supporter of the Amalgamated Church of New Tabernacle, Old-street, and the old Hoxton Academy.—Rev. Peter Prout, for more than twenty-nine years pastor of the Baptist Church at Haslingden.—Mr. William Budden, of Ipswich, deacon for many years of Turret-green Baptist Chapel.—Mr. James Weir, of Bardon-hill, the oldest and most respected local preacher on the Hexham Circuit plan.—Miss Bowles, the earnest and devoted superintendent of the C.M.S. Alexandra School at Narowal, in the Punjaub.—Rev. Matthew Godman, forty years a Wesleyan missionary in West Africa.

SCANDINAVIAN SAILORS.—As kind friends in England and over in the Scandinavian countries are sending a number of good papers, tracts, and books for the sailors, I shall be most thankful if any lady friends would send me a number of book-bags of any pattern, colour, or size. The sailors so much appreciate the reading matter given to them when they are leaving the Home.

83, Leman-street, E. Agnes Hedenstrom.

REQUESTS FOR PRAYER.—For blessing on tent services just held at Southsea by Mr. Opie Rodway.——For blessing on tent meetings being held at Bampton, Westmoreland, by Mr. Thomas Cauker.——For blessing on a Tent Mission at Tamworth, commencing July 3, by Mr. John Bennet, of the Evangelisation Society.——For open-air meetings in Wellington, Somerset.——For blessing on special services at Pontymoile, near Pontypool, South Wales, commencing July 2, by Mr. Opie Rodway and others.——For much blessing on evangelistic work all over the Dominion of Canada.

LIMEHOUSE RAGGED SCHOOL.—God has greatly honoured the faith of those who have persevered with this work, and raised up devoted servants of his to carry it on amongst the poor and neglected. In the Sunday evening school there are several earnest, soul-loving teachers who tell of a Saviour's love to those who gather around them. Children's services are held on Wednesday evenings. A week-night school for lads above thirteen, taught by a certificated master, was held during the winter. Mothers' meetings are held every Monday afternoon, and in other ways a blessed influence is being exerted. The work is carried on in the Mitre Board School, and the secretary is Mr. W. E. Kirkness, 26, Gough-street, Poplar.

SERVANTS' HOME IN PARIS.—This Home was opened about eighteen months ago by Miss E. Morgan. During the first year it was managed by Mddle. Flourit. Many servant girls found there a shelter, and she also spoke earnestly to all of Jesus. After her death, the home was placed under the direction of the Paris committee for the help of young girls, who now, however, have intimated that they must close the Home at once. This is a great trouble to Miss Morgan, as this little work has already been the means of so much good, and gave promise of so much more. The yearly expense is from £80 to £100, and Miss Morgan writes that if a few friends would help she would be willing to go forward. Communications should be addressed to Mrs. N. K. James, 316, Regent-street, W.

TEMPERANCE NOTES.

HOME.

The Lancet says it is "pure nonsense" to attribute the evils of drinking, in any serious degree, to adulteration.

Mr. Axel Gustafson has been invited by some of the electors of Coventry to contest the seat as a Prohibition candidate.

Canon Wilberforce declares that the Irish question is a whisky question; the latter bill exceeding Ireland's yearly rent bill by £2,250,000.

It is stated that the Local Government Bill, in which the liquor-traffic was to be dealt with, owing to want of time will not be introduced this session.

A course of three lectures to medical students, on Alcohol, has just been given by Dr. B. W. Richardson, at the Parkes Museum of Hygiene, London.

The Lancet says, the English merchant seamen would soon find plenty of work, and a good name to boot, if they were to send "the drink" to "Davy's locker."

Major Owen Hay, R.A., said, at Exeter Hall, recently, the army canteens were "vast engines of ruin." He would be glad to put "coffee-palaces in their place."

The General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church in Ireland has again pronounced in favour of Sunday closing and Local Option. The first Sunday in December is to be their temperance Sunday.

In a recent appeal case, before Mr. Justice Denman and Mr. Justice Wills, it was decided that magistrates may refuse to renew a licence for a public-house which has for a time ceased to be so used.

The Liverpool magistrates, to their honour, refused to the publicans permission to keep open later in connection with the Jubilee. We deeply regret that in London and elsewhere permission was so easily obtained.

All interested in the promotion of temperance in the hay and harvest field, should circulate a leaflet addressed "To Farmers and Farmers' Wives," and copies of which may be had from Miss G. S. Rowntree, St. Mary's, York, 1s. per 100 post free.

A plebiscite on the drink-traffic has been taken in Aberdeen. An immense majority voted in favour of a popular veto, and of a reduction in the present number of licensed houses. Six thousand six hundred and forty voted for entire Prohibition.

FOREIGN.

Absolute Prohibition of the liquor-traffic is law throughout the 2,500,000 square miles in the North-west Territories, Canada.

Mr. Barton, Madras, says that among the Hindoos "the vice of drunkenness had disappeared till re-introduced under British rule."

Canon Wilberforce, speaking in New York, strongly condemned the dual basis of the C.E.T.S. He would have but one platform—total abstinence.

The Canadian Dominion House of Commons has rejected a proposal for a general Prohibitive law, but has again endorsed the present Local Option law.

The American Government has forbidden the importation of intoxicating liquors into Alaska, except for sacramental, medicinal, or scientific purposes.

Lord Salisbury has been urged to try to arrange with Germany and France for a uniform duty on spirits in the territories from the Senegal to the Cameroons.

Bishop R. S. Foster, of the United States, in an address to the graduating class at Boston University, said "the rum-shop is the embodiment of the devil."

The powerful temperance story by Miss Elizabeth Stuart Phelps, entitled "Jack," and published in the June Century, is attracting great attention in W.C.T.U. circles, in America.

Miss Frances E. Willard and Miss Anna Gordon have made a trip to the Provinces of Manitoba, where they were to hold a W.C.T.U. Temperance Convention for the far North-west. They will stop at leading towns en route.

In Tennessee the "Four-mile Law" prohibits drink-selling "within four miles of any chartered institution of learning in the State," anywhere but in incorporated towns. To come under the law 171 incorporated cities and towns have given up their charters. In rural districts there has been a great increase of chartered schools.

In Denmark the law provides, and it is rigidly enforced, that when a man is so far under the influence of liquor as to be unable to walk straight, the publican must take the responsibility of procuring a cab and paying the man's fare to his home, or if he cannot give his address, to the nearest police-station, where he is detained till sober, and then fined about 11s. It is also decreed that Copenhagen, with its 400,000 inhabitants, shall not have more than 300 licensed houses. The weeding-out process is already in operation, by which all public-houses in excess of that number will be closed by next year.

Appeals.

Flowers and Texts for the Sick.—Pastor O. Tidman, of Blaenavon, near Pontypool, earnestly appeals for flowers, texts, cards, &c., for distribution in the hospital of that place, and amongst the sick.

Rev. William Stainer's Homes for Deaf and Dumb Children.—Earnest appeal is made for £200 for the erection of a laundry at the back of the Girls' Home, 80, Pentonville-road. Miss Helen Ball, secretary, Staines House, Paddington-green, W.

Southwark Y.M.C.A.—This good work is in danger of coming to a premature end, in consequence of the difficulty in obtaining sufficient funds to carry it on; and I desire to appeal very earnestly to all who love our young men to assist the Committee by a little timely help to maintain this boon for those who so sorely need it. The treasurer is Mr. E. M. Denny, and the address of the Association is 26 and 28, Newington-causeway.—George F. Assiter, General Secretary.

THE IRISH EVANGELIZATION SOCIETY has now been at work since the year 1874, and has had very great blessing. It has pleased God to use their Evangelists in the proclamation of the Gospel to bring a very large number into the fold of Christ. The Society's work is extending, and the Committee feel it to be right that the Church of God should more widely know of and be invited to participate in this work, and they desire to explain fully its mode of operation and bearing towards the different sections of the Christian Church.

MODE OF OPERATION, ETC.

AGENTS.—In the selection of Evangelistic Agents—1. Most diligent inquiry is made regarding their personal piety and suitability, from local or other friends, whose Christian character and discernment can be relied on. 2. Action is taken by one or more of the Clerical members of the General Committee associated with the Hon. Secretary to ascertain their cordial consent, as agents of our Society, to the above principles of this Society. Their willingness heartily to co-operate with the godly Ministers of each locality where they may be called to labour; and trial is made of their gifts in order to test their ability to state the Gospel accurately, clearly, and fully. The result is reported to the Executive Committee. 3. When the report is favourable the Executive Committee consider the propriety of appointment, if the Evangelist is to be a paid agent, and of approval of his employment, if a voluntary Evangelist.

MEETINGS.—The Society is prepared at all times to receive applications and to arrange for Evangelistic Meetings, in any locality, from clergymen or laymen.

MEANS.—The work of the Society is maintained by voluntary contributions, and Christians are invited to share the privilege of this work for Christ.

The Report for the past year, with some interesting details of the year's working of the Society, can be had on application to the Hon. Sec., and will repay perusal, and show this work to be a good investment for those who desire to lay out, as stewards, means in their hands for the furtherance of the Lord's work in Ireland.

Contributions will be received by the TREASURER or HONORARY SECRETARY.

Dundalk, June 24, 1887. JAMES BARTON, Hon. Sec.

Already the four Homes are full of children, and their comrades by the hundred are waiting to follow them.

SCRIPTURAL HOLINESS
NOT SINLESS PERFECTION.
By Rev. CHARLES GRAHAM,
Author of "Christ our Light," "The Highway of Holiness," etc., etc.

COMMENDATORY NOTICES.

"We are glad to see that Mr. Graham does not come forward as an advocate of what is called 'sinless perfection'; and his arguments in favour of striving towards the attainment of a higher life than any of us live are sound and Scriptural."
The Rock.

"His treatment is simple and Scriptural, and not the least satisfactory point in his argument is his refutation of the idea of 'sinless perfection' from the writings of that very apostle who is supposed by some people to teach it."—The Baptist.

"The book is full of the marrow of the Gospel and will do anyone good who reads it."
Irish Baptist Magazine.

"Mr. Graham clearly teaches the truth of complete and certain victory, always within the reach of all believers. He teaches also how this victory is to be sustained day by day, and how also it may be lost. Our readers will do well, with open Bible, to read this little eighteenpenny book."—Penuel.

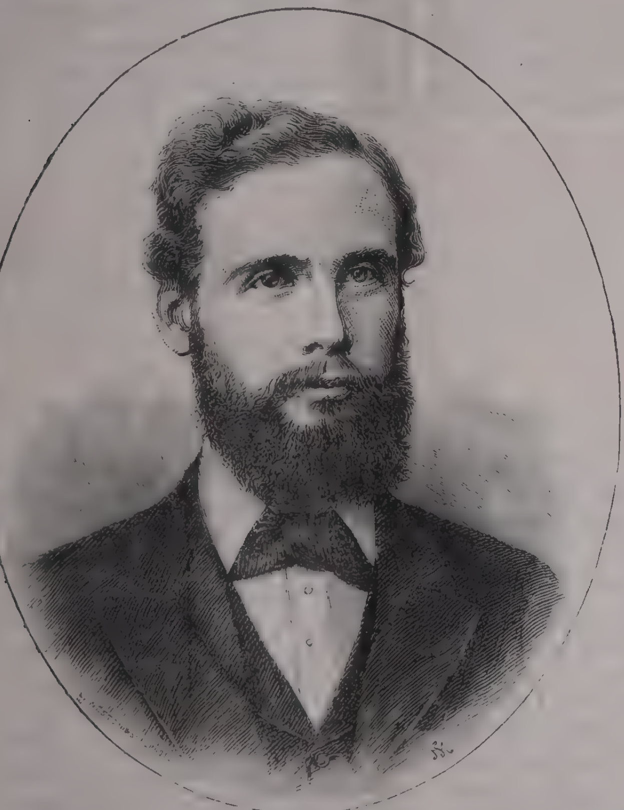
MESSRS. FULLERTON AND SMITH.

HIMSELF endowed with the gift of an evangelist, the pastor of the Metropolitan Tabernacle has gathered about him an earnest band of workers who are always ready to support him in the aggressive movement of the church. "The Evangelists' Association" enrols young men as voluntary preachers for London, and "The Country Mission" for the suburbs and the regions beyond. As Mr. Spurgeon only admits to the Pastors' College those who have had at least two years' experience in preaching, these societies have proved most useful in affording young men opportunities for gaining necessary qualifications.



Mr. W. Y. FULLERTON.

(From Photographs by Messrs. Weston, Folkestone.)

Mr. J. MANTON SMITH.

The two evangelists whose portraits we present to-day were students in Mr. Spurgeon's College, Mr. W. Y. Fullerton proceeding from the societies named, and Mr. J. Manton Smith from the East London Tabernacle, where he enjoyed the friendship and counsel of Mr. Archibald Brown. For nine years they have laboured together in happy fellowship, and their work is well known to many of our readers.

Born and reared in Belfast, Mr. FULLERTON has the marked characteristics of an Ulster man—keen perception, a fertile imagination, the quick leap of impromptu in utterance, and a readiness of resource in grasping the difficulties of any situation. Our American friends would call him "an all-alive man."

Having enjoyed the advantages of a good education, his attainments are considerable and diversified, and he has the faculty of laying under tribute the treasures of a cultured mind, and the careful husbandry of close observation and experience. Had he entered the army he would have been a general—that is, if promotion followed as a premium upon merit. Tall, erect, and self-possessed, his bearing is soldierly. He is too sincere to be vain, but his conscious self-respect is sometimes mistaken for pride by those who do not know the man. A true gentleman by nature, he never resorts to the tricks of art to appear one; and, being wholly consecrated to his life work, he might have sat for Cowper's portrait of "God's ambassador to men":—

> Simple, grave, sincere;
> In doctrine uncorrupt; in language plain,
> And plain in manner; decent, solemn, chaste,
> And natural in gesture; much impressed
> Himself, as conscious of his awful charge,
> And anxious mainly that the flock he feeds
> May feel it too: affectionate in look,
> And tender in address, as well becomes
> A messenger of grace to guilty men.

In briefly tracing his career, we may note at least four Providential stepping-stones to the position he now occupies:—

(1) Business and Conversion.—The foremost lad in the school, it was thought he would gain a scholarship and enter upon a University career, but failing in the examination to spell the word "palliass," he lost nerve, and so missed the top place in the list. It may seem a trifling incident, but, like a drawn sword across his path, that one word diverted his course, and he entered upon a business career in which his worth was soon appreciated. Although he could never fix the time of his conversion, he distinctly remembers the incident by which he was led to attain the rest and joy of faith. A friend said to him, "All you have to do to be saved is to take God's gift and say, 'Thank you!'"

From that moment he was assured of his salvation, and he has never ceased to give thanks. The ministry of Rev. H. M. Williamson, of Fisherwick-place Church, Belfast, was greatly blessed to him, and the Sunday-school and the cottage meeting were the spheres of service in which he soon gave evidence of the life of God in the soul.

(2) Mr. Moody's Mission.—It was while pursuing this modest ministry he heard of Mr. Moody's work in Edinburgh, and became possessed of an intense desire to be equally successful as a soul-winner. When Mr. Moody crossed to Belfast, young Fullerton welcomed the enlarged opportunity of service the mission afforded, and he became a constant worker in the inquiry-room—a school which has proved of priceless value to many. The hours of the day were sacredly devoted to business; but the evening found him as fresh and as zealous for his coveted avocation as though this were, after all, the one thing worth living for. Change of work to such a youth is the truest recreation; when young men crave amusement it is evident they have missed the noblest aim in life.

On being transferred to London in 1875 he was again brought into contact with Mr. Moody, and entered heartily into the services at the Agricultural Hall and the Opera House; and the calm assurance of an earlier experience now ripened into a spirit of determined aggressiveness. The sacred contagion of Moody's zeal touched him, and he soon found himself dominated by the same love for souls. Fearing to drift, as many did, in the lull which follows a mission so unique, he allied himself with the West-end Branch of the Y.M.C.A., and became a member of the Presbyterian Church, Forest-hill, but the connection was not of long duration.

(3) The Metropolitan Tabernacle Pastor's College.—Although he felt powerfully drawn towards the ministry of Mr. Spurgeon, having spent his first Sunday in London at the Tabernacle, it was several months before he sought an interview with the preacher, and expressed his desire to be baptized and join the Church. Admitted to the fellowship of baptized believers, he felt he had gained another vantage ground for service—not a goal where he might rest and be thankful. Ready and eager for service, he was enrolled a member of the Evangelists' Association and the Country Mission, and it soon became evident that he was no ordinary man. He was entrusted with the most important engagements, and, in conjunction with Mr. Chamberlain—a gifted soloist—his services were in constant demand. When he found himself booked for every evening in the week, it became a serious question as to whether he ought not to relinquish business, and devote himself wholly to the "work of an evangelist." It was a time for waiting upon God for guidance, and the answer was not long delayed. Mr. Spurgeon offered to receive him into the Pastors' College, but it was not till the offer had been thrice repeated that he felt assured the call was from the Lord. When he made known his decision to his employer, he remarked, "How would Mr. Spurgeon like me to take away one of his servants?" He did not see that the young man was rising to a position of greater honour than the whole world of business could offer, or that the irresistible claims of another "Master" had determined the step he was resolved to take.

As a student Mr. Fullerton had an advantage over many from his early educational training, so his studies did not compel him to relax his evangelistic labours. Every Lord's Day and almost every evening in the week were devoted to his beloved work, and he was never known to be behindhand in his preparation for the College classes. "In all the series of services he conducted, he won his way with the people, so that, invariably, the meetings grew in numbers and interest to the end;" so writes the esteemed secretary through whom the engagements were made.

(4) Membership of the Pastors' College Society of Evangelists.—For two years Mr. Manton Smith and Mr. A. J. Clarke, after completing their college course, had laboured together in the Gospel in various parts of the country; at length Mr. Clarke's health gave way, and the doctors advised rest and a voyage to Australia. The collapse occurred in the midst of an important mission in Bacup, Lancashire, and Mr. Smith despaired of finding an equal man to succeed his beloved partner. At this crisis, Mr. Chamberlain's health failed, and Mr. Fullerton felt the loss of such a partner was irreparable. Mr. Spurgeon could not fail to see the hand of the Lord in the circumstances by which the two men who had best endured the strain of the work were to be brought together.

Responding to the call, "arise and depart," Mr. Fullerton travelled by the night mail, and was soon yoked with Mr. Manton Smith in the fellowship of the Gospel. The union thus formed has been maintained ever since, and they are, perhaps, more closely united to-day than in any former period of their friendship. The men are unequal, but each has proved the complement of the other.

Concerning Mr. Manton Smith, only a few words are necessary, as he has given to the world a biographical sketch, entitled "Stray Leaves from my Life's Story," a book full of thrilling incidents and remarkable providences. It is a means of grace to read it, and it cannot fail to stimulate and encourage Christian workers. In physique and bonhommie Mr. Smith is a typical Englishman, and if he has missed the early advantages which his friend enjoyed, we can only say he is now different from what he might have been; w dare not say he has been less successfu on that account. Amongst his fellow-townsmen in Northampton, and the skilled mechanics of London, he gained a knowledge and an experience of the working classes which neither books nor schools could have given. He is in touch with the people, and he can grip and hold an audience with a tact and a power which many a college divine must have envied. He is so good all round—genuine, devout, earnest, versatile—and so successful in the work to which he has devoted himself, that we could not say in what respect we should like him to be other than he is. Those who know him best, cannot fail to love and admire him. On the eve of his entering College, Mr. Spurgeon wrote him a characteristic letter, from which we quote one paragraph:—"You, dear brother, are all alive. Keep so. It would be a great loss if you grow colder in proportion as you know more. It need not be so, and I am persuaded that in your case it will not be so. We must win souls. Others may be learned and ornate, but you and I must either win souls or be nobodies."

Intimacy does not always incite to reverence, but these two brethren, after nine years' intimate fellowship, live in each other's esteem. They have maintained their individuality throughout, but never were two men more really one in heart. They are wholly engrossed by their work, and are dominated by one purpose. Upon the same altar each devotes the whole of himself, and in whatever respect one may differ from the other, we only recognise in the differences distinct phases of the one offering. Those who have watched their career have noted a growing fitness in each for their respective departments of service, and a fuller adaptation for the fellowship by which each supplies the other's lack.

Mr. Fullerton is as gifted as an expositor as he is as an evangelist, and his Bible-readings are instructive and refreshing. His Gospel addresses are varied in style, but they all contain a clear statement of the way of salvation, and his appeals are as felicitous as they are powerful. The fact that he has preached in the Tabernacle upwards of eighty times is an evidence of his popularity as a preacher, as it is also of Mr. Spurgeon's confidence and esteem. In the course of his missions the largest halls in the kingdom have been crowded by eager audiences.

Mr. Smith usually conducts the service of praise and prayer, and accompanies the reading of the Scriptures with racy exposition and illustration, and thus leads up to the sermon or address of Mr. Fullerton. He has a voice of rare quality, and his use of the silver cornet is an additional charm to many. Mr. Fullerton's addresses to men only, and Mr. Smith's sermons to children, are prominent features of their work; as are also their "Song Services," usually given on Saturday evenings. Seven of these services are published, and they are admirably adapted for evangelistic meetings. Their hymn book, entitled "Evangel Echoes," contains a large number of choice hymns. In the inquiry-room both evangelists are at home; as are also their wives, and Mrs. Fullerton is very successful in the conduct of services for women only. Two facts are worthy of mention—wherever the evangelists have been they receive requests for a second and even a third visit, and they are always welcomed by many converts from their former missions. As they usually labour in connection with churches, there is a surer harvesting of results than is often realised under other circumstances. Nor is the quickening of the churches a result to be undervalued; and this has been a marked feature of their work. Ministers of all denominations and Christian workers of other fellowships, have heartily joined in their missions. Thankful, as they have been, to see as many as 1200 inquirers in the course of one mission, a deeper gratitude is awakened when they know that the good work will be maintained when they have left for other spheres. At no former period was the blessing greater than it has been since Mr. Fullerton resumed, after his illness and visit to the Holy Land last year, and they are longing and labouring for yet greater things. Invitations have come from India, New Zealand, and Canada, but at present they are held by home claims. Their engagements are usually made at least twelve months in advance, and they find an increasing difficulty in responding to requests for their services. Although they are the accredited agents of the Pastors' College Society of Evangelists, and Mr. Spurgeon guarantees them an income, they enjoy the most perfect freedom to follow the leadings of the Spirit in the missions they undertake.

For seven years Mr. Fullerton conducted a monthly journal which was first known as The Postman, and afterward as The Home Evangel. As an editor he was remarkably successful, and in the articles he has contributed to The Sword and the Trowel, he has revealed a literary skill of no mean order. "The King's Chambers: an Allegory," "Waymarks for Wanderers: an Exposition of the Parable of the Prodigal Son," and "Fronded Palms:" a choice Collection of Papers on Christian Life and Warfare, are books of considerable interest and value, and only need to be known to be prized.

That these two honoured brethren may be spared to labour together in the ministry to which the Lord has called them, and that they may become increasingly useful, is a prayer in which, we feel assured, all our readers will lovingly unite.

THE SALVATION ARMY IN ROME.—In a little report just published we learn something of the work and prospects of the Army in Rome, and of the weakness of Roman Catholicism in the Eternal City. As to this latter point, it is plain from the sparse attendance in the churches, and from the utter indifference of the people, that whatever strength there may seem to be in some of her extremities, at the heart Rome has lost her ancient power. The attendance at the Salvation Army Hall, already large, is rapidly growing. On one evening upwards of three hundred were present, and listened with fixed attention. Many join in the choruses, and as they sing, the people from the saloons around come to see what it all means. Some have gladly accepted the salvation so freely offered. "Already," it is added, "the Salvation Army is a living force for God in Rome."

"SHIBBOLETH."

SOMETIMES we misapply the use of this word Shibboleth, as, indeed, what do we not misapply when we come into the spiritual interpretation of the Bible? Now, the phrase is used in this sense—namely, if we cannot pronounce the Shibboleth of a sect we are regarded as heterodox. It has become quite a proverb amongst us, has this use of the word Shibboleth. Men defend themselves by saying one to another, "Although we cannot pronounce your Shibboleth, we claim to be independent and accurate thinkers."

The term Shibboleth has no relation whatever to that kind of remark. The test was put, not as a test of orthodoxy, but as a test of character. And is it not true that character is tested by little things? Regarding a Christian country, the men are comparatively few in number who are guilty of great crimes or aggravated transgressions against the State, or against one another. How many men could arise and indignantly repel great impeachments; but the question relates to little matters: and what can test character more than little experiments, minute utterances, and observations? We may not have sinned against God, or against one another, in a manner that could be called romantic or tragical, but what about the little offences, the minor immoralities, the white lies, the leaving out of the words letters which give them their real meaning? What about mispronunciation, false accent, calculated emphasis so laid on as to give colour to the thought that is being uttered? What about attitudes, postures, hints? What about unuttered defamations? What about "hesitated dislike"? It is along that line you know whether men can say Shibboleth or Sibboleth. The leaving out of a syllable changes the whole message; the introduction of false emphasis is destructive of integrity.

Let us, therefore, examine ourselves in so-called little things, and minute ceremonies and utterances. Then what hand has not done the wrong deed? What tongue has not spoken in the wrong tone, if not in the wrong language? Who, then, can claim to be white-robed? Who can say of himself that his purity is like the snow, untrodden, unstained?

We must not recede from the application of such passages by limiting them to sectarian differences or metaphysical contrasts, but follow out the exact line of thought, and then we shall come to a test of sincerity, a test of truthfulness, a test of character; we shall know whether a man is trying to save his life at the expense of truth.

The Ephraimite said in effect: "I will tell any number of lies, if you will only let me escape." But the Ephraimites have mocked the Gileadites—let them mock them now! So it shall be at the great upwinding of things. Sceptics, assailants, enemies of Christ and his Cross, have yet to meet that same Christ in an official examination. The man does not end just now. All things are to be brought up for arbitrament and final decision, and we read of those who shall pray the rocks and the hills to fall upon them and hide them from the face—the wrath, the burning countenance—of the Lamb. We must be prepared for these test interviews and final examinations; then it will be seen that all pride, and arrogance, and flippancy, will have no reply in that day. Be wise ere the sun goes down. Kiss the Son while his anger is kindled but a little. If we have spoken haughtily even against the Son of God it may be forgiven us, if we repent with our hearts. He Himself has said so. He never shuts the door upon contrition, repentance, or attempts at restitution. Wherein we have been unjust to the Bible, unjust to the Church, unjust to Christ; wherein we have been excusing ourselves from joining the war on petty grounds of not being invited: let us repent this very day, call ourselves not only sinners, but fools in the sight of God for such a mean exculpation; and with our heart, and mind, and soul, let us say or sob, "God, be merciful to me, a sinner."—Dr. Parker's "People's Bible."

"MY SOUL DOTH WAIT."

MY soul doth wait—yea, on his word I hope
More than the weary watchers for the morn,
Heartsick with hope deferred, who sad complain
(Longing for action which might quench the pain)
Will the night ne'er be past? this weight of woe
Be eased? this ceaseless agony be stilled?
As watch they the faint streaks, precursors of the dawn,
So wait I for the Lord. I know that He will hear,
And, though He hide his face, I still will look, nor fear.

No change! no sign! doth He not hear the cry?
Yes, fainting heart; He hears and whispers peace.
Though help be long delayed, pray on; no prayer
Is lost. Wait patiently; He knows thy care.
What though the eyes with watching long grow dim?
Hush thy wild beating, weary heart, and look;
For, though it tarry, it shall surely come—release
From haunting fear—the dread, unspoken, bitter pain
That mars thy life; list, though the ear ache with the strain.

For the heart craves an answer though none comes Fretful or wild breaks forth the anguished cry:
"God hath forgotten me!" Surely not so;
But thou must learn to say, "I'll trust although He slay me." Nor dictate the mode or time
Of answer. He has said, "I'll never fail;
My word stands true; only be still, and know that I Am God. Thou know'st not what I do, then school thy will
To patient, hoping faith. Be still, my child, be still!"

The answer often comes not as we would;
Therefore we mourn, and doubt, and fail to trace
His guiding hand of love; forget his ear
Detects a whisper while the heart-wrung prayer,
Importunate, that will not be denied,
"I will not let Thee go, except Thou bless,"
Is e'en in part the answer, and sufficient grace
Enables for the thorn. Thou canst not penetrate
His counsel. Tho' till heaven is reached it tarry, wait.

Then in calm faith and patience here I lie,
Waiting before his throne. My faith may fail,
But He is true. He hears my lowest moan,
Knows all my sorrows, knows that joy has flown
Out of my life by reason of the cares
That crowd my heart—yearnings for loved ones' souls
Yet far from God. So good, true, noble, yet so frail,
Will they in peace at last triumphant win the goal?
The vision tarries, but 'twill come. Peace, troubled soul!

So God shall train me. I will quiet be,
And trust Him though I cannot always trace.
He sees the end from the beginning, makes
All things subservient to his will, and takes
The wisest, gentlest way to work the plan.
So I will tell Him all my wants, my fears,
My cares, and draw upon the treasury of grace;
I'll hope for that I see not, then in patience wait
Till that He satisfy my heart within heaven's gate.

MISSION AT REUS, SPAIN.—Don A. Martinez reports, in a little occasional paper just issued, that, notwithstanding great efforts on the part of Romish ecclesiastics to hinder the progress of the Gospel, the services continue to be well attended. There is also a great readiness to hear the Gospel in the villages. Over a hundred boys and girls attend the day-school, and about seventy the Sunday-schools. An adult school has an attendance of fifteen. The work in many respects is very encouraging, and such as to stimulate to increased efforts to bring out of papal bondage those who have so long been its victims. Miss Nugent, 29, Eaton-terrace, S.W., will give further information with respect to this work.

ELIJAH THE PROPHET.—8.

By Rev. F. B. MEYER, B.A., Leicester.

THE CONFLICT ON THE HEIGHTS OF CARMEL.

1 Kings xviii.

It is early morning upon Mount Carmel. We are standing on the highest point, looking northwards to where Hermon, on the extreme borders of the land, rears its snowcapt head to heaven. Around us on the left lies the Mediterranean Sea; its deep blue waters flecked here and there by the sails of the Tyrian mariners. Immediately at Carmel's base winds Kishon's ancient brook, once choked by the slaughter of Sisera's host; and beyond it stretches the plain of Esdraelon, the garden of Palestine, but now sere and barren with three years' drought. Away there in the distance is the city of Jezreel, with the royal palace and the idol temple distinctly visible. From all sides the crowds are making their way towards this spot, which, from the remotest times, has been associated with worship. No work is being done anywhere; the fires are dying out in the smithy and the forge; the instruments of labour hang useless on the walls; and the whole thought of young and old is concentrated on that mighty convocation to which Ahab had summoned them. See! how the many thousands of Israel are slowly gathering; and taking up every spot of vantage ground from which a view can be obtained of the proceedings; and prepared for any extreme, from the impure rites of Baal and Astarte, to the re-establishment of their fathers' religion on the dead bodies of the false priests.

The people are nearly gathered, and there is the regular tread of marshalled men; four hundred prophets of Baal, conspicuous with the sun-symbols flashing on their brows; but the prophets of Astarte are absent; the queen, at whose table they ate, has overruled the summons of the king. And now through the crowd the litter of the king, borne by stalwart carriers, threads its way, surrounded by the great officers of state.

But our thought turns from the natural panorama, and the sea of upturned faces, and the flashing splendour of the priests, sure of court favour, and insolently defiant. And we fix our thought with intense interest on that one man, of sinewy build and flowing hair, who, with flashing eye and compressed lip, awaits the quiet hush which will presently fall upon that mighty concourse. One man against a nation! See, with what malignant glances his every movement is watched by the priests. No tiger ever watched its victim more fiercely! If they may have their way, he will never touch yonder plain again. The king alternates between fear and hate, but restrains himself, because he feels that, somehow, the coming of the rain depends on this one man. And through the crowd, if there be sympathisers, they are hushed and still. Even Obadiah discreetly keeps out of the way. But do not fear for Elijah. He needs no sympathy. He is consciously standing in the presence of One to whom the nations of men are as grasshoppers. All heaven is at his back. Legions of angels fill the mountain with horses and chariots of fire. He is only a man of like passions with ourselves, but he is full of faith and spiritual power; he has learnt the secret of moving God Himself; he can avail himself of the very resources of Deity, as a slender rod may draw lightning from the cloud. By faith, this very day—not by any inherent power, but by faith—you shall see him subdue a kingdom, work righteousness, escape the edge of the sword, wax valiant in the fight, and turn to flight armies of the aliens. Nothing shall be impossible to him. Is it not written that all things are possible to him that believeth? He spoke seven times during the course of that memorable day, and his words are the true index of what was passing in his heart.

(1) Elijah uttered a Remonstrance.—"Elijah came unto all the people and said, How long halt ye between two opinions? If Jehovah be God, follow Him; but if Baal, then follow him.' To his clear faith, which was almost sight, there was no "if." He did not doubt for a moment that Jehovah was God. But he wanted to show the people the absurdity of their position. Religions so diametrically opposed could not both be right. One of them must be wrong; and, as soon as the true one was discovered, the other, shown to be false, must be cast to the winds.

At present their position was illogical and absurd. Their course was like the limp of a man whose legs are uneven; or like the device of a servant employed to serve two masters, doing his best for both and failing to please either. His sincere and simple soul had no patience with such egregious folly. No doubt they had drifted into it, as men often do into absurd and wrong positions. We are all liable to that drift of the stream. But the time had come for the nation to be arrested in its attempt to mingle the worship of Jehovah and of Baal; and compelled to choose between the two issues that presented themselves. Undoubtedly the prophet felt that if once his people were compelled to choose between the two, and to say whether the Jehovah of their fathers, or Baal, should be God, there could be no doubt as to their verdict.

The people seem to have been stunned and ashamed that such alternatives should be presented to their choice; for "they answered him not a word." Oh, for the clearsightedness of that faith which shall show men the unreasonableness of their position; sweeping away the cobwebs of sophistry with a single movement of the hand; and arraigning them at the bar of their own consciences, silent and condemned. It is needed in our day as much as ever. Everywhere men are trying to win the smile of the world and the well-done of Christ. They crowd alike the temples of mammon and of God. They try to be popular in the court of Saul, and to stand well with the exiled David.

(2) Elijah threw down a Challenge.—"The God that answereth by fire, let Him be God." It was a fair proposal, because Baal was the lord of the sun, and the god of those productive natural forces, of which heat is the element and sign. The votaries of Baal could not, therefore, refuse.

And every Israelite could recall many an occasion in the glorious past when Jehovah had answered by fire. It burnt in the acacia bush, which was its own fuel; it shone like a beacon light in the van of the desert march; it gleamed on the brow of Sinai; it smote the murmuring crowds; it fell upon the sacrifices which awaited it on the brazen altar. It was the emblem of Jehovah, and the sign of His acceptance of his people's service.

When Elijah, therefore, proposed that each side should offer a bullock, and await an answer by fire, he secured the immediate acquiescence of the people. "All the people answered and said, It is well spoken."

That proposal was made in the perfect assurance that God would not fail him. Had he not spent days in prayer? Had not the Divine plan been revealed to him? Was it to be supposed for a moment that God would push his servant into the front of the battle, and then leave him? Granted that a miracle must be wrought ere the sun set. There was no difficulty about that to a man who lived in the secret place of the Most High. Miracles are only the results of the higher laws of his presence-chamber.

God will never fail the man who trusts Him utterly. He may keep him waiting till the fourth watch of the morning, but the grey dawn will reveal Him stepping across the billows' crests to his servants' help. Be sure that you are on God's plan; then forward in God's name; the very elements shall obey you, and fire shall leap from heaven at your command.

(3) Elijah dealt out withering Sarcasm.—For the first time in their existence the false priests were unable to insert the secret spark of fire among the faggots that lay upon their altar. They were compelled, therefore, to rely on a direct appeal to their patron deity. And this they did with might and main. Round and round the altar they went in the mystic choric dance, breaking their rank sometimes by an excited leap up and down at the altar which was made, and all the while repeating the monotonous chant, "Baal, hear us. Hear us, Baal." But there was no voice, nor any that answered. "Their idols are silver and gold, the work of men's hands. They have mouths, but they speak not; eyes have they, but they see not; they have ears, but they hear not; they that make them are like them, so is everyone that trusteth in them."

Three hours passed thus. Their deity slowly drove his golden car up the steep of heaven, and ascended his throne in the zenith. It was surely the time of his greatest power, and he must help them then, if ever. But all he did was to bronze to a deeper tint the eager, upturned faces of his priests.

Elijah could ill conceal his delight in their defeat. He knew it would be so. He was so sure that nothing could avert their utter discomfiture, that he could afford to mock them, by suggesting a cause for the indifference of their god: "Cry aloud, for he is a god; either he is talking, or he is pursuing, or he is in a journey, or peradventure he sleepeth, and must be awaked." Sarcasm is an invaluable weapon, when it is used to expose the ridiculous pretensions of error, and to convince men of the folly and unreasonableness of their ways.

"And they cried aloud, and cut themselves after their manner, with knives and lancets, till their blood gushed out upon them." Surely their extremity was enough to touch the compassion of any deity, however hard to move! And, since the heavens still continued dumb, did it not prove to the people that their religion was a delusion and a sham?

Thus three more hours passed by, till the hour had come when, in the temple of Jerusalem, the priests of God were accustomed to offer the evening lamb. "But there was neither voice, nor any to answer, nor any that regarded." The altar stood cold and smokeless, the bullock unconsumed.

(4) Elijah issued an Invitation.—His time had come at last; and his first act was to invite the people nearer. He knew what his faith and prayer had won from God, but he wanted the answer of fire to be beyond dispute. He, therefore, invited the close scrutiny of the people, as he reared the broken altar of the Lord. As he sought, with reverent care, those scattered stones; and built them together so that the twelve stood as one—meet symbol of the unity of the ideal Israel in the sight of God—the keen glances of the people, in his close proximity, could see that there was no inserted torch or secret spark.

Do we not want a few more, who, amid the scatterings of the present day, can still discern the true unity of the church, the body of Christ We may never see that unity visibly manifested until we see the Bride, the Lamb's wife, descend out of heaven from God, having the glory of God. But nevertheless we can enter into God's ideal of it as a spiritual unity, existing unbroken in his thought, and unaffected by the divisions of our times. Is it not clear that, during this age, the church of Christ was never meant to be a visible corporate body, but to be a great spiritual reality, consisting of all faithful and loyal spirits, in all communions, who, holding the Head, are necessarily one with each other.

(5) Elijah gave a Command.—His faith was exuberant. He was so sure of God that he dared to heap difficulties in his way, knowing that there is no real difficulty for infinite power. The more unlikely the answer was, the more glory would there be to God. Oh, matchless faith! which can laugh at impossibilities, and can even heap them one upon another, to have the pleasure of seeing God vanquish them, as a steam hammer cracks a nut-shell placed under it by the wondering child.

The altar was reared, the wood laid in order, the bullock cut in pieces, but to prevent any possibility of fraud, and to make the coming miracle still more wonderful, Elijah said, "Fill four barrels with water, and pour it on the sacrifice and on the wood." This they did three times, till the wood was drenched, and the water filled the trench, making it impossible for a spark to travel across.

Alas, few of us have faith like this! We are not so sure of God that we dare to pile difficulties in His way. We all try our best to make it easy for Him to help us. Yet what this man had, we too may have, by prayer and fasting.

(6) Elijah offered a Prayer.—Such a prayer! It was quiet and assured, confident of an answer. Its chief burden was that God should vindicate Himself that day, in showing Himself to be God indeed, and in turning the people's heart back to Himself.

Whenever we can so lose ourselves in prayer as to forget personal interests, and to plead for the glory of God, we have reached a vantage ground from which we can win anything from Him. Our blessed Lord, in his earthly life, had but one passion, that his Father might be glorified; and now He cannot resist fulfilling the prayer which advances this as its plea: "Whatsoever ye shall ask the Father in my name, that will I do, that the Father may be glorified in the Son."

Is it wonderful that "the fire of the Lord fell, and consumed the burnt sacrifice, and the wood, and the stones, and the dust, and licked up the water that was in the trench"? It could not have been otherwise. And let us not think that this is an old-world tale, never to be repeated. The fire still waits for the Prometheus faith that can bring it down. If there were the same need, and if anyone of us exercised the same faith, we might again see fire descending? Did not the Holy Ghost inaugurate this very age with flames of fire? Our God is a consuming fire; and when once the unity of his people is [illegible], and his presence is sought, He will descend, overcoming all obstacles, and converting a drenched and dripping sacrifice into food on which He Himself can feed.

(7) Elijah issued an Order for Execution.—It was a very terrible act; and yet what could he do? The saints of those times knew nothing of our false notions of liberality. Tell Elijah that those men might be sincere, he would find it difficult to believe it; and he would assert that they were none the less dangerous to the best interests of his people. To let them escape would be to license them as the agents of apostasy. They must die. And so the order went forth, from those stern lips: "Take the prophets of Baal, let not one of them escape." The people were in the mood to obey. Only a moment before they had rent the air with the shout, "Jehovah, He is the God, Jehovah, He is the God." They see how hideously they had been deceived. And now they close round the cowed and vanquished priests, who see that resistance is vain, and that their hour is come.

"And they took them." Some took one, and some another; each priest was hurried down the mountain side by the frenzied and determined men who were beginning to see in them the cause of the long-continued drought.

"Elijah brought them down to the brook Kishon, and slew them there." One after another they fell beneath his sword; whilst the king stood by, a helpless spectator of their doom, and Baal did nought to save them.

And when the last was dead, the prophet knew that rain was not far off. He could almost hear the footfall of the clouds hurrying up towards the land. He knew, what we all need to know, that God Himself can only bless the land or heart which no longer shelters within its borders rivals to Himself. May God clear us of his rivals, and impart to us Elijah's faith, that we also may be strong and do exploits!

THE BETTING MANIA.

A Leeds correspondent writes to The Pall Mall Gazette as follows with reference to articles it recently published on the betting mania:—"Here we have what is not, I believe, allowed in any other town in England, and what I consider a blot and a disgrace—that is, a daily assemblage of all sorts and conditions of men, women, and children, on a large space of ground set apart for them, just behind the Kirkgate market, and popularly known as the Midding. Here every day you will find a repetition of the scenes that take place on the racecourse, the bookmaker and all his accessories. The last time I was there there would be about 3000 persons present. Bookmakers of all grades were there—men, women, and lads. One lad I saw mounted on an empty box calling out the odds to an excited crowd of women, who were staking and losing, perhaps the few coppers for which their husbands had toiled, and which should have bought bread for their starved children. Here, too, were errand lads, shop lads, clerks, rich men and poor, all making up a scene which only wanted horses to make it complete. A man is employed to keep the motley crowd informed as to the results of races, &c. All this takes place with the full knowledge and consent of the police."

THE PURITY MOVEMENT IN AMERICA.—Mr. Samuel James Capper, of the Gospel Purity Association, has been visiting America; he lectured on the Sunday evening before returning to this country, at the Church of the Disciples, Boston, on "The White Cross." Mr. Capper also spoke in Philadelphia and New York, where meetings in earnest advocacy of the cause were held. In a letter to The Boston Philanthropist, he mentions that he witnessed the third reading of "The Contagious Diseases Acts Repeal Law" in the Legislative Council of Jamaica on May 2.

BIBLE STUDY.

"The precious blood of Christ."

(1) The ground of our acceptance.—"It is the blood that maketh an atonement for the soul" (Lev. xvii. 11). "When I see the blood I will pass over you" (Ex. xii. 13). "Having made peace through the blood of his cross, by Him to reconcile all things unto Himself" (Col. i. 20). "Justified by his blood" (Rom. v. 9). "The blood is the life" (Deut. xii. 23). "The good shepherd giveth his life for the sheep" (John x. 11). "He laid down his life for us" (1 John iii. 16).

(2) The channel of forgiveness.—"In whom we have redemption through his blood, the forgiveness of sins, according to the riches of his grace" (Eph. i. 7). "God for Christ's sake hath forgiven you" (Eph. iv. 32). "You hath He quickened together with Him, having forgiven you all trespasses" (Col. ii. 13).

(3) The means of cleansing.—"The blood of Jesus Christ his Son cleanseth us from all sin" (1 John i. 7). "For if the blood of bulls and of goats, and the ashes of an heifer sprinkling the unclean, sanctifieth to the purifying of the flesh: how much more shall the blood of Christ . . . purge your conscience from dead works to serve the living God?" (Heb. ix. 13, 14). "Washed . . . from our sins in his own blood" (Rev. i. 5). "These are they which . . . have washed their robes, and made them white in the blood of the Lamb" (Rev. vii. 14).

(4) The separating power.—"Pass the time of your sojourning here in fear: Forasmuch as ye know that ye were not redeemed with corruptible things . . . from your vain conversation . . . but with the precious blood of Christ" (1 Pet. i. 17—19). "Jesus, that He might sanctify the people with his own blood, suffered without the gate. Let us go forth therefore unto Him without the camp, bearing his reproach" (Heb. xiii. 12, 13).

(5) The secret of overcoming.—"They overcame ...by the blood of the Lamb" (Rev. xii. 11). "Always bearing about in the body the dying of the Lord Jesus, that the life also of Jesus might be made manifest in our body" (2 Cor. iv. 10). "God forbid that I should glory, save in the Cross of our Lord Jesus Christ, by whom the world is crucified unto me, and I unto the world" (Gal. vi. 14).

(6) The pledge of blessing.—"This cup is the new testament in my blood" (Luke xxii. 20). "He is the mediator of the new testament, that by means of death, for the redemption of the transgressions that were under the first testament, they which are called might receive the promise of eternal inheritance" (Heb. ix. 15). "He that spared not his own Son, but delivered Him up for us all, how shall He not with Him also freely give us all things?" (Rom. viii. 32).

(7) Apprehension needful to spiritual life.—"Except ye eat the flesh of the Son of man, and drink his blood, ye have no life in you. Whoso eateth my flesh, and drinketh my blood, hath eternal life; and I will raise him up at the last day. For my flesh is meat indeed, and my blood is drink indeed" (John vi. 53—55).

ITALY IN LONDON.—In a loft over a cowshed, in Saffron-hill, two Salvation Army officers are carrying on a work amongst the poor Italians for whom it might almost be said, "no man cares." This room the many poor organ-grinders and ice-cream vendors have learned to regard as a sort of common home. There were some strange scenes at first, the roughs having it almost their own way occasionally. But now many of these are helpers in the work; a great transformation has been wrought. Numbers attend the meetings every night in the hall, and the open-air meetings attract crowds of willing listeners. In this cowshed loft a grand work is being done; the joy of salvation is seen in the faces of not a few, and the officers themselves are graduating in this Saffron-hill college for the larger field in Italy itself.

THE OPIUM CURSE.

I am glad to see, from time to time, some attention drawn, in the pages of The Christian, to the fearful curse of opium-smoking in China, and long for the day when England's connection with the accursed thing shall be but a memory of the past; but I fear the evil inflicted can never be atoned for.

I fully endorse the statement made by Mr. Hudson Taylor, at the Thursday afternoon missionary meeting at the Mildmay Conference—viz., that the curse of opium in China is probably greater, by far, than that of slavery has ever been in any part of the world. It is sapping the very life of the empire. Few children are born to confirmed opium-smokers, and of these, probably, a very small number escape the inherited craving for the drug, or attain to the average mental capacity of a healthy Chinaman. I have seen boys of fifteen slaves to the pipe, and many younger ones addicted to the habit of smoking it.

I have lived and slept in Chinese inns scores of times, with as many as a dozen opium-smokers in the same room, and thus had every opportunity of judging its effects. I have heard the verdict in hundreds of cities, towns, and villages in North China, and it invariably is, "One half, at least, of our adult population are addicted to the habit." All classes are enslaved—the rich, the poor, and, forsooth, the priests of Buddha also.

And not only opium-smokers themselves are the victims of this demon drug of British commerce, but thousands of poor innocent women are every year driven to end their miserable lives by taking suicidal doses, and thus leave their husbands to continue their ruinous course in peace. Few missionaries, generally known by the people, have not been called at all hours of the day and night by the friends of some such victim, to restore life if possible. I have been called to three such cases in one day, each of which was within five minutes' walk of my house; and as a rule, the thing is, more or less, directly connected with the opium pipe. One or more members of the family have brought ruin, debt, and disgrace upon the whole.

No one really conversant with the social life of the people can doubt, for a moment, the universality of the use of the drug and its baneful effects, nor very well fail to arrive at the conclusion that the curse of opium, in China, is greater than the curse of idolatry, since it ruins the body in this present life, as well as the soul, bringing untold misery to other and to future generations.

The following lines, composed by a friend of the Chinese, seem particularly appropiate, and deserve to see the light. A. G. Parrott.

CHINA.

Mysterious land!
What thoughts arise as we contemplate thee;
For thou dost stand
Unique upon the page of history;
And in thy strangeness dost appear
A portion of another sphere.

Ancient thou art
Amongst the ancient nations of the world;
And ever loth to part
From thy ancestral ways; thou hast unfurled
And round thee wrapp'd a mantle of reserve,
And they who fain would serve
Thy best and highest interests, are oft
Repell'd and scoff'd.

Hoary with years,
And bloated with the pride of tyranny,
Thy idol-worship rears
Its hydra-headed form in enmity
To truth and right,
Filling each vacant place
With forms fantastic—gods of wood and stone,
And in its wide embrace
Binding its devotees unnumber'd down
With chains of night.
And what is that which stalks throughout the Ghastly and grim? [land,
Its victims bear its brand: the trembling hand,
The palsied limb,
The idiotic look, and sunken cheek—
A monster of unnatural birth,
Sprung from the bosom of the earth,
Bearing upon its baneful breath
Th' accursed opiate of death.
Near kinsman to the demon Drink, which reigns
O'er many British hearts and British brains.

O England! deep the stain that mars
The lustre of thy fame;
Not civil feuds nor bloody wars
Could so disgrace thy name.
Thou hast an evil spirit raised
Which holds, as with a spell,
A mighty nation's mind, debased
With woes unspeakable.

Hapless the country where this evil gains
Its greatest conquests; o'er whose teeming plains
Idolatry and superstition sway;
Where chilling pride and apathy display
Their front against the march of spiritual day.

But, China, thou shalt rise
And from the spell burst free;
A voice now from the skies
Is speaking unto thee.
In distant climes the voice is heard,
And men whose hearts thy woes have stirr'd,
Are speeding over land and sea
To rouse thee from idolatry.

Resistless, firm, and steady,
Rolls on the Gospel tide,
Its foremost waves already
Are bursting on thy side.
And soon o'er every city,
And every wayside green,
This deluge of God's pity
Shall flow in might serene.

Ye sons of Britain, who impatient stand
To spread the honour of your Fatherland,
Whose breasts contain the sacred fire which shone
So nobly in the heart of Livingstone—
Send forth your energies, and wide diffuse
O'er China's realm the everlasting news,
Till idols from their lofty thrones be cast,
Opium be but a memory of the past,
And truth triumphant reign o'er all that Empire vast. W. H. P.

An article in the July Contemporary Review, on "Life and Thought in China," contributed by a resident in Pekin, refers, though rather cursorily, to the subject on which Mr. Parrott feels so strongly. He says:—

"After all the mischief done by opium to China, her statesmen have been none the less quick to perceive that friendly relations with England should be cultivated.... The Government has made no serious and persistent effort to stamp out the native growth of the poppy, nor does it show at present any approach to a new policy in that respect. The cure of opium smoking must be effected now by moral means. The opium revenue the Chinese Government value too much to abandon.... The people themselves have societies, the members of which avoid opium smoking, tobacco smoking, spirits, and wine. To this native propaganda are to be added the efforts of Christian missionaries, to promote the abandonment of opium smoking. The spread of a moral crusade against opium smoking will be in proportion to the extent of the mission, and the Government will necessarily regard the Christian missionary as a helper in promoting social morality. The Government is busily engaged about other things, but the time must come when they will attend to this matter of native-grown opium.

"The opium question is, perhaps, becoming less a political question than a moral one. The harm done by opium smoking in South Burmah, while under British rule, is opening the eyes of Indian Statesmen to the necessity of restricting the supply of this dangerous commodity; and there they are likely to appreciate better the views held by all Chinese, high and low, who desire the welfare of their fellowmen and their country."

Writing on the same burning topic, a travelling correspondent of The Echo says:—

"If you wish to see opium smoked in public it it is useless for you to go into any Chinese native city, for there the use of the drug is not permitted. To witness the degrading spectacle, you must go to some treaty port, under English, French, and German protection; such, for instance, as the English 'Concession,' as it is called, at Shanghai. There you can see the Chinaman debauching himself, 'none daring to make him afraid.' In the closely adjoining walled city of Shanghai, under Mandarin rule, the opium house would not be tolerated for an hour. A chinaman who attempted to open one would be put in the Cangue, heavily fined, well bambooed, and probably imprisoned for a lengthy period of time. But the opium house in a luxurious way is officially allowed in the English 'Concession,' and does a roaring trade. I accompanied a Chinaman who was going to smoke, and watched the operation. I left him to look over the establishment, and saw that in the building there was eighty rooms, all occupied by Chinamen doing precisely what my friend was doing, all of them becoming partially insensible at intervals; while in the corridors of the house their stood many Chinese, waiting—it was three o'clock in the afternoon—to take their turn with the pipes and the couches.

"A more sickening spectacle I never witnessed. The ashy pallor on the faces of the smokers, the sickly hue of the men waiting, their decrepit forms and feeble appearence—the whole scene of debauchery filled me with horror. And when I thought that this and many similiar houses owed their right to existence to the protection of the British flag, I felt that it was useless to trouble Chinamen to receive our missionaries. As I finished moralising, 'my' Chinaman was staggering to his feet, having previously drunk a cup of tea, and wiped his forehead with a hot wet towel, and was preparing to follow me out of this den of iniquity into the open air of the street. He was still somewhat silly, and quite unable to talk."

EXETER HOME FOR FALLEN WOMEN.—The twenty-fourth report of this Home states that during the past three years seventy-five girls have been received, of whom thirty-one have been outfitted and sent to service, after (as a rule) two years' training. There are still nineteen in the Home. It is interesting to mention that all these contributed to the Women's Jubilee Offering, though having, of course, no money of their own. The matron promised each one threepence who should learn the first seven verses of Psalm xxi. This they all did and repeated perfectly. Afterwards the verses were continually turned into a prayer for the Queen's Jubilee. Mrs. G. de Courcy Hamilton is the lady superintendent. The Home is at 44, Bartholomew-street, Exeter.

THE PARIS PRESS AND CHRISTIAN WORK.—The fact that one of the influential political newspapers of Paris, Le Matin, has given place in its columns to a well-studied article on the Bible and Bible societies, as also to an impartial and sympathetic account of the inauguration of the new Protestant Mission House in Paris, is worthy of note. Heretofore such notices, if made at all, have too often manifested ignorance or wilful misrepresentation. "The dedicatory discourse," says Le Matin, "was given by the eminent preacher of the Church of L'Etoile, Pastor Bersier. He accuses the whole Christian and civilised world of gross neglect of the heathen; specially noting the hindrances caused by the introduction of German alcohol and English opium. It behoves us, therefore, before saying, 'Lord have pity on the heathen,' to pray, 'Lord have pity on us.'" Several French religious papers refer to these articles as as encouragement to missionary work. The most important French review, Le Revue des Deux Mondes, begins also in the number, June 1, a series of articles on the "Protestant Associations of Paris." The author, M. Maxime Ducamp, proposes to study the principal philanthropic works carried on by Protestants. M. Ducamp has the art, not only of seeing, but of making others see; he has not the same admiration for evangelical beneficence as for Catholic good works, and his knowledge of Protestantism leaves much to be desired. "Our ecclesiastical divisions," says La Christianisme, "are rather perplexing, as, indeed, they may well be."

A MILDMAY CONFERENCE ADDRESS.

Rev. F. B. Meyer, of Leicester, gave the address at the nine o'clock meeting on the first morning of the Conference. This is a family meeting for prayer, at which, besides the deaconesses and stewards, and those engaged about the hall, the orphan children who are under training here all assemble. The speaker, therefore, generally addresses his remarks to them. Mr. Meyer took for his text 1 Chron. xii. 15—18 and 22, and said:—

Now, dear children, at the time of which I speak to you there were two kings in Israel. One of these two kings lived in the capital city, in a splendid palace, with servants and soldiers and many great men around him. If we had been living there, I think we should have been inclined to linger outside those palace gates, and, looking in upon the splendour of the king, to say, "This is a great king." But there was another king, and to find him you would have had to leave behind you the great city, to go where there were no villages or towns, where all was still and quiet, and as you went down one of those valleys in that desert place, you would have seen the mouth of a great cave. Outside were one or two men walking to and fro like sentinels, and inside were a great number of men, women, and little children. There also was one whom all loved so much, who had no crown on his head, who went in and out among them like any other, but who was their real king. We might have wondered, if we had been there, which king we should take—whether the one at that great palace, or he who lived, an uncrowned king, in that cave. If we had watched a little while we should have made up our minds, because we should have found that Saul, with all his soldiers and state, was not God's king, that he was a bad man and filled with an evil spirit. But if we had gone to the cave we should have heard the people there singing some of those sweet Psalms which we love so well—I think we should have said we would rather have been with the exiled king who had God's blessing than with him who, with all the splendour of the palace, had not God with him. You would have gone with me to that cave. The people got tired of Saul. He was a bad master—he took them to be his slaves—and he was a bad king. Yes, you would have said we won't stop any longer with Saul, we will go to the cave where David is, and be his subjects.

Now notice, the people who said this had to leave the city. They put their children and goods on asses. They left their happy homes, and went to where David was, and he came to meet them, and said unto them, "If ye be come peaceably unto me to help me, mine heart shall be knit unto you; but if ye be come to betray me to mine enemies, seeing there is no wrong in mine hands, the God of our fathers look thereon and rebuke it." Then they answered, "Thine are we, David, and on thy side, thou son of Jesse. Peace be unto thee, and peace be to thine helpers, for thy God helpeth thee." What a blessed word to say! That little word "thy" indicates proprietorship—"Thy God."

Do you know there are two kings to-day? There is the prince of this world, who is Satan; he is loved and worshipped by so many people. But there is another king, not seen by the people of the world. He is God's king—the dear Lord Jesus. He is outside the world: you won't find Him in the palaces or streets or markets of the world. He is outside the world, and He is God's king. I want you to come away out of the selfish, sinful kingdom of Satan, to come into the lonely place outside the city and outside the world, where Jesus is. There are a lot of people gathering around Him, and if you go to meet Him, I know He will come to meet you, and if we, Thou Son of Jesse," He will say, "My heart shall be knit with yours."

In this passage there are three comes—come out, come to, come with. (1) Before these people were able to come to David, they had to come away from Saul; and before we can come to Jesus, our great King, we must come away out of the world which does not love Him. Years ago, when there was such persecution in Scotland, all who loved Jesus had to go away from their houses and meet in the woods and open spaces. I remember hearing how a bright young girl, who knew the Covenanters were going to meet in some spot, left her home, and went towards their meeting-place. She went on and on and no one seemed in sight; but suddenly she was surrounded by a number of soldiers on horseback. They were the dragoons of Claverhouse, who, pointing their bayonets at her, bade her say where she was going, because, seeing her Bible, they thought she was going to some meeting of the Covenanters.

After a moment's silent prayer, she said, "My elder brother has died, and his will is going to be read this afternoon. My father has said all the children are to have a portion of his inheritance, and I am going to hear if there is something for me in it." They then let her pass and did nothing to her. She went out to seek a blessing. There is no such persecution for us now. But if you want to follow Christ you must leave behind bad companions, and give up sinful ways—you must turn your back on all who do not love Jesus—you must not belong to a world which has rejected Christ.

(2) Those who came to David said, "We are thine." Have you all come to Jesus and said, "Lord Jesus, I am thine." These people did not give their money, they gave themselves. That is what we have to do with Jesus—give Him ourselves. A little boy at a missionary meeting, when the plate came round, had nothing to put in it. So he said, "Put the plate lower," and then, when at his request it was put on the ground, he put his foot in it, and said, "I have no halfpennies to give, like my schoolfellows, so I will give myself." Jesus is standing here in your midst, and He is greater than anybody else. He wants you just to hear Him, and come to Him, and say, "I am thine, Jesus, from to-day."

Fifty years ago, in Westminster Abbey, there was a sight almost as splendid as that witnessed there yesterday. The Queen, then a young woman, first knelt in prayer, and then, having taken her seat on her throne, the Archbishop of Canterbury placed on her head the crown of England. As he put the crown on her head all the Peers of the realm who had up to that moment remained covered, lifted their coronets from their heads. There was a flashing of rare and exquisite jewels, a scene of great magnificence, and then, as these Peers passed one by one before the young Queen, they followed the old custom of taking the coronet from their foreheads, and touching therewith the crown on the head of their new Sovereign, thus signifying, We are thine, to defend with life and limb. Just as those great men of England touched the crown of the Queen of England, showing that they were hers for life, so I want you to come and touch the crown of Jesus, and say, "Dear Jesus, from to-day I am thine." And from the moment you do so you are his. You may then go on saying what I say a hundred times a day to myself—before I lift my eyes from the pillow, whenever Satan tempts me, whenever I get into a difficulty, and at last before I close my eyes in slumber, "Dear Jesus, I am thine, save me." Give yourselves to Jesus, dear children, and then say this as often as you can, "I am thine, save me."

(3) David did not always stay in that cave. After a while Saul was killed, his kingdom was broken, and David came to be king over all the land. When David came to be king, who do you think came with him? Why, those who had been with him in the cave, those who had gone out with him when he was exiled—these now sat with him in high places, and helped him in the affairs of the realm.

Now let me give you a parable. Once the They said, "We won't have this man to reign over us." There was only one man who still remained loyal to their prince, and when they put their prince in the pillory this man was there beside him. He sat by his side, and was bespattered with the filth thrown upon him, and when the prince was turned out of the city this friend went with him. Years passed slowly away, and the people of that great city longed to have their prince back again. And one day it was said he was coming back. The day at length arrived; the bells pealed; there was a grand display of flags, the prince came in through the city gate, and there, sitting beside him, was another. Who was that, do you think? Why, the man who had sat in the pillory and suffered with his prince—there, radiant and smiling, sat this friend—the prince and he came back together. So will it be very soon. Whatever you have to suffer now will soon be forgotten, because Jesus is coming back to be King over all the world. And who will rejoice then? Why, you and I who now are with Him in exile—we, his brethren now, when He comes again will shine forth as stars in the kingdom of God.

"ERIN'S ONLY HOPE."

IT is gratifying to read in the report of the Scripture Readers' Society for Ireland that, notwithstanding the troubled condition of the country, never was the field of work more inviting than at the present moment. Not only are the Readers never molested in doing their work, but they are heartily welcomed—by none more than by the Roman Catholics. Their testimony is that they can understand what the Protestant says, but cannot understand the priest. And the letters from Scripture Readers which form so interesting a portion of this report mention very many cases of those who most thankfully receive the visits of the Reader and attend the meetings, though sometimes compelled by persecution to desist from doing so, and of many visits to the sick and dying. One cites the case of a poor woman who sent for him to visit her just to hear again the "old, old story,' and who, he says, is truly trusting in the Lord Jesus Christ for her soul's salvation.

The itinerating work is of the most interesting character. Of this it is impossible to give even an idea in a short notice such as this; but the account is so bright and cheering, at a time when the hearts of all are so agitated by what is going on in the sister isle, that it would be well indeed if the report could have a very wide circulation. It abundantly justifies the statement which the Society has adopted as its motto, that in such work as this, in the preaching of the Gospel and the scattering of the Word of God, is "Erin's only hope."

The Readers are evidently the right sort of men. Some of them were once Roman Catholics, and their conversion was wrought through the instrumentality of the Scriptures only, and was effected in a truly wonderful manner. These men visit all classes of the people wherever they go, and a very great work is being done by them, the value of which many clergymen attest. Those who have ever visited the field, and seen the character of the work done, say that what they had read of it fell far short of the reality. The secretary is Captain James Kearney White, 27, Lower Pembroke-steeet, Dublin.

SOUL-WINNING AND PRAYER UNION.—Text for July 10 (Isaiah lxii. 6, 7):—"I have set watchmen upon thy walls, O Jerusalem, which shall never hold their peace day nor night: ye that make mention of the Lord, keep not silence, and give Him no rest till He establish, and till He make Jerusalem a praise in the earth."

A MISSION TOUR IN INDIA.—2.

Nov. 24, 1886.—Left Bombay for Poona. As one travels up the Bore Ghaut the scenery is very fine; there is one wonderful hill with a top like a large church, or cathedral, which is seen at several different points. Arrived at Poona and was very kindly received by Mr. and Mrs. Beaumont, of the Free Church Mission, who hospitably invited me to their house during my stay. Messrs. Johnson and Insell, of the London Missionary Society, my late fellow passengers, were also here. This is a place of great missionary activity; there are, amongst others, Mr., Mrs., and Miss Beaumont, and Mr., Mrs., and Miss Small, of the Free Church of Scotland; Misses Bernard, of the Church of Scotland Ladies' Association; there is also the Victoria High School, conducted by a native lady and her daughters, Mrs. and the Misses Sorabji; Mr. Sorabji is a retired native clergyman of the Church Missionary Society, and Mrs. Sorabji will be well known to many of your readers, as she has been recently addressing meetings in England, Scotland, and Ireland, and pleading eloquently on behalf of India's women.

The temperature here is much lower than in Bombay. I enjoyed the beauty of the place immensely; the trees and flowers were lovely; everywhere there was a perfect blaze of glory. As we drove through the station we saw crimson, blue, magenta, lilac, yellow, gold, orange, salmon, pink, maroon, and many tints and shades of these colours, while the deep green background served to bring into relief all the other colours to perfection.

Nov. 25.—I visited the Victoria High School to-day and was greatly pleased with what I saw, especially its distinctly Christian, one might say missionary, character. There are boys and girls, boarders and day-scholars, European, Eurasian, and native children, Christian and heathen, all learning together. It is the only school of the kind I have seen. It seems to be very popular, and I should say, calculated to do a great deal of good, as it must tend to break down class prejudice, and draw together Europeans and natives, Christians and heathen. The education given is I believe very good, as the Misses Sorabji are highly educated ladies, and seem to have a great love and gift for teaching. It was very interesting to see some of the children going through one of their Kindergarten pieces. At a recent Scripture examination a Brahmin boy, of about twelve, carried off first prize. Miss Small, who conducted the examination, says that his answers were faultless. The Misses Sorabji have also a bazaar school of poor children, which must, I think, be a power for good; they also carry on Zenana work.

Nov. 26.—A cloudy, cool morning. At 8 o'clock I walked over to the poorhouse in the camp bazaar and went over it. There were only ten inmates, of whom two were Christian lepers, a man, Mahadeo, and a woman, Sahaitri; most of the other inmates are Christians, and a regular service is held for them in a little room attached to the institution, set apart for the purpose. The poor lepers seemed gratified at my taking an interest in them.

At 11 o'clock I went to see the Misses Bernard, of the Church of Scotland Ladies' Association, who had kindly promised to take me to see some of their schools. Accompanied by Miss Bernard, I visited six of their eight city schools, and was intensely interested in all that I saw. The little girls were extremely bright and intelligent, and seemed to enter into their work with great spirit. At one school I asked some questions about the Lord Jesus, which they answered well. These ladies are doing a splendid work here and are deserving of every support. They have eight girls' schools in the city and camp, two mixed village schools, and one village night school for boys and men. They have about twenty-five girls, boarders, living with them, whom they take with them to visit in the other schools; ninety Zenanas are regularly visited; there are seven assistant missionary ladies and thirteen native Christian teachers, and a catechist is employed to preach in the villages. Besides all this, Miss Dr. Bernard has just opened a medical mission.

The Free Church missionaries are also hard at work, but I was unable, owing to my limited time, to see much of their work. They have two orphanages, one for boys, with a printing press attached, and one for girls; there is also a boys' day school. Mr. Small was out on a preaching tour, so I had not the pleasure of meeting him.

ROUGH DIAMONDS.

AN EAST-END DISTRICT.

This is the season of the year when we find tent missions in many parts of our vast Metropolis. The plan of holding meetings under canvas increasingly meets with supporters, and this year Canning Town finds favour for the first time, in the matter of a "monster marquee mission." Before mentioning the mission (a subject we must reserve till next week) some account of this populous district may serve as a background to the notice of the effort now proceeding.

One day last week we visited the district, and obtained information from some of the inhabitants themselves. Canning Town has features which are peculiar to itself. The people though poor differ from those of surrounding districts. The neighbouring docks and gigantic ironworks, and the dearth of factories where lighter work is provided, relieve it of factory hands. The "horny-handed" sons of toil who wield the hammer soon make for themselves homes, and family life when conducted in the right spirit is of a solid character.

Train from Broad-street to Poplar; Poplar to Barking-road by 'bus, and we were in Canning Town. Dr. Moir, a resident physician, kindly consented to accompany us on our ramble. Canning Town is separated from the London district by an iron bridge which spans the river Lea; and this same bridge bears a very important relationship to the drinking habits of the people. The public-houses on one side of the bridge (Canning Town being a municipal borough) close an hour and a half before those on the other side. Consequently a stream of men may be seen crossing the bridge about eleven each night intent upon another hour and a half's drinking.

In order that we might discover the general opinion in the district regarding the Mission and its probable effects, we interviewed men of every class. A grocer, bootmaker, chemist, oilman, policeman, 'bus driver, prize fighter, and loafer were each spoken to. The grocer was a converted man, and his shop was a credit to the district. He was very enthusiastic over the success and, what he believed to be, the ultimate stability of the Mission. The bootmaker was not a total abstainer, neither were the chemist, oilman, prize fighter, and loafer. The responsible members of the batch expressed a conviction that the Mission would do good. The prize fighter promised to come to the meeting, but the loafer "didn't know nothink about it." It was satisfactory to find those men who should know, expressing a belief that such a movement would benefit the people, and, judging by the good behaviour, attention and bearing at the meetings, the working men of West Ham know what is best for them.

The district is not a good field for "slumming;" for, having been of rapid growth, its streets are wide, and there are no grimy alleys worth speaking of. The 500 workers at the marquee seem of the right sort, and work for the general good. This seems the character of the West Hamites generally, and, but for the curse of the drink, many of these burly English working-men would really be "pillars of the State." Shining though their rough exteriors are noble traits of character, and the men, if freed from these besetments, would rise in their true manhood. This is why the mission is especially commendable in seeking to help such men.

But what about the opposing forces? Verily their name is legion, as proved by our ramble round the district. The saloons established in these poorer quarters seem to out-distance in splendour those of more wealthy neighbourhoods. Those in the main road are gorgeous in the possession of highly polished mahogany fronts, with corridors upon the walls of which are tile-set pictures of "ye olden dayes." Within, the lacquered work, stained glass, mirrors, ruby wines and glass, gleam, glisten, and glitter, multiplying their radiance in the light which falls from a hundred brilliant gas jets. No wonder the worn ironworker, dock worker, bargeman, or "poor Jack"—fresh from a voyage—seek some brightening of their humdrum lives in these gilded man-traps.

Far down the street upon the wet evening shines the welcoming light from the gin palace, outshining in illumination the feeble mission lamp, whose flickering light reflected in the wet pavement is as nothing when compared to the variegated radiance of a public bar, the warmth and good fellowship of which, entice the wanderer. The committee of the Marquee Mission at Canning Town are aware of this, and six circular chandeliers of iron are supplied by a monster meter within, whilst outside the electric light shows far along the road on either side, and reveals the great flags which wave in the breeze. Mr. Moody would call this "sanctified common sense." Thus the tent is filled to overflowing every night, and the one wish of these men is that they could always spend such a bright evening, and escape the snares that surround them. Many of them hate the drink, but cannot resist the temptation created by the taste they have acquired.

The prize-fighter whom we saw at the tent on a subsequent evening, was anxious to escape from the life he lived, but the evil companionships were strong, and the drink met him at every hand. He was a man of intellectual power, and if his talents were directed in the right channel he would be a power for good. We saw hundreds of great burly men outside the public-houses when they should have been at home with their families. As Mr. Noble says, "They sing 'Home sweet home' in the public-house but they never go there; 'Wait till the clouds roll by, Jennie,' and she does have to wait." There is cause for rejoicing though; for Alderman Phillips—who takes a leading part in the Mission—stated that one publican said to him, "You can pass as many resolutions as you like in council, but that great big tent you've put up is taking our customers away."

A point of importance struck us in the happy choice of situation which Mr. Noble and the committee have made for the first summer mission. Situated as it is the midst of those toiling multitudes, right near the docks, the influence must be felt by the floating population of seamen and others. In this direction we know not but that its usefulness may extend to the uttermost parts of the earth. Next week we hope to state some of the results and individual cases, who are the "rough diamonds" brought up from the mire.

"Q."

MESSRS. MATEER AND PARKER were to leave Melbourne for England on May 17. They have been doing a good work in Victoria, but found that so much evangelistic work had been in progress during the past few months that their sphere of operations were restricted. They have made many friends in the colonies, and their work has been

ALDERSHOT REVISITED.

I could scarcely say whether sadness or gladness was strongest in my breast when I found myself standing once more in "the large hall" of the well-known "Soldiers' Home." Old faces, remembered from the past, rose up to my imagination; and old voices as I had heard them in other days, when soldier lads had poured forth their hearts' feelings in words of prayer or of praise, seemed again to break on my ear. Where were those men of "The Black Watch" who had wished me "good-bye" on the platform of the railway station, just ere starting for the Curragh? Where those bandsmen of the Lancaster regiment who had played their kilted comrades out of camp? And where, again, the white-tuniced "Seaforth" whom so often I had seen in this hall? How many were still standing in the faith of the Lord Jesus—how many had fallen back; and how many had reached "a fairer country, far away, far away?" I had just begun to muse over such questions when a tall, military-looking gentleman entered the hall, and as I heard him say, "This is the place of which I heard so much in Egypt." I ventured to add, "Thousands of prayers for those in Egypt have pierced this roof above our heads."

"Did you know Col. —— in Egypt?" I asked, mentioning the name of a well-known officer connected with "the Army of Occupation."

"He was a very dear friend of mine," was the reply. "He was saved in this very 'Home,'" said I. This intelligence made the already bright face of my new acquaintance even brighter still, and led him to promise that, if possible, he would be back for the meeting at night.

The prolonged military displays, in connection with "Jubilee" rejoicing, had made it a rather wearisome time for both camp and town, having entailed a good deal of extra work on both soldier and civilian, but the meetings were as well attended as when I was there before; the prayers as earnest, and the praise as hearty; and if I felt somewhat sad to miss "the Highlander," "the Rifle Brigadesman," and the men of Leicestershire and Lancashire, I was glad to see "the Borderer," "the Inniskillener," and "the Fusilier," with the men of York, Norfolk, and of my native county, Northamptonshire. And if I failed to find the faces of officers I had met on other occasions, I was glad to discover that God had sent others to fill the places of these—one gentleman telling me that he had been converted in "the Home" but a few months before.

The "believers' meeting" in Miss Daniell's drawing-room came round as a matter of course, and such a happy time we had that "half-past ten" came all too soon, and some of us kept up a friendly chat till, as the clock struck eleven, we got orders for both lights and soldiers to be out, and I myself was forced to beat a retreat to my bedroom, leaving all downstairs to darkness and silence.

Undoubtedly, one of the great attractions of "The Home," is the "play-room" piano. At one time, a young sergeant of "The Norfolk" regiment would preside at this instrument; at another, a staff-sergeant of the Bedfordshire militia; then again, the music-stool would be occupied by a young civilian, while the lads standing around would select their favourite hymns from Songs and Solos or the popular Christian Choir.

Had it not been for the medals on their breasts, I could scarcely have believed that some of my singing friends had ever trodden the red field of battle; but they had, and I felt that were another war to arise, these would go forth to do, and die, as nobly as young soldiers who had belonged to "The Home" in other days had gone forth to fight and fall in Afghanistan, South Africa, and the Soudan. God bless them.

One little incident struck me as being most suggestive while I was enjoying the hospitality of Miss Daniell. I saw some young friends looking down a certain column of The Christian to see whether any generous possessor of wealth had remembered during the week to help their toiling head. With five "Homes" for the soldier already under her superintendence, and another just about to be opened in London, Miss Daniell should be supported in such a manner as to leave her mind altogether unburdened with the care that, I fear, is beginning to tell heavily upon her. I had almost forgotten, too, to say that in addition to "the Home" at Aldershot, she has two tents, conducted on "the Home" principle, in distant parts of the camp. Maybe, some friend taking these matters into consideration, will let that contribution column, already referred to, speak volumes to cheer both old and young workers, next week.

ALDERSHOT IN EXPECTATION.

Next Saturday the Jubilee Review will be held in the Long Valley, when probably 70,000 troops, militia, and volunteers will take part. For weeks past the place has been in a state of active preparation for this great event, and Miss Daniell, ever on the look-out to benefit the soldier, has erected a large tent in the north camp, and another in the south camp. It has been my privilege both to preach, and to find preachers for the former. The Mildmay Gospel Male Choir sang very sweetly on the second Sunday (June 26), both in the tent and in the encampment. This north camp tent will (d.v.) remain till the end of the month. Among those who take the services are Rev. George C. Grubb, Rev. James Henry, Major Liebenrood, Mr. Joseph Weatherley, Mr. J. H. Lydall, Mr. C. Russell Hurditch, Mr. Charles Cook, Mr. Charles Inglis, Mr. Ransome Wallis, Mr. William Grant, Mr. George Heath, Mr. William E. Bailey, and Mr. John Evans.

Nothing struck me more during the few days I was there than the perfect devotion of Miss Daniell to the interest of the soldiers. Tired with her Mansion House meeting, she must needs come to play and sing in the tent, even on that night.

A GOOD WORK AT CINDERFORD.

The special work commenced some months ago by Mr. Opie Rodway in connection with Rev. D. Thomas's church at Cinderford is still, we learn, going on splendidly. The school-room, capable of holding nearly five hundred people, is crammed at every meeting. Prayer-meetings are held at 7 a.m. on Sundays, Tuesdays, and Fridays in each week, and there are at least two prayer-meetings every night. "It is all prayer with our people now," writes Mr. Thomas. Nearly a hundred attend the early morning meetings on Sundays, and the place is filled with fervour and earnestness.

Among the best meetings are those of the six classes into which the new converts (about 250) were formed. These meet on different days each week for prayer, and praise, and experience, and then altogether on Tuesdays for the pastors oversight. A children's service, attendance about one hundred, is held every Friday, and also a woman's prayer-meeting and experience class.

The sewing work still continues, and there is scarcely a meeting but some are gathered in. During April there were twenty-four converts, some of these the worst characters in the place, and ten backsliders were restored. In the same month Mr. Thomas baptized one hundred persons, and there are still a large number in the converts' classes waiting for admission into the church. Cinderford has been wonderfully changed during the last few months, and there is a great move in all the churches. Mr. Thomas adds, "The church seems on fire with love and zeal for souls."

THE WAYSIDE BIBLE CARRIAGE, conducted by John McAuliffe, visited, during May and June, Towcester, Northampton, Market Harborough, and Leicester, and upwards of one hundred wayside villages. Meetings were held at noons and evenings, and thousands listened to the "Wonderful words of life."

LONDON EVANGELISTIC CHOIRS.

On Saturday afternoon there was a pleasant gathering of London Evangelistic Choirs at Addiscombe Farm, Croydon, in response to the kind invitation of Lady Ashburton. There were good contingents from the North London, South London, Stratford, and Mizpah Band, North-West, Clapham Male, Walthamstow Male, and Peckham Choirs, making a total of 240 singers. There was also a goodly number of Christian workers and friends.

On our way from Woodside Station we called to see the comfortable Houses of Rest erected by Lady Ashburton in connection with the work of Mr. George Holland, George Yard, Whitechapel. At Gordon Hall, named after the lamented General Gordon, services and meetings are held on week evenings and Sundays. Babies (with their mothers); children of different ages; toil-worn men, and weary women, find welcome and rest at these quiet retreats. A well-cultivated garden furnishes much of the vegetable food of the "Rests." The infirm and weakly are driven about in a tiny four-wheel (scarcely larger than a Ventnor "midge"), which is drawn by one or other of the two donkeys which constitute the entire stable.

At Addiscombe Farm the party were, in the absence of her ladyship, received and welcomed by Col. and Mrs. Stewart. Tables were laid upon the lawn, and the company most hospitably entertained. Afterwards a united song service was conducted by the combined choirs, interspersed with brief addresses. The volume of vocal sound rang out finely on the evening air, and in such pieces as "Tell it out!" and "Hallelujah for the Cross!" was heard at a very considerable distance.

Mr. George Holland led the party on the road homeward. He took much pleasure in showing us an iron building called "Norrington Hall," the Chalmers Institute, the gift of Miss Marsh, the well-known writer of "Life of Capt. Hedley Vicars." The Institute is for the training of young motherless girls over fourteen years of age as domestic servants. They are taught a number of extras not usually included in a servant's training. The Princess Mary has promised to receive into her establishment the first lassie who proves fit to go forth. There are at present beds for ten young persons. The two girls whom we saw gave good promise of the quality of the servants to be produced.

STRANGERS' REST, RATCLIFF.—The usual monthly meeting of workers was held on Friday evening, under the presidency of Mr. J. F. Shorey, of New York, who gave an account of the rise and progress of the McAuley Mission in that city, in the management of which he has been associated during the last three years. Mr. Gawin Kirkham then gave an address on "The Jewish Jubilee and its Lessons." Prior to the indoor meeting one was held outside amid a painfully interesting audience of sailors and sinners of various shades and grades. Open-air workers are sadly needed just now, and those willing to help should communicate with Mr. T. Isaacs, Strangers' Rest, 163, St. George's-street, Ratcliff-highway, E.

MUNICIPAL REFORM AND SPIRITUAL WORK.—This was the subject of the Ancient Merchants' lecture delivered at Finsbury Chapel on Tuesday last week by Rev. R. F. Horton, M.A. Society in London, he said, exists only in a decomposed state, and hence the paralysis when spiritual work is attempted. If there were any sense of community among the people there could be no such thing as a property owner doubling, when the lease fell in, the rent of a tenant who had built up a business. Yet even deacons and ministers who might possess property would do this, and think nothing of it. It was impossible for a community so disintegrated as that of London to form any real conception of what is meant by a Church of Christ, and by a kingdom of Christ. Society should place those who sinned against society in a visible Inferno. The enthusiasm of corporate life made the growth and education of man, and he urged that a true system of local government would in time create a public spirit which would produce most important results spiritually as well as locally.

MILDMAY PARK CONFERENCE.

Smaller Gatherings.

The Claims of Israel.

The afternoon meeting on Wednesday, June 22, in No. 4 room, was devoted to addresses on the duty of the Church towards the Jews, the motto text for the gathering being "The kingdom shall come to the daughter of Jerusalem" (Micah iv. 8). After the hymn, "'Scattered and peeled,' but still beloved," General Halliday offered prayer, in the course of which thanksgiving was rendered for the patient waiting of God for Israel.

Mr. T. A. Denny, who presided, alluded to the unavoidable absence of Dr. Adolph Saphir, and remarked that he thought all Christian people might be congratulated on the great revival of the missionary spirit in these days. If such a revival really existed, how could they leave the Jew out? It was impossible to be grateful enough to that nation, for had they not given us the Bible, and, above all, the Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ? It used to be thought that a mission to the Jews was an impossible thing, or that it was a losing game, but he believed they were growing out of that now.

Rev. John Wilkinson said he believed there was a much nearer road to a large blessing on the Church's foreign missionary efforts than that which is usually taken; what that road was he proceeded to indicate. Is the world ever to be blessed, or are we playing a losing game? We who believe in the Word of God know that the world's blessing is secured, and so we are led to ask: How is it to be brought about? There was a special Divine reason in the election of Abraham, and the preservation of his posterity, to which Isa. xliii. 21, and xliv. 21, bear witness. God does not cease to take an interest in the Jewish nation, but has purposed the world's conversion by their instrumentality. It was as King of the Jews that Jesus was born, and as King of the Jews that He died. And then his instructions to his disciples were, "Go rather to the lost sheep of the house of Israel," and again in Acts i. 8, "Ye shall be witnesses unto Me, both in Jerusalem, and in all Judea, and in Samaria, and unto the uttermost parts of the earth." That was Christ's order of preaching the Gospel, and the days of great blessing will not return to the Church until she observed that order. The Church of Jesus Christ was often spoken of as a Gentile Church, but for that Scripture gave no warrant whatever. It is a Church of Jews and Gentiles. As traced out in the Acts of the Apostles, it was very noticeable that Christ's order of Jerusalem and Judea first, and then Samaria, had been closely followed. But when the Lord had said to his disciples, "Now go to the uttermost parts of the earth," they replied, "No! we won't go." And that was what the Church was saying to-day. The disobedience of the early Christians was followed by a persecution, and "they were all scattered abroad throughout the regions of Judea and Samaria, except the Apostles." "Except the Apostles;" why, that idea was largely entertained to-day. The bishops and the higher clergy remained at home, and anyone was thought good enough to go out into the mission field. If, however, they followed those men who were scattered abroad, what were they found doing? Preaching the Gospel; but preaching it to Jews only. Then it was that God raised up Paul—a man who had not got into a rut—and made him the Apostle to the Gentiles. But the remarkable thing was, that wherever Paul went he preached the Gospel to the Jews first. The Jew was first in order, but not in pre-eminence. In the Epistles of Paul that order was preserved, as Rom. i. 16, ii. 9, 10 would testify. From all this it was clear that it was the purpose of God to reach the Gentiles through the Jews. No one could calculate the amount of evil to the interest of the cause of Christ wrought by the neglect of this order of preaching the Gospel. Mr. Wilkinson then directed the attention of his hearers to these three facts:—After one hundred years of missionary enterprise they had seventy times as many heathen as converts from heathendom; during the same period, however, Mohammedans had made more converts to their religion than they had to theirs; and yet it was claimed that as much had been done for Christianity as could be expected bearing in mind the means adopted. If they turned and looked at the Jews they saw that they were to be found in every nation having access to all the peoples of the earth. And yet the Church was so prejudiced that it would persist in going about the evangelisation of the world, all the while forgetting the Jews. With the narration of several striking instances of how the Gospel is asserting its power over Israel, Mr. Wilkinson closed a remarkable address of about an hour's duration.

During the singing of a hymn those who wished to leave did so, and then ollowed ten or fifteen minutes of prayer specially on behalf of Israel. Dr. Laseron, Rev. John Wilkinson, Mr. Denny, and several ladies led the supplications of the meeting, request being made that God would bring his ancient people to the feet of Jesus; that He would give his Church a willing heart to do his will; and that great blessing might accompany the distribution of Hebrew New Testaments among the Jews of Russia.

Next came an address by Dr. Laseron. He said it was wonderful how the reading of God's Word—whether by Gentile or Jew—brought men into harmony with God's mind. They would only understand the Bible in proportion as their wills were completely controlled by God's Spirit, and thus harmony with the mind of God would produce intense consecration to Him. He honestly believed that the Church lacks power to-day, because she does not address herself to do God's work among the Jews. Some Christians were in the habit of asking, Are Jews ever really converted? To such a question the history of the Church gave a sufficient answer. Without doubt God had chosen Israel for a wise purpose, or why had that nation been so wonderfully preserved? If only all the Jews in the world were to arise and come over to the side of Christ, what a power they would be! Then let them remember that if they scattered the Word for the Jews they would be blessed themselves as Gentiles. Dr. Laseron concluded by an earnest appeal to Christians to deal in a very tender and considerate manner with all those Jews who were seeking the light. A deeply interesting and stimulating meeting was then brought to a close by a further brief season of prayer.

India and China.

Mr. Leonard K. Shaw, of Manchester, presided over the missionary meeting in the large hall on Thursday afternoon. In a few words he urged Christians who would witness for Christ to cross the ocean and seek a field of labour in lands where there are thousands and thousands of miles untrodden by the foot of the missionary.

Rev. J. Gelson Gregson said servants have no right to choose their field of labour, and, therefore, we must not suppose we are going to serve the King more loyally or faithfully ten thousand miles away than could be done at home. It is well we should get rid of the halo of romance which seems to many to surround the field of labour in other lands. My subject is India. Feeling the responsibility which rests upon every man who comes home from such a field, I desire to speak of what apologists for the non-productiveness of Christian work in India call the insurmountable difficulties in connection with the preaching of the Gospel in that land. But there can be no such thing as difficulty where the King's voice is heard, and his orders are rigidly obeyed. Difficulties arise where human expediency takes the place of the royal command. In India we make this mistake. We speak of the people as an ancient people, of their religion as ancient, of their intellectual power. We have been trying to meet intellectualism with intellectualism; the consequence is we have come back, as our soldiers came back from Suakin, with their swords bent. But the sword of the Lord is as unbent as ever. We have talked also about the great power of Mohammedanism, and said we must meet it by educating the children, so that when they have grown up into the knowledge of the truth they will become followers of Christ. Oh, I have seen boys taught in mission colleges opposing the preaching of the Gospel in Indian bazaars, and I know of colleges where the pupils were in favour of theosophy, though the professors had been writing against it. Intellectualism has faced intellectualism, and the product is nil. We want men as missionaries who have faith in the King, in the power, the weapons, and the triumph of the King. We want men as heralds of the Gospel whose only answer, it may be, to those who object to the simple preaching of Christ, is that they are obeying the command of the King.

This question of the evangelisation of India ought to occupy our best thoughts. England is indebted to India for much. She sends her best sons to govern this splendid province, and her best soldiers to guard the integrity of the Empire, and nobly they have done their duty. Let us see that we send forth our best sons to witness there for Christ—men who have not lost faith in their marching orders, who have faith in the arm of God to sweep away all difficulties, with the same ease that the human hand sweeps away a cobweb.

There is one matter which presses much upon my conscience with regard to what we have done for India. Every Englishman who goes to that land, remember, is a missionary for Christ or for Satan. It is said we have loosened the bonds of caste. True. It is said again that we have lifted the people in the social scale, and given them education and other advantages. True. But we have lifted them out of what they had, and put them into nothing. It is the human power that destroys, the Divine power builds up. Men have not now the restraints of their caste, and I give it as my solemn conviction that it would have been better for them to have remained in the ignorance of caste, than to have been launched out into a position without the restraining power either of heathenism or Christianity.

Referring to the drink question, Mr. Gregson added: I do not say there was no drunkenness before we went to India. It was, however, confined to the lowest classes of the people. Now the cultured classes, those to whom we have been looking to take their share in the government, are the victims of habits and lusts we have introduced, and which we have fanned. So much so that often have I been ashamed to say that I was an Englishmen, and to confess myself a Christian. For the supply of the missionary field in India we want a territorial system throughout England, similar to that by which the army is supplied. Why should not every town send forth one or two evangelists to India—these evangelists to work where at present there is no missionary. What an impetus would be given to missionary effort in this way. Any evangelist could live upon fifty rupees a month, and of these it is required simply that they should witness for Christ. The King requires of his heralds that they should blow the trumpet, and that they should think of no such thing as failure. There is in India a grand field for thousands of young Christians, who are filled with the thought of the blessed coming of the Lord to establish his kingdom.

Rev. L. Lloyd, who has laboured in Foochow in the province of Fuh-kien, said the difficulty of learning the Chinese language was often exaggerated. Anyone of ordinary ability and application could learn to speak it in from twelve to fifteen months. For ten years two agents of the Church Missionary Society laboured in this district without any result, and afterwards it was even proposed to withdraw the one missionary who was left. He, however, begged to be allowed to remain at least twelve months longer, and in that time two converts came forward for baptism. Then the blessed fruit of faithful labours began to appear in great abundance. In 1876, there were in the city and the district around 1600 native Christians. And now there are nearly 6000. The work has been done mainly by the native Christians themselves, who are most earnest and zealous in seeking to evangelise their brethren. Mr. Lloyd testified to the devotion of these native Christians, and spoke of the persecution which in many cases they have to suffer. Sometimes they have come back from witnessing for Christ with their clothes stripped off them, and severely wounded. As showing their generosity, he added that though the people of this district are very poor—4½d. a day is about the rate of wages for a working man, and many who cannot afford rice live upon a kind of skilly—yet last year they gave £2000 towards the support of the native church.

Rev. J. Hudson Taylor followed. He first asked prayer in reference to an important proposition to be brought before the committee of one of our great religious societies. The proposition contemplates the sending of missionaries to the as yet untouched portions of the Chinese Empire, and is, Mr. Taylor said, of momentous importance. It is a very great pleasure, he said, to meet Major Tucker here. We last met at Colombo, and there we had a very happy season of fellowship. If only some of you would go to India or China, you would have grand conferences with the Master, who delights to come and talk with his servants when they are quite alone. This sort of conference fills the soul with joy. It is then, as we read in the Song of Solomon, we feel "the King hath brought me into his chambers." What follows going with Him into his chamber? Why, we have Him all alone. We enter into the intimacy of his love, and have the joy of hearing words that He does not speak to anyone but ourselves. We have come together to think about the glory of the King. If we at all realise the privileges and responsibilities of attending this Mildmay Conference, one direction of our Lord will have increased power for all—"be strong and do it." This is what God said to Joshua and to Solomon; this is what He says to you and to me. We have had some precious truths brought before us about India and China. Mr. Lloyd has told of 6000 brought to the Lord Jesus Christ, and made glad to suffer for Him. Let me remind you of those words "The last shall be first and the first last." It will be strange to me if some of those Christians do not get a better place in the kingdom of our Lord than some of us who attend conferences at Mildmay and Keswick, at Perth and Dundee. Those who do not think too much of the little time of this present life will be best prepared to meet the Lord with joy when He shall call them to the life beyond. Some who like very much to have reserved seats for this and other conferences would do well to seek to obtain reserved seats for a conference that will last a very much longer time. If you want to be near the King, you must suffer for Him. No one can have a true knowledge of Him who has not been in this school.

At the conference in China, of which I have spoken before, there were a number of graduates, some from Cambridge, and many more from colleges in China. Some of these latter had lost their degrees, and been turned out into the streets of their native towns, and some had been beaten. What did they do under these circumstances? Why, they rejoiced that they were counted worthy to suffer. "We had to stop in the streets, and tell the people what a dear Saviour we have found," said they. One whom God had greatly blessed and honoured, and made the means of gathering in some fifty or sixty of his fellow-countrymen, had been forsaken by his wife, and cast off by all his relatives. "God is a grand Master; I am thankful and proud to be his servant." This is his language. Chinamen are naturally very proud, and I do love to see how proud they are of their Master, how much they love his service. It is a privilege to have been among such a people.

Referring to the opium traffic, Mr. Taylor said: I have only one hope about this, that Christian people will pray about it. I have no hope in political action. We were listening yesterday to a description of the horrors of the slave trade—of the untold multitudes who must have perished before reaching their destination. But, having laboured many years in China, my solemn conviction is that all the misery and sin and suffering caused by the slave trade are not equal to the wrongs inflicted upon China by the opium traffic. That may seem a very strong thing to say, but it is not at all too strong. I could not possibly describe the incalculable misery which I have witnessed as a result of this curse which we introduced into China. As a medical missionary, I have been into many homes where people were endeavouring to kill themselves by taking opium, to escape from the greater evils they had brought upon themselves by the habit of opium smoking. If you love your country, pray God that He will raise up a standard against this horrible, awful curse, and that He will deliver us from the guilt of it.

One other thing. Read your Bible, see what God has to say, and do it. Don't put any gloss of your own upon it, don't try to explain it away. We have been in the habit of reading the parting words of our blessed Lord, "Go ye into all the world," in a way most destructive of their true meaning. There is not one word the Saviour ever uttered that does not mean exactly what He says in that word. Christ does not say "Send." I praise God for every missionary society in existence, but Christ's words are, "Go ye." If these people at Mildmay alone were to take up the command of Christ as they ought to do, what a change would be wrought in the missionary field. The missionary societies would not accept you, but that would not matter. Till the Church is blessed by believing that God means what He says we cannot expect much. I remember, when a young man, being very much encouraged by what a young Methodist preacher did. He had asked that he might be sent to China, but the society to which he applied said they had plenty to do in Africa and elsewhere, and could not go to China. "If you cannot undertake it, I must. God has commanded me to go. I will go, and trust God to provide." He sold what he had, and after paying his passage, he had about enough to last him twelve months. At the end of that time he had more in hand than at the beginning, and so greatly had his work been blessed that the Wesleyan Missionary Society was constrained to take him up.

Major Tucker, of the Salvation Army, said: At the very outset of his work the missionary finds there is a tremendous chasm between Christianity and heathendom, between Europeans and natives. The native instinctively feels this is a foreign religion—we are not going to give up our religion. Knowing there was this prejudice, I determined to wear the native dress. I saw many were aiming at their heads; I aimed at their hearts, and in order to this, it was necessary to disarm their prejudices, and to this end I was willing to beg our bread from door to door. I looked at Jesus, and saw this is how He went to the Jews. He lived as they did; and surely his Father would have spared his Son the humiliation and suffering of that life upon earth He willingly lived if the Jews could have been saved any other way. I looked at Paul, too, and I saw that he was willing to be all things to all men that he might save some. I threw myself, therefore, on the people, and thus was enabled to bridge over the chasm, so that now, in any town we go, thousands of people listen to the message, and seem to drink it in. The plan has succeeded. Four years ago I landed in India with four officers; last year I took out another party of forty, and now am come back for fifty more.

The next point is the agency by which to reach the natives and get them saved. Those forty whom I took out last year are a specimen of how God can use the weak things of this earth. They were selected out of a large number of volunteers, but many of them hardly knew their own language. The questions that determine the selection are these, Are they saved? Are they holy? Are they really pure? Have they had success in England? If so, we take them, and I am able to say that most of those officers are now able to speak the language. We teach them in the simplest way. As an illustration of their want of learning I may say that some did not even know the difference between a verb and a noun. In the prayer-meeting, after one of these lessons, one of the officers offered this prayer:—"O Lord, we don't know what a verb is; we don't know what an adjective is; but we do believe that Thou canst teach us the language." That young man, uneducated, not knowing anything, can now speak the Cingalese language well, and hold an audience for a long time. Within eight months of our landing in India upwards of four hundred natives were converted to Christianity, and I have brought over three of these converts to show what God can do if we trust Him, and go right in for the salvation of the people.

It is one of our rules that every work shall be self-supporting, and that is another reason for our style of dress. It is very cheap. But we were so reduced in funds we had to do it; it was not from choice. The Lord reduced us, and now if we can get our food I am quite satisfied. Anyone can support a Salvation Army missionary in India for £5 a year; £15 will pay his passage out, and £50 will build one of our Salvation Army churches there. The Lord has helped us wonderfully. Last year we had a self-denial time to help the cause in England, and we collected £40. How we got together so much I cannot tell, but, as showing the Lord's goodness, at the very time I was sending off that money to England, a gentleman, whom I had never heard of before, was sitting down thousands of miles away, and writing out a cheque for £5000. As if the Lord meant to give me his own consolation in a time of great trial, this reached us almost immediately after the death of my wife. After thanking the Lord for what He had done, I wired to England to send us fifty more officers. Then, finding there was some delay, I took ship and came myself. There is no lack of volunteers, and I am thankful to say the spirit seems to be catching hold of the children. One little tot, the other day, said to me, "If you please, what age do you take them? Am I too young?" Another brought me a shilling for India, and said she had made up her mind she would go there by and by. If uneducated people, who know nothing of grammar, can go out, and, even before they know the language, win souls for Christ, what should be your resolve? When the salvation of the heathen is brought so close to you, will you refuse to reach out your arm to help them? All difficulties vanish when you are trusting fully in the Lord Jehovah, who is mighty to save.

Mohammedans of Africa and Asia.

The afternoon meeting in No. 4 Room on Thursday was held in the interests of the Mohammedans of Africa and Asia. Mr. George Pearse, who presided, after reading Matt. xxviii. 18—20, said that when he was led to see the love of God, those verses seemed so overwhelming that he staggered under the weight of them. Afterwards he resolved to scatter the seed of the Word all over the world.

An intensely interesting address followed, by Major-General Haig, who gave a lengthy account of a recent visit to Arabia, which he had undertaken on behalf of the Church Missionary Society. He was glad, he said, in starting, that the Chairman had made reference to the love of God, for that, and that only, was the great impelling motive in all labour for the heathen. It is pleasant to think that over all the millions of heathendom there broods the immensity of the love of God, who would have them all to be saved. And why are they not saved? Simply because the Christian Church has not told them of that love. For a little while he would ask them to follow him as he described his tour through Arabia, with its millions of Arabs, and he would ask them to remember that within the limits of Arabia proper there is not a single missionary. Arabia is an immense country, with a population of about ten millions, which, hitherto, has been left outside the sphere of the missions of the Church. There has been a time in history when there were Christians in that land; but now, with a mere handful excepted, all Arabs are Mohammedans. It is natural to ask, What sort of people are they? and in answering that question the speaker described how, 1300 years ago, the Arabs poured out of their country a conquering host which swept all before it. A people capable of such victories as they achieved must have within them the material out of which something great could be formed. Some, however, might say that they had deteriorated during the years which had passed, but if they only went back in history two hundred years they found the Arabs manifesting the same characteristics.

Passing on to his own visit to the country, Major-Gen. Haig said his purpose in going was to see if there are any openings for the planting of Christian missions there. He had been able to form an idea as to what the openings for the preaching of the Gospel were, and he was glad to be able to say that the Arabs are willing to listen to the truth. In the western side of Arabia, which is under the Egyptian Government, there is less toleration for the preaching of the Gospel. One mountain which he and his companion ascended has no less than 6000 feet of terraced walls, and from the existence of such a work it is easy to draw the inference that the Arab is not that wild, untutored kind of creature he is generally thought to be. Although all the people of the districts through which he travelled were Mohammedans, he met with nothing but kindness and civility everywhere. As they journeyed they did not hide their colours, but at every khan where they stayed they always had morning prayers. They were prompted to make their meetings for devotion as prominent as possible, because Mohammedans think Christians are an utterly godless and worthless set of creatures, who never pray. When they see a Christian to be a God-fearing man they do not fail to respect him. In connection with this, Major-General Haig told how on one occasion a Mohammedan lady had joined herself to himself and his companion because, as she said, "they don't drink wine, they pray, and so they must be good Mussulmen."

Very interesting was the account which the speaker gave of his experiences among some Jews he met in a certain town. They asked him and his companion to go to their houses and talk with them about the Messiah, and, after a few feeble attempts at argument, they ended by confessing that Jesus must be He. All over Arabia he never had one unkind word spoken to him, even though he often went into the bazaars of the country, and talked and reasoned with the people out of the Word of God. Indeed, they were greatly interested in the sight of an Englishman going about in their midst, and talking to them on the subject of religion in their own tongue.

They would be anxious to know, perhaps, what his conclusions were as to Arabia as a sphere for Christian missions. He believed that wherever they had to deal with people under the Turkish power there would be opposition, and perhaps persecution; but that throughout all those parts of the country which are under independent princes there are abundant openings for the preaching of the Gospel. When such missions are undertaken he believed they would assimilate more to the character of the apostolic missions than any that have ever existed since those early times.

The attention of the audience was then turned from Mohammedans in Africa, to Mohammedans in Asia, by an address from Dr. Andrew Jukes, of Dera-Ghazi-Khan. Having said that all the people in his district are Mohammedans, Dr. Jukes went on to point that there are great differences between the Mohammedans of India. For one thing Mohammedanism in India is not such a pure religion as it is in Arabia. Although the Koran permits Mohammedans to speak to, and have intercourse with "the people of the Book," i.e., the Bible, yet in India, while they will associate with the Hindoos, they keep aloof from Christians and Jews. And then Mohammedan worship has greatly deteriorated in India. It is usual to think of that religion as a pure monotheism, but in India it is far from that. Dr. Jukes then described the work in which he is engaged in the district of Dera-Ghazi-Khan, and made an earnest appeal for a lady worker, who would be willing to devote herself to the work of visiting the Mohammedan women.

Miss E. Jane Whateley, although not on the list of speakers, was called upon to give a brief account of her sister's work in Egypt among Mohammedans. She described the various methods adopted by her sister for carrying on the work, and spoke specially of a trip which is made up the Nile every year for the purpose of distributing the Word of God. A prayer-meeting followed, over which Mr. Reginald Radcliffe presided, and at which fervent supplications were presented to the Throne of Grace on behalf of all missionary enterprise.

[Several reports of the afternoon gatherings are deferred to our next issue.]

NOTES FROM AUCKLAND, N.Z.

The following extracts are taken from a private letter written by Mr. J. Bridgwater, late of the London Y.M.C.A.:—

Trade is and has been very bad here, but I believe it will improve after the winter is over. The climate is splendid, and no place in the world is better for people who have an income to live upon, but it is a struggle for tradespeople and those who get their living in towns. At present the common labourer is paid better than anybody (8s. a day of eight hours) but clerks and warehousemen are badly paid. Tramcar men only get 25s. a week for sixteen hours a day; and people are wanted on the land, yet new-comers will persist in staying in the towns where they are not wanted.

The Sabbath is outwardly well observed here: all the public-houses are closed, and tramcars are not allowed to run. The churches of all denominations are well attended, and the Y.M.C.A. is working well; Rev. J. S. Hill (Episcopal Church) is president, and doing thoroughly evangelical work. We have a fine building, well and comfortably arranged, for young men, altogether better than anything we have in London, but unfortunately a debt of £7000 remains upon it. During his visit the Earl of Aberdeen addressed about 2000 men at the City Hall (formerly the Theatre Royal), and the Countess gave an address to women only in our Y.M.C A. Lecture Hall.

One bad feature here is the conduct of the youth of both sexes, more especially amongst the lower classes. They appear to have been neglected by their parents to a fearful degree.

A YEAR'S WORK, CHANGE, AND ADVANCE.—This is the title of the report for 1886 of the London Y.W.C. Association, and it contains a wonderful account of work in many departments of Christian effort. Not the least important of these, because of constant danger to which young girls are exposed in travelling without such protection, is the "Traveller's Aid." The book (6d.) may be obtained of Miss A. Ely, 17, Old Cavendish-street, W.

CASE FOR THIS WEEK.

LETTER from Rev. G. E. YATE, OF MADELEY VICARAGE, SALOP.

"To G. T. Congreve, Esq.

"Dear Sir,—I am able to tell you that Miss J——, in my parish, who I certainly thought would have died two years ago, has, through God's blessing on a persistent taking of your medicine, wonderfully recovered. Notwithstanding the late inclemency in the weather, she has walked three times to church, though living at a distance, and the road is a steep ascent. Your medicine has done great things for her."

I have made a large reduction for the poor of this clergyman's parish, and am always glad to do so for any Christian ministers who may be moved to dispense it to the poor.

LETTER from Mr. W. W. DUNN, DUBLIN.

This friend, who has been most zealous in recommending my treatment ever since the recovery of his wife (whose case was published three years ago, when Mr. Dunn resided at Mary Hill, N.B.), writes me March 22, 1887, as follows:—

"Dear Mr. Congreve,—I have again and again recommended you to persons suffering from pulmonary disease, and I am thankful to say it has done wonders for them. I believe yours to be a God-provided remedy for poor suffering humanity, and that it ought to have a world-wide circulation. Again and again I urge upon young people who begin to show signs of disease, not to wait until they are in the last stage, but to resort to it at once."

NOTE.—Days of Consultation.—TUESDAY, THURSDAY, and SATURDAY Mornings ONLY, at Coombe Lodge, Peckham. Patients from any long distance should choose either of the two former days. Everyone is expected to have seen the book first.

SAVED TO SAVE.

By Rev JOHN McNEIL, Edinburgh.

Before this meeting breaks up and we go away to our different spheres of service, let me ask you all if you have personally come to the Lord Jesus Christ. That is the point. Let us begin at the beginning. Am I speaking to any young man here, especially any Railway-clerk? I was mostly in that department of the service, and I can say from my own experience that Railway-clerkdom is about as stiff a bit of soil as ever the Gospel plough was driven through. In Edinburgh the Railway Mission does not touch the clerks. They consider themselves outside the operations of the Society. May God give you grace and power to bring them down from their high horse! Believe me, they are just as salvable and as well worth saving as any of you.

To those of you who have decided for Christ, I would like to say a word or two about the drink. A great many Christians in the North yonder used to think that religion and whisky go well together. And I find there are many who are not yet out-and-out abstainers. I do trust that all the members of the Railway Mission have cut connection with the drink. Be total abstainers out and out. Perhaps you only take a glass occasionally, but that one glass may be really hindering your entire sanctification, or hindering your usefulness, especially in trying to save your brother Railway-men. I met a man not long ago, in my congregation in Edinburgh. He is a Christian man, and he gave up the drink, but he found himself in a difficulty about giving up another little habit, that of taking a pinch of snuff now and then. I said to my friend, "Until you give over that, you really ought not to count yourself a consecrated man. Although the devil has let go your throat, he has you still by the nose." Let every man here apply it for himself. There may be some little thing you are oth to give up. When Paul was sailing in that ship that was stranded on Melita, they cast the good wheat into the sea. Why? Because they could not make the shore with it, and they wanted to lighten the ship. You and I, my brothers, need to cast over many things that in themselves may be legitimate, in order to float freely and to make the eternal shore; for that is our destination.

I wish to say this further. I trust none of my Railway brothers, who themselves know the saving power of Christ, are keeping back from trying to save others. And I trust you have begun, as the Scripture says, at Jerusalem—that is, among those nearest to you. Is your wife saved? Because, if she is not, you are only half saved, and only the worst half. Are your children saved? There is a woman at the station. The guard sees her looking for a place in the train. He opens a door and says, "There is a seat here for one." She draws back and says, "I am not one: I am ten. There is a whole string of children behind me; what is the use of a seat for one?" Men and women, let us see to it that the whole family is in the saving embrace of Jesus Christ. Let not a hoof be left behind. God has a place in his grace, my brother, for you and your wife, and (if I may use a Scotch word) your "weans."

Then, in working for God, I trust that every man will seek to do it in his own way. Do not copy any other body. And for any sake do not make too much of those denominational divisions that too sadly exist among us. The devil is entirely undenominational. In this work of the Railway Mission let us rally around Christ Jesus and seek to save all and sundry. The Old Testament story of David and Goliath, the giant of Gath, gives us a splendid example of how any faithful Railway-man may strike his blow for Jesus Christ in his own way. You remember the state of things. There was Israel, and here were the armies of the Philistines; there came forth the great giant, who paraded up and down the valley, crying to the Israelites to send him out a man to fight. Many a shameful day the Church of God upon earth has seen, but she has seen few more shameful than this, when the trained bands of Israel stood there shivering with fear, and not one man was willing to run the risk of either gaining a glorious victory or of dying an equally glorious death. The giant went up and down, defying and insulting the armies of the living God, for forty days. But it is not safe to defy the Almighty too long. God got His man, but where? Not among the trained soldiers. He had to bring a herd laddie from the hills to do His work. You remember the snare that was put before David. He was introduced to Saul, and made known his wish to meet the giant. "Here is my armour," said the king. That was the snare; but he would not be anything else than David, even to please King Saul. He cast aside the King's device, and struck for God in his own way; and that is how he gained the victory.

There are many men who are willing to work for God, but only on "regular lines"—only as highly-trained soldiers. My brothers, let us be content to be humble common soldiers, striking our blow in our way and from our own shoulder. David not only gained a victory over the enemy, but over custom. And that is what we need to do to-day in England and Scotland and Ireland, in church work and mission work of all kinds. God help us! we are paralysed by custom. How did David act? He went down to the brook, and when he saw the giant towering there so loftily, he took his measure. He chose five smooth stones from the brook; and here is a thought that may bring help to all workers of God. Why take five stones, when only one was needed? God will not only give you the victory, but He will show that He does not do it scrimply or barely; there are four shots to come. He will make us "more than conquerors." David whirled the sling round his head, and you can hear that missive go whistling on its way till it sank in the forehead of the defiant enemy of the armies of God. That is how the devil's kingdom is going one day to end. It is weak in the head. Christ has bruised the serpent's head. The devil is not nearly so strong as we think he is; and we are not nearly so weak as we think we are. In God's name, go forward. You think you cannot do very much. You must be a very poor hand indeed if you cannot fling a stone.—Railway Signal.

UNION CHURCH, NORTHAMPTON. — The friends of Rev. H. Bradford, headed by Rev. Dr. Wilkinson, of Christ Church, Leamington, and Lady King-Hall, of the Elms, Sutton Bonnington, Loughboro', are raising a fund for the purchase of a house to be used as a manse in appreciation of Mr. Bradford's faithfulness to the cause of Christ.

MR. GLADSTONE AND THE HAYMAKERS.—Mr. and Mrs. Gladstone, on Sunday afternoon, entertained at tea, in the grounds of Dollis Hill, Willesden, all the haymakers in the district. The proceedings commenced at three o'clock, by Mrs. Gladstone playing a hymn upon a harmonium, which had been brought from the house. Prayers were afterwards read by Mr. Gladstone, who subsequently addressed the men. Tea was served under the trees.

WORKING LADS IN MANCHESTER.—Every effort to provide healthy recreation for the working lads who swarm in all manufacturing districts is of great importance to the social life of our country. Some time since, the Hulme and Chorlton-on-Medlock Lads' Club and Gymnasium was established, and has already done good work. The object is, by personal influence, to win the confidence and affection of those who attend, and to lead them to Jesus. Since November 600 lads have made use of the Club, which is open each evening from 6.30 to 10 o'clock; on Saturday from 3 to 10, and on Sunday from 7 to 8. Carpentry, drawing, and other classes, with football and cricket clubs, chess, and other games are some of the more prominent attractions. There is also a situation agency, savings bank, &c. A service is held every Sunday evening. Mr. Alex. Devine, Sunnyside, Rusholme, Manchester is the hon. secretary.

AFRICAN MISSIONS.

A letter, just received at the office of the Freedmen's Missions' Aid Society (18, Adam-street, Strand, W.C.), from Rev. J. Gomer, superintendent of this Mission on the West Coast of Africa, South of Sierra Leone, says, "During the last days of May a war party came to Mo Fuss, Mambo, and Rembie Stations and many other places, and plundered these towns." This Mission has had great prosperity during the last three years, many having been converted from heathenism, who are still standing true to the profession they have made. There are nearly four hundred towns in the district at present covered by the Mission, which is unsectarian, and carried on upon purely evangelical principles. The agents are all coloured men. These are able to stand the climate of tropical Africa, so fatal to white men.

It is sad to see the progress of the work thus interfered with. This dark cloud we hope and believe will soon pass away, and the work will still go and prosper. Anyone wishing more information respecting this interesting work, will, on writing to the secretary, Rev. Dr. Gwynne Jones, receive a full account of it.

JUBILEE GOSPEL WORK.

Through the kind invitation of Lady Ashburton and Lord and Lady Mount-Temple, a party of members of the Y.M.C.A. and South London Evangelistic Choir, visited "Broadlands," Romsey, Hants, on June 14, where, in celebration of the Queen's Jubilee, some thousands had gathered. Under the shade of some grand old trees a good audience was obtained and held for one hour and a half by the sweet songs of the choir, and listened with appreciation to the short addresses given between the pieces. Lord Mount-Temple gave a closing word, pointing those present from the earthly Queen to the Coming King. The choir also sang to the children, 1200 of whom were seated at tea.

The party then proceeded to Melchett Court, Wilts, the charming residence of Lady Ashburton, where a Jubilee gathering was held on June 15. Short, effective song-services were given for the household, &c., and also in a mission tent in the grounds. Many hundreds thronged to hear the singing, and the evening meeting was a time of great power. Lady Ashburton gave a short word, wherein she hoped that all would make it a Jubilee day in heaven by turning to God. Mr. W. Hutchinson, of the Children's Special Service Mission, held two or three good services with the children.

WAREHOUSEMEN, CLERKS' AND DRAPERS' SCHOOLS.—The twenty-ninth annual examination of the scholars in these schools, which are situated at Russell-hill, near Caterham Junction, took place on Saturday, in the presence of most of the members of the board of management and a considerable number of visitors from London. The boys and girls were examined in Bible reading, Scripture history, English history, and geography, in all of which they acquitted themselves well; and the boys were examined in mental arithmetic, a branch of education to which much attention is paid in this school. Mrs. Westlake delivered an address to the children, in which she said she was sorry to find that the girls did not respond to the questions so readily as the boys. There was no reason why they should not do equally as well as the boys, and she suggested that they should be mixed together in the classes. Mr. Debenham adverted to the change which had taken place in the constitution of the institution through the amalgamation with the projected Drapers' Orphanage. One of the objects of this was that the building, which cost £40,000, should be utilised to the fullest extent, and they had made a good beginning in this respect in the last few weeks by admitting 20 fresh children. The number now in the institution was 181, and he was told it would not be difficult to accommodate nearly 350. Mr. G. Cable was so pleased with what he had seen that day that he offered a jubilee prize of 50 guineas.—Mr. Edwards (Higgins, Hegal, & Co.) said he would give another 50 guineas if the last speaker would consent to the two sums forming the nucleus of a fund for a scholarship.

Notes and Comments.

NEXT week we hope to give portrait and sketch of the late Dr. Duff, the well known Indian pioneer missionary.

⁂ There must be many thoughtful and observant persons amongst our readers who could write Notes and Comments such as appear in our columns. Thoughts which do not occur to those who live in a crowd may come to those who from a more isolated position look on the rush and battle of life. An opportunity of appearing in print may stimulate such persons to exercise their pens and to practise a terse and condensed style of writing.

We therefore offer Four Prizes: viz.—A Guinea for the best column of Notes and Comments on current events, Fifteen Shillings for the second best, Half-a-Guinea for the third, and Five Shillings for the fourth. The considerations that will rule the award will be the importance of the subjects chosen, their suitability to our columns, the aptness of the comments, the general excellence of the style; condensation and cogency being specially desired. Contributions must reach us by Saturday morning, July 16.

In presiding lately at a general meeting of New College, Finchley New-road, Mr. S. Figgis said he could not see how they were to have the practical Christianity about which they heard so much without a large amount of theology. It was not the genius of the preacher that was so much in demand as the power of the Holy Ghost upon him. Mr. Henry Spicer spoke in a similar strain. If they were to go in for a higher Arts training, they must have a higher theological curriculum, and must inspire young men with a love for theology. This was healthy talk. Young preachers have to learn that it is not the sensible business men who cry out against such sermons, but the unspiritual, superficial hearers.

Mr. H. Spicer said wisely, also, that College managers were to blame, inasmuch as they did not sufficiently keep in touch with students for the ministry. But should not this oversight and friendly connection be applied to students in their early studies, and when they are mere youths? Above all things, that formative period needs this touch of interest and counsel.

We are glad to see open-air services are becoming popular amongst ladies and gentlemen. We know of two fashionable chapels, at least, in the North of London, from which a well-dressed contingent goes forth on the Sabbath evening to preach and sing the Gospel by the wayside. They gain the ear of well-to-do passers-by as well as poor, which open-air preachers often fail to do. We shall gladly welcome a more general adoption of this plan of campaign during the summer months. Why should not members of churches, who in comfortable seats are being "fed" and "built up" all the year round, put their spiritual strength into exercise in this way, and allow some of their brethren who are always at work to take their seats and rest awhile?

Dr. Pusey, commenting on Zech. viii. 5—boys and girls playing in the streets of Jerusalem in the coming time, says:—

> In the dreadful Irish famine of 1847 the absence of the children from the streets of Galway was one of its dreariest features. In the dreary back streets and alleys of London, the irrepressible joyousness of children is one of the bright sunbeams of that great Babylon, amid the oppressiveness of the anxious, hard, thoughtless, careworn, eager, sensual, worldly, frivolous, vain, stolid, sottish, cunning faces which traverse it. God sanctions by his Word here our joy in the joyousness of children, that He, too, taketh pleasure in it, He the Father of all. It is precisely their laughing, the fulness of her streets of these merry creatures of his hands, that He speaks of with complacency.

Perhaps God misses children from his Church as Dr. Pusey missed them from the streets of Galway. Remembering that Jesus said, "Suffer the little children to come unto Me, and forbid them not, for of such is the kingdom of heaven"; and "Except ye be converted, and become as little children, ye shall in no wise enter into the kingdom of heaven"; and that God delights in boys and girls playing in the streets of Jerusalem, is it not strange that those who represent his kingdom now on earth should so rigidly exclude from the communion of saints, thousands of children who are unquestionably believers in and lovers of the Lord Jesus?

We hope the strongly worded and impressive impeachment of the drink trade in Africa, by Archdeacon Farrar, in the current Contemporary Review, will receive all the attention and consideration it deserves:—

> It seems to me one of the worst proofs of our national degeneracy that no effectual steps are taken to restrict the drink trade in general, and that, so far, against a spurious liberty and base vested interests, righteousness, compassion and morality have lifted up their voices in vain.

The Archdeacon's account of the way in which professedly Christian people have imposed the drink curse on the Dark Continent is very painful reading. He roundly asserts that the drink trade is "assailing Africa, to its utter destruction, from every point of the compass," and thus records his conclusions:—

> If these facts have not weighed on the minds and consciences of our rulers and legislators, those consciences must indeed be callous beyond reproof. Are we so wholly given up to the idols of spurious liberty and economical laissez-faire as to bear contentedly the weight of this burden of guilt? A nation may for a time sin in ignorance; but England can plead ignorance no longer. If she continue to dabble her hand in blood; if she continue to be liable to the deep damnation of "taking off" these dark races, does she think to be acquitted at the awful bar of God, by mumbling the shibboleths of "free trade" or "vested interests"? Let her not be deceived. The "sword bathed in heaven" is not in haste to strike; but when the hour for just retribution has come it is apt "to smite once and to smite no more."

The truest and best friend of a nation is the man who faithfully warns it of present guilt and impending judgment. We can only hope that the Archdeacon's warning may not fall on ears too pre-occupied to heed or even to hear.

Mr. Spurgeon's allusions to the recent Jubilee celebration in his current issue of The Sword and the Trowel are suggestively scanty. In a single sentence he records his loyalty and expresses heartfelt thanks for the fine day and the good conduct of the crowd. Then comes this postscript:—"Oh that we could see some such enthusiasm for Jesus our King." He evidently thinks Her Gracious Majesty has not as yet played her own part adequately in observing the Jubilee of her illustrious reign. In a note on the Hospital Sunday Fund he says:—

> We wish the Queen would give a hundred thousand pounds, and induce the nobility to follow her example. In the olden times a king at a Jubilee would have founded a monastery, or commenced a cathedral, and there is much more need now that our great ones should endow hospitals or build orphanages. How we wish the hint would be taken.

There is ample time yet for Her Majesty to take the hint thrown out by the Tabernacle preacher.

For several Sunday evenings past a priest at the Pro-Cathedral Church, Kensington, has been endeavouring to enlighten the benighted English mind as to the grievous injustice done to the Romish Church, in making it responsible for the Smithfield fires, the Spanish Inquisition, the massacre of St. Bartholomew, and the Gunpowder Plot. We did not hear, and have not seen any report of, the three first addresses; we cannot, therefore, say how the speaker managed to shift to other shoulders the enormities popularly attributed to the Romish hierarchy. We had the benefit, in common with a crowded congregation, of hearing the concluding harangue (for such it was) with respect to the Gunpowder Plot. The contention of this cleric was that the plot was the sole work of some dozen or fourteen men, driven to desperation by the ruthless and flagrant persecution of the reigning Protestant powers; that the Pope and his subordinates, so far as they knew of the contemplated rebellion, frowned upon and discouraged it to the utmost; and, therefore, to prolong, by a yearly remembrance of the fifth of November, the odium cast on Popery in this matter, is manifestly unjust.

We cannot now enter into the historical question, and are quite willing to give the Romish Church the benefit of any doubt that may righteously be entertained on the point. The preacher conceded that the observance of Guy Fawkes day, in so far as it reflects on the conduct of the Romish Church, is dying out; he himself, therefore, reduced his grievance to small proportions. But one singular statement he made was, in our judgment, absolutely fatal to the system he was seeking to uphold and defend. He admitted that Father Garnet, the then head of the Jesuit order, received full particulars of the intended plot, but as the intelligence was given to him under the seal of confession, he was positively prohibited from using his knowledge so as to unmask the conspirators and prevent the projected catastrophe. It will be seen by a succeeding note that this seal of secrecy is not observed when it suits the purpose of the popish authorities to break it. But on their own showing, a more damning condemnation of the confessional system could not be framed even by the most bigoted Orangeman. The bare statement of such a fact is surely enough to brand with the indelible stain of infamy a system which, in its practical working, in other directions, we may add, has destroyed and broken up the peace of more homes than any other single agency, not excepting the accursed alcohol.

The same speaker made a very bold defence of the Jesuits, whom he described as "the Life Guards" of the Roman Catholic Church. It will need much more, however, than bold assertion unsustained by an atom of proof, to convince the English people that this secret and unscrupulous order of priests, has been a blessing and not an unmitigated curse to mankind. It seems clear that Romish advocates in this country are becoming more and more aggressive and defiant in their policy. They must be met with their own weapons. We seek to condone no Protestant persecution of Romanists; God forbid. But it is a duty to our generation, that all who have the opportunity and the knowledge, should reveal in its true light, the character and doings of a system that proudly boasts of having as its motto, Semper eadem; and seldom fails to illustrate it.

The story of the Methodist invasion of Cuba, as told at the recent Conference in Belfast by Rev. Dr. Morrow, was soul-stirring in its intensity and simplicity. Four years ago there was a revolution in Cuba against the Spanish rule, the tyranny of which could not be borne. The people began to meet in dens and caves for the discussion of their political grievances, but they soon discovered, as was the case in the Garibaldian movement in Italy, that no matter where they met, their secrets were revealed, and their leaders arrested and executed. Finally it was discovered that the priests obtained the information from their wives and sisters in the confessional. Some of the people escaped to America, where they found that the Bible had something to do with the atmosphere of freedom, and going to Dr. Morrow, they asked for Bibles in the Spanish tongue, one man asking for copies for the people in Cuba. Dr. Morrow, in a singular manner, was just at the time offered 1000 dollars for mission work, and the man was supplied with the books and sent off to Cuba. Arrested at the instigation of the priests, he was set free by the mayor, and in a few days he had sold all his copies of the Scriptures; up to the present time over 20,000 Bibles have been circulated with wondrous results.

Complaints reach us now and then from missionaries abroad, especially in India, that copies of THE CHRISTIAN and other literature are sent to them insufficiently stamped. Friends who kindly forward the copies of the paper should see that the correct postage is affixed; to India or China the newspaper rate is 1½d. under four ounces; by book post it is 1½d. under two ounces.

It is proposed to signalise the Ministerial Jubilee of Rev. Dr. Horatius Bonar by a suitable testimonial, expressive of the veneration and affection in which he is held, not only by his congregation and his own church, but throughout the Christian world. Beyond the inner circles of Dr. Bonar's congregation and personal friends, there are doubtless many who have been edified and cheered by his Christian Lyrics and other writings, to whom it would be a pleasure to contribute to the proposed testimonial. Remittances for the Bonar Jubilee Fund may be sent to Mr. H. G.

If any of our readers are purposing to attend Mr. Moody's Northfield Conference in August, and wish for information as to sea routes, and how to get to Northfield on arrival in America, we will gladly advise them on the subject.

The article on "Our Working Women and their Earnings," in The Fortnightly Review, does not, perhaps, add much to our knowledge of a distressing social problem; but the writer says some wise things on the necessity of our young women receiving a better and more comprehensive training, in view of the vicissitudes of life:—

> The view of marriage as the one certainty, and the conclusion of their working days, does inestimable mischief to our girls...It needs little learning to know that more than half the women of working age in the kingdom work for their bread. This being so, parents would surely be wise to place in the hands of their daughters, as of their sons, a means of livelihood. For the trained worker can, if she has health, always support herself, and is able to save for old age; and, if she choose, she can remain single, or marry the man of her choice, though he be as poor as herself. If a brighter lot is in store for her, her technical training will still have done her good service in quickening her intelligence, and in thus making her a wiser mother to her children, and a more sympathetic companion to her husband; above all, in banishing much care by ensuring to her a means of livelihood in case of need.

In connection with this subject we have read with much interest the following announcement in an Australian paper:—

> A gentleman at Toowoomba has recently made an offer to the young ladies living in the Darling Downs district, which, if accepted, should prove a source of much interest and, indirectly, of much good. Being impressed with the idea that the training of young women in the present day is not such as to fit them for the position of good housewives and mothers, this gentleman has offered to give two prizes—First, £50; second, £25—to any young lady who can comply with the conditions laid down. They are:—(1) age, from fifteen to twenty-one years; (2) figure, strong, well-grown, healthy, with good carriage; (3) to be able to read English well aloud, to write a decent letter according to grammatical rules, and perform on some musical instrument, or sing moderately well; (4) to be able to cut out and make their own dresses and underclothing; dress to be neat, no artificial means (such as pads, steel-hoops, high-heeled boots, &c., &c.) allowed; (5) to be able to cook a good meal, and also prepare food for a sick room; (6) a thorough knowledge of all household duties.

Commenting on this "novel competition," our contemporary says:—"There is certainly nothing stringent about these regulations, and it will be surprising if this charitably disposed donor is not compelled to extend his prize list. Surely there are plenty of young ladies in the salubrious district to which the competition is restricted, who can answer to such qualifications. At any rate the development of the scheme will be awaited with curiosity." It seems clear to us that if our sisters wish to have their fair share of the world's work and its emolument, they must be quick to avail themselves of the many facilities for training that now exist, and are constantly increasing. When a young woman outstrips all her male competitors in classical attainment, at one of our national universities, it is much too late in the day to say that woman is of necessity intellectually inferior to man.

Another phase of this social problem persistently obtrudes itself on our attention, and will continue to do so. It is stated with great force by a lady writer in The Pall Mall Gazette of Friday last. While admitting that the employment of women in any industry does tend to reduce the general wage scale, she asserts, on the other hand, that "the exclusion of women from any industry tends to drive them into the one employment always open to them—prostitution." As between the two alternatives no man with a spark of common humanity left in his breast, not to speak of Christian feeling, would favour the latter. This writer urges that the stronger sex ought to make common cause with their working sisters, and give them the benefit of that organisation which has done so much to secure for themselves an adequate wage. It is humiliating and almost maddening to read the following sentences:—

> The sad central reason why women's labour is cheaper than men's is that women have a resource which men have not; they can sell their bodies when wage is below rapid starvation level. And they do. When toy-makers pay their girls 2s. 6d. a week, when binders pay their folders 5s. a week, when brush-makers pay their drawers 4s. 6d. a week, they know perfectly well that these women must make up the necessary sum for rent, food, and clothes by the sale of their bodies. Here, again, the only remedy is in loyal union between men and women workers, and the joint refusal to work for less than subsistence wage. If men, instead of taking this course, endeavour to shut women out of industrial occupations, the necessary result of their success will be the driving of women into prostitution.

It seems to us that our Christianity, nay, our very civilisation is at stake, if we do not find some effectual method of redressing this grievous wrong, and protecting the weak against the ruthless oppression of the strong.

A case which last week excited much attention and was the subject of questioning in the House of Commons, brings into relief another discreditable inequality from which women suffer. A young woman walking in one of our leading West-end thoroughfares in the early evening was arrested, taken to the police-station, and charged with immoral solicitation—a charge which proved to be quite unfounded. We sincerely wish that this offence, where there is no doubt about its commission, were far more stringently dealt with than it is; but not inhumanly, in the case of the weaker sex alone. It is nothing less than barefaced and transparent hypocrisy to make such enactments press hardly against a woman, in too many cases driven to this wrong-doing, when a man who does the same thing with a millionfold less excuse is allowed to go scot free.

We hope that those who appreciate the kindness of an employer to the young women of her establishment will note the address of Madame Bowman, 19, Southampton-row, Holborn, W.C. She went herself immediately on hearing of the outrage perpetrated on her employée, Miss Cass, and bailed her out, otherwise she would have spent the night in a police cell. Mrs. Bowman will very likely be put upon the black books of some of her customers for her kindness to another mother's child; therefore we hope others will more than supply their places. It would be a sorrowful thing if it were generally understood that so to stand by their employées when they are molested mean ostracism to the principals.

We think we hear some say, "Oh, that could never be in England!" Oh, but it could! Not long ago Annie Webb, a servant girl, was "run in" by another policeman, who suffered a month's imprisonment for his perjury—but Annie Webb was immediately dismissed by her mistress. Those women are not fit to have servants who do not treat them as they would like their own children to be treated in the same circumstances. When righteousness covers the earth as the waters cover the sea, such petty tyrannies will be impossible.

We must express our respect for the various morning and evening newspapers for the action they have taken in regard to this and other cases. The publication of some of the many cases of ignorant or cruel "justices' justice" towards the poorer and weaker members of the community is a service to society which deserves the thanks of all good men.

Prussia appears to be degenerating. Pastor Thummel, of the Lutheran Church, who some time ago was sentenced to a fortnight's imprisonment for "insulting the Roman Catholic Church," and who was released by order of the Emperor after a week's confinement, has again been brought up at Everfield. With his publisher, he is charged with contempt of court, and with again insulting the Romish Church, by certain passages in a pamphlet. He has been sentenced to nine months' imprisonment, the publisher escaping with only two. One of the "insulting" remarks is to the effect that the Romish Apostasy is "built upon superstition and idolatry," an opinion we share with Pastor Thummel, and one which "the land of Luther" ought to be the last to repudiate.

The address recently delivered to the students of Rotherham College by Professor Wilkins, of the Victoria University, Manchester, ought to be placed in the hands of every candidate for the Christian ministry, so full was it of keen, helpful wisdom. Without in any way depreciating the value of University honours, the Professor gave to the Word of God the most important place in the studies of both the candidate and the minister. In offering some valuable advice with regard to preaching, he reminded the students that men would be coming to hear them preach the Gospel who would be "pathetically eager for something which will make less heavy the weight of this unintelligible world, or help them to live a nobler and a purer life." Preaching, therefore, should be "positive," says Dr. Wilkins, and should not be apologetic:—

> The range and the effect of evolution, the definition and the nature of inspiration, the interpretation of the Mosaic cosmogony, &c., all these are matter upon which difficulties may arise, and you will be happier than many, if a generation of earnest study and thought shall have brought you to definite and well-reasoned conclusions about them. But it seems sometimes that in the Providence of God these things are being shaken, that the contrast may be all the clearer with that which cannot be shaken, but remains, even his own eternal Gospel.

BURSLEM WAKES.—This annual festival has again taken place, with its thousands of visitors from far and near. Rev. M. Graham, vicar of St. Paul's, again secured the services of Mr. J. J. Brown, of the London City Mission. He arrived on the Saturday, and at once commenced work, holding a Gospel temperance meeting. On the Sunday several meetings were held. A pleasing feature of the work was a gathering held at the vicarage for tea, by invitation of the Vicar, of between forty and fifty of the showmen, which was much appreciated by them. In the Market-place meetings were held, and attentive audiences listened, and we believe that much good was done by them, as also by the tracts and leaflets which Mr. Brown and his assistants distributed.

THE FORM OF SOUND WORDS.

"Hold fast the form of sound words," wrote Paul to Timothy. When our thoughts become unsound we use unsound words; and, on the other hand, unsound words are a pretty sure indication of unsound thoughts. When, therefore, we hear some say that they "claim healing," we ask, are these sound words? Did any of the deaf, or lame, or blind "claim healing" of our Lord or of his Apostles? Claim, debt, law, are cognate, but claim and grace are antagonistic terms. If we can claim healing or anything else from God, we do not stand in grace. If we can claim healing we must have a right to it, and it is no more a "gift by grace." If we are justified by the law we are fallen from grace (Gal. v. 4). In like manner, if we assume to claim any blessing from God, we are fallen from grace; i.e., we have left the ground of grace in our relation to God, and are standing on the ground of law, for this is what Scripture means by falling from grace. We do not suppose that those who speak of "claiming healing" have consciously exchanged grace for law, but we think they entertain a thought which finds no sanction in the New Testament, and which is calculated to mislead the young and the uninstructed.

It may be replied that what God has pledged Himself to give, we have a right to claim. But the pledging and the giving are both of grace, and claim is an ungracious term to use under such circumstances. "If we confess our sins, God is faithful and just to forgive us our sins," but did a believer who had sinned ever come to claim forgiveness as a right, instead of as a gift of grace?

We do not now dwell upon the fact that if there were any things which we could claim, the healing of the body is not among them.

There is another form of words which seems to us no less unsound. It is that healing by faith without means is "the better way." It is said that if persons have faith to "claim healing," that is "the better way"; but if they have not such faith they must use means. Is there, then, no faith in God in the use of means? And if it be the way of God, in any particular case, to use and bless the use of means, is not that, in that case, the better way? God's usual way of feeding people is through the growth of grain, and flesh, and fish, which are acquired by labour. But when the multitude were fainting in the wilderness, Jesus fed them on the spot, increasing the food instantaneously instead of by the usual processes, and freely giving it without their working for it. Is that, therefore, "the better way" of obtaining daily bread? Surely that miracle was not the rule, but the exception which proved the rule. The better way was for them to go back to Capernaum and Tiberias, and work for their living as they did before.

Does it require a faith higher in kind or greater in degree to perceive God in the instantaneous increase of the food, than in its growth through seedtime and harvest, cold and heat, summer and winter, day and night, which God has promised shall not cease while the earth remaineth? Is the grace of God of necessity more evident in a faith which "claims" instant cure, than in the long and patient endurance of many a sufferer whose face shines with a light from the other world? Is it certain that more glory must accrue to God, under all circumstances, from the direct manifestation of his power, than from the prayerful use of means, by some "beloved physician," and from the tender care of a loving nurse through the night watches? Is a sick-room no means of grace to others? We remember a noisy schoolboy who learned to tread quietly and to speak softly in the house where for five years his mother and sister were slowly dying, and God was showing in them his sustaining grace. Looking back over forty years, he could not say that any other would have been a "better way." Those loved ones lived not to themselves nor died to themselves. There have been some who never claimed healing, whose life has been continued in those whom their dying taught the love of God.

CANON WILBERFORCE arrived at Southampton last week, after nearly three months' absence. On Tuesday next he will receive a public "Welcome Home" from his parishioners.

THE CRYSTAL PALACE.—The Temperance Fête will be held on Tuesday, July 12. Mr. William Forbes will be pleased, as in previous years, to meet preachers and singers, at three o'clock, at the Bible Stand in the Palace.

A WARNING.—The public is warned against A. J. Dixon, who has been obtaining money on false pretences by using the name of Mr. H. L. Hastings, the well-known anti-infidel lecturer, without authority. The man turns out to be an old offender, and any information concerning his whereabouts is wanted by Mr. Hastings' manager, John K. Hastings, 10, Paternoster-row, London, E.C.

JUBILEE UNITY.—At a Jubilee service at Deal every Protestant Church in the parish was represented. Three clergymen, together with the Baptist, the Congregationalist, and the Methodist ministers, took part. We gladly note that there were many such united thanksgiving services, causing great satisfaction, and giving rise to the hope, expressed on all hands, that the friendly feeling evoked will be of a permanent character.

A PLEA FOR THIRSTY POSTMEN.—May I remind friends how very acceptable a glass of lemonade is to the hot, tired postman on his round during these summer months. The publican frequently offers him a glass of beer, and shall we Christians be behindhand in thoughtfulness? Shall we not rather stretch forth a helping hand to our brother, who, may be, is fighting manfully against this strong drink? Actions speak louder than words.

ILFRACOMBE.—Some members of Whittington-avenue and Aldersgate-street Y.M.C.A.'s have lately visited this place. Assisted by local friends, they held an open-air meeting on the sea-shore at Wildersmouth on Sunday, June 19. There was a large gathering of people, who seemed deeply interested throughout. Another meeting was held on Sunday, June 26, at which there were hundreds of people present on the parades and hill-side. The meetings will be continued throughout the season, at 8.15 p.m., and friends who can assist will be welcomed.

SHELTER FOR YOUNG WOMEN.—A meeting of ladies interested in Miss Bromage's work on behalf of young women was held at Olive House, 5, Burton Crescent, Euston-road, W.C., on Tuesday morning to consider by what means it can be continued. Although no salary is paid for management, and the strictest economy is used, the sums received from inmates fail to meet the outlay. It was computed that the ordinary income needs to be supplemented by subscriptions of £50 per annum. Mrs. Hind-Smith pointed out the convenient situation of Olive House for girls from the country, it being close to Euston, St. Pancras, and King's Cross stations. Other ladies testified from personal knowledge of girls to whom the house has afforded real help and blessing. It was unanimously agreed that a work so much needed and so useful ought to be continued. Miss S. A. Bromage at Olive House will gladly supply further information.

ANOTHER MISSIONARY MARTYR. — News has recently been received that Rev. Dr. Reid, who left Munson U.S.A. last winter to become a missionary in Central Africa, has been killed and eaten by a tribe of cannibals.

NEW YORK.—A Bill making marriage impossible unless the man is eighteen and the woman sixteen years of age, has been enacted by the New York Legislature. This, says The Congregationalist, is a wise act, but we question whether it would not have been well to set the ages two years higher.

Notes on Daily Readings.

SUNDAY, JULY 10.—PROVERBS V.

This chapter contrasts the dominion and doom f vice with the satisfying pleasures of true ome life—the strange woman with the true wife.

I.—The Dominion and Doom of Vice. (1) Begins with flattery and an excited imaginaion:—For the lips of a strange woman, &c. (ver.). We must guard well our minds, keep a pure magination, and shun voluptuous and exciting houghts. (2) The end is everything. Her end s bitter (ver. 4). The pleasures of sin are only n the learning. Pleasure induces practice: ractice swiftly creates habit; and habit hardens nto necessity and doom. As the power of evil abit strengthens the pleasure lessens, till at last weariness and ennui make life, now so foul and dishonoured, almost insupportable. Her feet go down to death.—Fire does not scorch and kill more surely than lust, which is to mind and heart just what fire is to organic matter. The blazing house may make a rare show for an hour r so; but what is that to the awful ruin, desolaion, and death which it involves? That blackned, burnt-out mansion! how eloquent of blackened, burnt-out hearts! "Her feet go down to death." He shall be holden with the ords of his sins.—A corrupted imagination, perverted affections, vicious tastes, and habits hat have become second nature—these hold him n voluntary slavery and most horrible debasement. The cords of sin are soon strengthened by the chains of despair.

II.—The Satisfying Pleasures of "Pure" Home Life. Drink waters out of thine own cisterns, &c. (ver. 15—19).—One of the best safeuards against vice is a high and reverent onception of the sacred beauty of true marriage. See Arnot's noble exposition of this passage, "Laws for Heaven," pages 130—133.

MONDAY, JULY 11.—PROVERBS VI.

1—5.—If thou be surety, &c.—Dr. Thomas eminds us that two things only can justify suretyhip: (1) A truly deserving case, and (2) ample ower in the surety to meet the utmost liability, n addition to those natural claims of his amily, and the work of God, which already xist. We are here reminded how easily an nsnaring engagement may be made, and warned o escape from such with the utmost promptiude.

6—8.—Little preachers, but great sermons. They teach that indolence can find no excuse in 1) feebleness, for what is an ant to a man; (2) he activity of others, ants don't idle because thers toil; (3) the want of helpers, "they have o guide, overseer, or ruler," but each works by he law of his being; and (4) the providence of God, God provides for the ant by helping him to rovide for himself (see Dr. Thomas).

9—15.—The lazy man and the wicked man. The lazy man (ver. 9—11). (1) Procrastinates. Too cowardly to profess his indolence, he proises but performs not, and so cheats himself nd his fellows; (2) Travels steadily, but surely, o poverty. "Laziness brings ruin. Intellectual aziness brings intellectual ruin; commercial, ommercial ruin; and spiritual, spiritual ruin." —Thomas. "All good principles must stagnate without mental activity." The wicked man ver. 12—15): the idle man becomes the wicked man.

16—19.—Arnot notices the parallel between he seven cursed things here, and the seven lessed things in the Beatitudes—that the first nd the last in both lists answer to each other: The proud look" to "the poor in spirit," and He that soweth discord among brethren" to Blessed are the peacemakers."

20—24.—Keep thy father's commandment and orsake not the law of thy mother, &c.—"There must be many joyful meetings in the better land; ut when a son, saved by the truth his mother aught him, enters into rest, and meets his mother there, the joy—oh, one would think that ministering angels must reverently stand back rom it as one too deep for them to intermeddle ith."—Arnot.

TUESDAY, JULY 12.—PROVERBS VII.

This chapter is a work of high art—a poetic picture of marvellous power and beauty. Every young man should hang a copy of it in the study of his imagination.

Two figures occupy the centre (ver. 7—21)—the tempter and her victim. How vividly she is painted! How real her power! She assumes the gait and the garments of love, flatters his vanity, and fires his imagination with glowing suggestions of the stolen sweets of sin. The voice of prudence is silenced by the promise of immunity—that old, old lie, "You can sin, and not suffer," and so, "with her much fair speech," she causes him to yield.

In awful contrast to this gay central scene is that painted to the right of it (ver. 22—27). There lies the victim, stark in death, transfixed by a dart. There, too, thick around him, lie "many strong men" whom she has slain.

To the left of the picture may be seen one of Wisdom's sons. He is strong and free, earnest and intelligent. Noble purpose, high thought, and settled peace are visible in his face. Near at hand stands the strange woman, the tempter. But her charms are lost on him. Wisdom so enlightens and satisfies him that he is superior to the glamour of sin.

Lesson: a heart preoccupied with Christ is safely garrisoned.

WEDNESDAY, JULY 13.—PROVERBS VIII.

Wisdom.—Is the Wisdom who cries an attribute of God, or the Person of Emmanuel? "We may safely take it for both, or either. The wisdom of God is manifested in Christ, and Christ is the wisdom of God manifested."—Arnot.

13.—The fear of the Lord is to hate evil.—"To fear retribution is not to hate sin; in most cases it is to love it with the whole heart. It is a solemn suggestion that even the religion of dark, unrenewed men is in its essence a love of their own sins. Instead of hating sin themselves, their grand regret is that God hates it. All the false religions that have ever desolated the earth, are sparks from the collision of these two hard opposites—God's hate of sin, and man's love of it... In Christ only may this sore derangement be healed. It is when sin is forgiven that a sinner can hate it. Then he is on God's side."—Arnot. "There is forgiveness with Thee, that Thou mayest be feared."

22—31.—This entire passage is full of the Person of Christ, the Word Incarnate. He could hardly have been spoken of more directly, or in plainer terms. These sublime words reveal the Redeemer looking forth with glad, loving sympathy upon the scene of redemption. They throw a wonderful light on the words: "The Lamb slain from the foundation of the world" (Rev. xiii. 8). Observe the glorious human sympathy, the perfect humanity, expressed in verse 31: "Rejoicing in the habitable part of the earth; and my delights were with the sons of men." How like the Man Christ Jesus!

THURSDAY, JULY 14.—PROVERBS IX.

In the first six verses of this chapter we hear the voice of Wisdom crying, "Whoso is simple, let him turn in hither. Come, eat of my bread." In the last six, another voice—the personification of guilty pleasure—cries, also, "Whoso is simple let him turn in hither. Stolen waters are sweet." Contrast these invitations, remembering that they are actually made to each of us, and that one or other of them is actually accepted by each.

These opening verses remind us of our Lord's parable—the Marriage Supper. We have the banquetting house with its seven pillars, i.e., perfect in strength and beauty. Then there is the feast, liberal and great—the great Gospel feast (see Isa. lv.). Next, the servants who invite:—"Go...compel them to come in." "We are ambassadors for Christ." Then, the guests invited:—"Whoso is simple...that wanteth understanding, come." "Go into the highways and hedges." "Whosoever will, let him come." Lastly, there is the persuasive argument:—Come, eat of my bread, and drink of wine which I have mingled. "All things are ready, come unto the marriage."

7.—He that reproveth a scorner, &c.—"A scorner is a man distinguished by self-ignorance, audacity, callousness, vanity, and irreverence. His grand aim is, by little sallies of wit and ridicule, to raise the laugh against his superiors. He belongs to the lowest type of moral character. The 'wicked man' is of the same class. The man who resents reproof is like the fabled lady who, because the looking-glass reflected the wrinkles of her face, dashed it to the ground."—Thomas. Just so, do many shun and spurn the Bible. It shows them their sins, and the stern condemning truth of God, so they dislike it, and grow even to hate it. Rebuke a wise man, and he will love thee.—We may well love a friend who rebukes wisely. He has done us a rare good service, and one that probably cost him much to render.

FRIDAY, JULY 15.—PROVERBS X.

Here we enter a new section of the book. There is less continuity and connection than before. We have now a vast collection of miscellaneous proverbs. These should be learnt by heart, if possible, especially by the younger folk, whose interest in the inner meaning of the words should be carefully awakened. We know of no educational work that can be compared with the Book of Proverbs.

1.—A wise son maketh a glad father.—"Do you hear this, young man? It is in your power to make your father glad, and God expects you to do it. Here is an object for your ambition. A son's wisdom is a father's joy."—Arnot. A foolish son is the heaviness of his mother.—"A son who breaks his mother's heart! Can this earth have any more irksome load to bear? Foolish son, do you ever allow yourself to think that you are bruising the bosom which you lay upon when you were a helpless infant?"—Arnot.

5.—He that sleepeth in harvest is a son that causeth shame.—I.e., He that lets the occasions of life slip by unimproved. "Lift up your eyes, and behold the fields white already to harvest." Is there no shame to the indolent people of God who sleep in this great harvest day of time when the harvest that spoils is the harvest of souls?

11.—The mouth of a righteous man is a well of life.—His thoughts and sentiments are true and just, kind and noble. His words, therefore, are helpful, stimulating, comforting, and full of quiet power. The lips of the righteous feed many. —Who can measure the power of the man whose thoughts are directed by the Word and inspired by the Spirit of God? What a well of life has the mouth of the Righteous One proved! How great the multitude fed by his lips! "The words that I speak unto you...they are life."

SATURDAY, JULY 16.—PROVERBS XI.

1.—A false balance is abomination to the Lord: but a just weight is his delight.—One of the many texts that connect religion and business together. Men say that competition is making honest business impossible; and the currency given to this notion often makes the position of the honest and God-fearing trader very difficult. Here is his refuge—the truth that God hates trade tricks, and that He loves fair dealing. To know that God is well-pleased with his just trading—this is his strength and reward.

2, 3.—When pride cometh, then cometh shame, &c.—"Pride and shame constitute a pair: they must go together, whether they will or not. There is always something at hand to gall pride, where there is pride to be galled."

12.—He that is void of wisdom despiseth his neighbour.—If the converse of this—He that despiseth his neighbour is void of wisdom—be true, then some of us may surely discover our lack of wisdom by the ease with which we speak and think depreciatingly of our neighbour. We should do well to repeat this proverb whenever we are about to enter society. True wisdom is humble, kindly, and considerate. The self-conscious cleverness which would raise itself at others' expense proclaims its own foolishness.

17, 18, 20.—The merciful man doeth good to his own soul, &c.—"As we sow, we reap. Sowing righteousness is never, and nowhere, lost labour. Every act done by God's grace is living and fruitful.—Arnot.

24.—There is that scattereth, and yet increaseth, &c.—Familiar and beautiful word! Yes, but have we tested it, and are we testing it for ourselves? Are we giving out our love, toil, sympathy, time, and money boldly and generously?

Beautifully Printed on Toned Paper in Red and Black.

"Chats with the children about birds mentioned in the Bible, in which are introduced anecdotes illustrating their instincts and habits, and explaining and applying the references to them in Scripture: contains many pictures and a pretty coloured frontispiece. A beautiful little book, and very handsomely got up."—Christian Age.

"A very pretty little volume, beautifully illustrated, handsomely printed, and very tastefully bound. It contains much information and much useful teaching about Bible birds. It is just the book for a present to our young friends, to whom it will prove very attractive." Living Waters.

"Mr. Bowker knows much about the birds; and he makes his feathered favourites teach many a sweet lesson. By all means let the children have this prettily written and prettily illustrated book."—British Messenger.

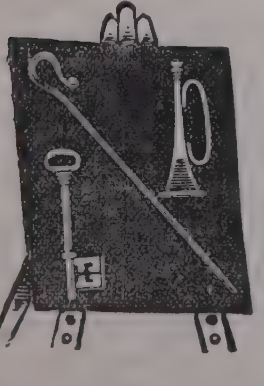
CONTAINS

FOURTH THOUSAND

Sixty Outline Lessons for the Class,
Forty-three Diagrams for the Black-board,
Twenty-five attractive Children's Hymns.



"A thoroughly practical book, by teachers who have learned by experience the best methods. Teachers will find it most helpful, especially in blackboard word-work. The Addresses are teachings—which very many Children's Addresses are not."—The Teacher at Work.

"We do not remember meeting with any better book than this for help in Children's Meetings. It is first-rate. There are objects to be drawn on the blackboard; but there are also capital lessons to go with them. Black-boards get very, very black; and the children are very bored, when it is all chalk and no sound sense. Many of these Addresses would make sermons of the first water—and what more can we say of Addresses?"

Rev. C. H. SPURGEON in
The Sword and Trowel.

"We have no hesitation in advising all who are engaged in the good work of teaching children and young people in Gospel principles, and the way of salvation, to possess themselves of a copy of this work. It will be found to be a very valuable and suggestive book, and helpful to the teacher of the Infant—as well as to the teacher of the Bible-class."—Baptist Messenger.

CHRIST'S JUBILEE.

'Tis time to turn our thoughts
To heaven's eternal King—
The tribute of our songs
To Him above to bring;
To laud our sovereign, sure is meet,
But songs to Christ are passing sweet.

The songs of earth collapse,
Their echo dies away;
The sovereign whom we love
May not much longer stay;
But Christ for ever lives and reigns,
His sceptre over all obtains.

Who sings alone of earth,
Nor strikes a higher string,
When earth shall pass away
Shall have no song to sing;
But those whose praises heavenward tend
Begin a song that ne'er will end.

Turn, then, thy thoughts to Christ,
His saving power believe,
His Word—His precious Word—
Of life and peace receive;
Then, with new-born felicity,
Sing on Heaven's song of Jubilee!

SAILORS' HOME, HAVRE.

any Christian friends travelling on the Con-nent can take Havre en route, they would find a ood work going on at this Institution, and their elp at the meetings of sailors, in singing or peaking, or in visiting the ships in port, would e very greatly valued.

Lady Beauchamp writes:—"God has wonder-lly interposed for the sailors, and stopped the ower of one who has systematically robbed hem in a most barefaced way for the last fifteen ears by charging thicty francs for shipping hem, and in many other unlawful ways. His ickedness has all been shown up, and the thorities have expelled him from France, and everal others who had bad houses in connection ith him have now been compelled to shut up rough the loss of his patronage. The shipping as now very largely come to the Home, and the en, being more left to themselves, come more eadily.

"During May £889 of their wages were sent to heir homes, which is a great cause for praise, ut still there is much to be done. We sadly ant spiritual workers to go after the men and et them into the meetings, which the workers re unable to do, as their time is so much occu-ied in the Home." The Home is in Rue Dauphine, Havre.

LIVERPOOL SHELTERING HOMES.—Mrs. Birt ails this week for Canada with a party of young migrants, boys and girls gathered up one by one, nd greatly improved by a few months of training n the Sheltering Home. Two parties sailed earlier n the year, one of boys, and one of girls. This hird party is a mixed one, and our readers are sked to remember them when on the sea. There s no more merciful and blessed work than rescuing nd saving the children of our great cities.

INTERNATIONAL ARBITRATION AND PEACE SSOCIATION.—At a special meeting of members, Mr. Hodgson Pratt made a report on his recent isit to Italy in aid of the European Federation f the Friends of International Concord. In almost very city on the Continent, he said, there are now people engaged in working in the interests of the eacemakers of Europe. In the Italian Parliament vote affirming the principle of arbitration has ecently been carried. In Milan he met an ex-remely favourable reception; the views of the Association were taken up by all classes, including many members of Parliament, the Freemasons' nd workmen's and political societies. In Rome, s in many other cities, he found a deepening im-ression that war was almost inevitable in the resent state of Europe. He maintained that it as the duty of everyone who loved his fellow-reatures to bring influence to bear upon rulers, nd to insist that as war could be made, so peace ould be maintained.

A FRENCH MISSION.

A promising work was commenced a short time since in the village of Dielette, about twenty miles from Cherbourg, by the wife of Mr. Thos. Ph. Sinel. Being on a visit here, she thought of gathering a few neighbours together to read the Word of God, and to her surprise over fifty persons attended the first meeting. In this village live about 200 workmen employed in an iron mine, and the low public-houses are their only places of resort.

After a little while Mr. Sinel followed up these meetings by others, and for five consecutive evenings the kitchen placed at his disposal was crowded by eager listeners—men, women, and children, some coming from a great distance. There is a Protestant church in a neighbouring village three miles distant, where, as a result of the awakening consequent upon these meetings, about forty strangers, all from Dielette, go when it is open for worship on Sundays. But as this is too far away for week-night meetings, some place where, besides a room for Bible-reading and prayer, coffee-room accommodation could be provided as a counter attraction to the public-houses, is urgently needed. Mr. Thos. Ph. Sinel, Impasse Vintras, Cherbourg, will be glad of the sympathetic fellowship of our readers in this matter.

THE CHURCH ARMY.

On August 5 the Training Home of the Army at 130, Edgware-road, London, W., will receive a fresh instalment of men under the Principal, Rev. F. S. Webster. It may not be generally known that this establishment receives earnest working men duly tested by (some little) previous experience. They are trained in the practical nightly work of winning souls in the slums of London, and in a sound Bible course. In cases where it is really necessary the Society even makes small grants towards the support of the wives and children (if any) while the man is in training. This usually lasts from six weeks to four months, according to previous ability.

After labouring in England for some time, any desirous of entering the foreign mission field are encouraged to do so. Some of those previously trained have been members of various denominations, who have found that they had full and free scope in the Church of England to win souls for Christ.

Young men from twenty to thirty-five are the most usually accepted, and are either single or with small families. The evangelists usually stay from six to twelve months in one place, and receive a sufficient stipend to enable them to live in a humble fashion. The committee is at all times open to consider applications, and to give counsel and advice to truly-devoted persons desirous of labouring for the conversion of the worst, either at home or abroad.

FARTHING DINNERS.—Mr. G. H. Sargant, of Birmingham, by his close study of the problem of how most economically to feed poor children, has reached conclusions which make the efforts of philanthropists in this direction easily attainable, and should remove from amongst us what has been a cause of great pain and scandal. He has found that for a halfpenny, this to cover the cost of ingredients only, a larger "portion" of food can be supplied than the majority of children can eat. A farthing's worth, indeed, is ample for all except those with extra large appetites. Upon this basis a society in Birmingham last winter and spring distributed more than 200,000 dinners to poor school-children, with this happy result, that they lost their pinched, starved appearance, and gained in size and weight. More than this, there is a change, amounting sometimes almost to revolution, in the moral nature of some of the children. Vicious and revengeful children have become docile, and notoriously greedy children ask to be allowed to give a share, even of a farthing dinner, to a brother or sister. Of course, the general expenses were defrayed by subscriptions. Surely, no little ones should starve when they can be fed for a farthing!

OBITUARY.

PRESIDENTS HOPKINS AND HITCHCOCK, U S A.

Within five hours of each other, two Americans, distinguished as teachers and preachers, and as the heads of great educational institutions, passed suddenly away from this earthly scene. Dr. Hitchcock, President of Union Theological Seminary, and Dr. Mark Hopkins, so long President of Williams College, that President Garfield used to say that he owed more to him "than to any other man whom he had ever known," were called away, the one at ten o'clock on the night of June 16, and the other at three o'clock on the morning of the 17th.

President Hopkins, who had completed his eighty-fourth year, had the gift in a remarkable degree of educating young men. Hundreds whom he trained are now occupying high positions as instructors and in the different professions. But "above all this, he counted that man ignorant, and that life a failure, who, with all his attainments did not 'know the one living and true God, and Jesus Christ whom He had sent.'"

President Hitchcock had been eminent, not only in connection with Union Theological Seminary, where he laboured for thirty years, but as a preacher in the pulpits of New York and Brooklyn. Professional men of every class thronged to hear him whenever he preached. He also edited "A Complete Analysis of the Bible," and he knew how to rebuke the glorification of science, as shown in a marked manner on the occasion of the dinner given to Professor Tyndall on the eve of his return to England. Said he, "If ever the time came when science and religion met on some high, commanding position, as on a cliff, and locked horns in a deadly embrace, which must be fatal to one or the other, I have no fear as to which would go down into the abyss."

MRS. CAROLINE NEILD.

This lady, for many years resident at Warrington, and lately at Reading, gently passed to her rest on Friday, June 24, in the seventy-third year of her age. She was a member of the Society of Friends, and in her gentle and peaceful life, ever noiselessly busy for the Master whose she was and whom she served, she embodied in herself the Society's leading principles. Mrs. Neild was a warm supporter of the total abstinence cause, and lost no opportunity by lip and life to plead its merits and claims with those who have failed to discover them for themselves. Mrs. Neild was the sister of Mrs. Edward Shipley Ellis, of the Newarke, Leicester, a lady well known and beloved in temperance circles. Mrs. Neild's life was one of rare and beautiful completeness. Her passing away was but the sunset of a life which has finished its course. "The memory of the just is blessed." Those who most mourn her loss will increasingly rejoice in the thought of her tranquil end.

THE GRAND JURY at the Old Bailey think the law dealing with offences against girls ought to be made more stringent.

CAMPBELTOWN, N.B.—The Christian Institute erected by the Y.M.C.A. here was opened on 28th June. Lord Kinnaird presided. Addresses were given by Revs. Dr. Russell, J. Thomson, J. McQueen, D. F. McKenzie, D.D.; Mr. W. Robertson, Edinburgh; Mr. Geo. Clarke, London; Mr. R. Henderson Smith, and others. The building is a very handsome one, costing £2600, and only some £300 of a debt remains. Mr. Geo. Clarke is conducting a mission for a fortnight in it.

CHERBOURG.—A very interesting work in connection with a little Protestant church is carried on here by M. Louis Lerendu. The mission is principally to the French, but, as the Southampton steamer, and one or two English vessels are in port on Sundays, the pastor always has an English meeting, besides holding two services in the week. M. Lerendu commenced the work, believing it was the Lord's will, and with his own hands made the humble place in which the people meet the comfortable salle it is. In the town there are some French Protestants of the Reformed Church, but there is very little light amongst them, and those attending the services are, for the most part, very poor. M. Lerendu has no stated help, except a sum of £10 from the Continental Society, and though the expenses are small, there is great need for Christian help. Mrs. Hosking, 40, Rue de l'Alma, Cherbourg, Manche, France, will gladly supply any further information.

Letters to the Editor.

INDIAN ECHOES.

Dear Sir,—If the "Echoes" I may send you now and again appear late, you will, I am sure, take into consideration the fact that the voice of The Christian does not reach us here for three weeks after it is heard in England, and the echo will take equally long to travel back.

If all who spend time in writing articles in defence of particular plans, or who, in speeches and addresses, defend their own schemes at the expense of the work of others, were to unite as one man with one mind to pray for us, and not to find fault with us whose modes of working are not exactly to their way of thinking, we should, I believe, be greatly blessed. As it is, in addition to being often "cast down," we are also perplexed. Some say :—Live with the natives, and, like the natives, in huts—eating with your fingers, wearing no shoes and stockings, and marrying the sons or daughters of the soil; and many more things in this line. This method is loudly applauded at home. I am not writing to condemn it, nor any of those who practise it. If they can do so, and choose to do so, who am I to condemn? What I ask is this: Give credit to those who think and act differently, for being sincere in their service for their Divine Master.

We are having the thermometer running up to 100 degrees by 10 p.m. night after night, with hot winds blowing as off a furnace. Natives, horses, and dogs have been struck dead by the heat; and yet missionaries are put down as living luxuriously who venture to reside in a good-sized house, where, in the bedroom at 10 p.m., you can register 100 degrees of heat! There is just a little too much crying down of missionaries and mission work at home, now-a-days, by men who have lived in India, and who think that when they speak on missions they must judge those who continue at their post. The Saviour says, "Judge not." And "Who art thou," says Jesus, "that judgest another man's servant?" &c.

There have been men out here in India, who, whilst they were missionaries, worked on much the same lines as their fellow-missionaries, and, after years of experience, have received new light on some subjects, and who now appear to think that we should all get to think at once the same as they think now. We have really enough to do out here, without being hampered and hindered by criticisms, and denouncements, and often unkind and false accusations. Everyone who can recognise great men will say that the late Dr. Duff was a great man—a man who has left such a blessed impression on the minds of hundreds of the men of India. What did he once say, when the debate of the hour was on "Theories," and "Methods"? "Brethren," he said, "I have no theories. 'Whatsoever thy hand findeth to do, do it with thy might,' is enough for me, in a land where, on every hand, there is so much to do, and so few to do it."

It is the same to-day. Here we are plodding away: now with the lepers, anon with the children, there at the liquor shop, and again at the opium stall; now holding forth in the market and then in the open air—on the side of a wide thoroughfare—bathed in perspiration, as though preaching in a Turkish bath; bantered by an unsympathetic crowd, abused, reviled, laughed to scorn; having to listen to foul language; compelled to see vile deeds; surrounded by an atmosphere, which we dare not speak of too plainly, and of which friends at home can have no adequate conception. And yet there are men at home to-day who are really distracting the minds of many of God's dear children by only finding fault. To many who thus speak and feel, we in all sincerity and in good-feeling say, "Come over and help us; don't hinder."

Only a short time ago it was published to the thousands of the supporters of missions—although spoken at a temperance meeting—that missionaries sent their servants out here to the public-houses to fetch liquor for them. We can't afford to laugh at this. It is true or it is false. To begin with, there are no public-houses in India, as you have them at home. Moreover, it is a fact that the great majority of the missionaries in India are total abstainers, and many engaged in doing what they can to stem the tide of drink out here. That we are not all of us total abstainers, is no doubt attributable to the fact that we represent the churches at home that send us out. This will continue to be the case I fear. When you are all filled with the Spirit in England, and give yourselves to prayer for us that we may also be filled with the Spirit, then depend upon it we shall have a better state of things.

We have lately heard a voice as to the education of evangelists. It is not a new thing; it has been going on for years. It is rather a new thing at Saharunpore. Truly, we wish our dear brethren there "God-speed" in their work; but the men who would turn India upside down are not the men well up in Hebrew, Greek, &c., but men filled with the Spirit and "the love of Christ" and "the mind of Christ." Be it known, dear friends at home, that the millions of India to-day are steeped in ignorance and degradation—many who do not know their right hand from their left. To deal with such we want men who have hearts fired with love for souls. Would to God we had them! Are not many at home spending too much time in fault-finding, and so failing to pray, as they might, for this class of men? By all means train fair native preachers; but many learn so much that they are totally unfitted to go out into the villages to preach the Gospel to the poor. We must not forget the poor. Move with the people as well as with the times.

I do not for a moment mean to say that the majority of our friends at home are inclined to find so much fault with us; but it appears very clear that the number is increasing. There is no doubt much imperfection in us and in our work, but do take the best way of removing it. Let there be a basis of fact for every charge made against us. Don't make a general denouncement of us all, from a particular case or two. Where it is only a matter of opinion as to modus operandi, don't be too dogmatic. And above all, in humility before God, without any preconceived plan, pray Him to guide us all into the way, which is his way, and we shall all rejoice together.

BAPTISM AND CONVERSION.

Dear Sir,—To say of a baptized infant, "This child is regenerate," will assuredly provoke the doubt and argument of some and also the disbelief and contradiction of others. But in the absence of clear disproof, may we ask, Is it more presumptuous than many other statements commonly made and widely accepted? Is it worse, for instance, than the language of after-meetings or the reports of revivals and mission services? In these cases spiritual effects are observed with conspicuous clearness and marvellous accuracy, and results are recorded with ledger-like exactness, notwithstanding the awful exposition of mistake that past experience too abundantly supplies. Is it worse than the language of gravestones and funeral sermons, which must too certainly contain many an unhappy contrast? Strange it is that many who can speak with the utmost confidence of the salvation of a newly-made convert, deem it rank presumption to declare a baptized infant regenerate, although the chances of deception must be much more on the side of the adult.

But, it will be said, while there may be an equality of assurance, there is not of foundation. "Whoso believeth is saved." We can, and do, but take the believer at his word. In the case of the infant we have no individual confession, and no Scriptural statement. Therefore we cannot have the same ground for confidence. It is true that we have no direct statement, but our Lord by some of his "ifs" has taught us the principle of the Divine extension. "If God so clothe the grass...shall He not much more clothe you?" "If ye, being evil, know how to give good gifts unto your children, how much more shall your Father which is in heaven give good things to them that ask Him?" And may we not say, "If God regenerates and cleanses even from actual sin, the man who repents and believes, shall He not much more regenerate and cleanse the infant not requiring repentance, and unable to believe?" If an infant can be saved at all, is it not manifest that the way of salvation for such is marvellously simple and easy?

We have to face and answer these questions:—Do infants need salvation? Are they capable of salvation? Can they be saved while unregenerate? Is there anything to prevent their being regenerate?

Knowing, then, that God's love embraces them—believing that Christ's redemption extends to them, and taking regeneration as a new birth, the beginning of a new life, which faith may ultimately develop or persistent unbelief finally extinguish—is there anything to hinder our bringing infants to Christ in prayer, and, on the encouragement and strength of his Word and example, believing that He receives them, and gives them the very blessings He died for all to obtain? And believing it, is it wrong to say so, and baptize them accordingly? If conversion had not become almost conventional in its significance, and if it were not so highly theological in its employment, we should treat these things on simpler grounds, and be guided by the character of God as Christ revealed it, rather than by the arbitrary requirements of a formulated doctrine.

When a man describes infant regeneration in baptism as "so important and so tremendous a conclusion," it almost looks as if it were an evil to be dreaded. No benefit must be allowed that seems to mar the integrity of a doctrine. Were it not more natural for such to say, "It would be a grand thing if true, and most desirable, but at present I can see no ground for believing it." Let us hope in this respect at least that God is untrammelled with the supposed necessities of a human doctrine, and that his grace is free to move in answer to his own will and the prayers of his people. For it should be carefully noticed that the Prayer Book teaches the regeneration of infants to be the result, not of any specific, mysterious operation of the font, but of answered prayer. It founds its faith on the example of Christ with the little ones, and on the Gospel promise, "Ask, and it shall be given you." And believing that the children are dear to Christ; that they are partakers of his redemption, knowing of nothing to hinder the workings of grace, what man is there, understanding anything of God's heart, who after the prayers of the Baptismal Service (one had almost said, or without them), shall dare to say, "This child is not regenerate"? With a faith less given to curious analysis and high criticism, and more inclined to the larger view our Lord encouraged, the difficulty would be greatly diminished.

One thing, however, is certain, the difficulties of infant baptism are not all inside the Prayer Book. Those who baptize, but teach no regeneration, have to say what has taken place. Is it something or nothing? If something—what? Is it real or fanciful? Is it spiritual? Is it any part of the baptism? Does the child remain unregenerate? If so, what is the value of the baptismal benefit? If nothing happens, what is the position of those who religiously use an empty form?

But those who reject infant baptism—are they without difficulty? We can escape error by silence, but we cannot satisfy the truth. So with right and wrong. We may err in things undone as much as in things done, and the mere avoiding of infant baptism is not in itself security. Nor does it escape all difficulty. It may be assumed that holders of adult baptism only, believe that children unbaptized, dying before an age of responsibility, are saved. Can they be saved without regeneration? When and how does this happen? Must we suppose it carefully withheld, and given only at the last in the emergency of death, so that had they lived they had continued unregenerate? If not, when and how is it given?

Again, faith and repentance are required for adult baptism, but evidently not for infant salvation. Can they, then, who believe in the regeneration and salvation of certain infants without baptism, faith, or repentance, because of the accident of death, condemn others for believing that God regenerates an infant in answer to prayer? If they may be regenerate may they not be baptized?

Baptismal regeneration is an old and living question. The discovery of an apostolical exposition of Heb. vi. 1, 2, would finally answer it. In the absence of something equally authoritative we must wait for a settlement. In the meantime, while stoutly rejecting any operation, yet, believing in the Fatherhood of God, the redemption and faithfulness of Christ, evangelical clergymen may yet continue to say of the baptized infant, "This child is regenerate," and feel that they are not guilty of more extravagance than many others, and that whatever the present fact and the after life, they may believe that the spirit of these words is more in harmony with the Divine mind than a contrary statement, and perhaps, too, than none at all.

Should any still challenge the honesty and truthfulness of such an assertion, then, in all fairness let them refrain from pronouncing positive opinions on the actual spiritual condition of any—either living adult or departed infant—until they can read the thoughts and examine the hearts of others, and reveal some of the secrets of the other world. Otherwise, the charge of inconsistency may lawfully be returned. The language of faith is not ruled by mathematics, and, where rightly exercised, its spirit can never be untrue, notwithstanding a chance and accidental error in its letter.

Those who believe infant baptism to be repugnant to the mind of God are free to refrain from its practice. Those who can read in God's love a ready welcome and a true blessing for the little ones, are surely equally free to observe it. "Wisdom is justified of all her children." Let us seek to be the children of wisdom, and also to justify one another when true to our parentage.

A HOSPITAL FOR THE CONGO.

Dear Sir,—Having seen in the papers mention of the loss of two missionaries on the Congo Mission, I would suggest that a suitable hospital should be fitted up for missionaries at work on this river—near one of the waterfalls, so that good water power might be available for driving machinery similar to what is used on board the Australian ships for reducing the temperature in the hold for bringing meat to England perfectly fresh through the tropics and Red Sea, so that rooms in the hospital could be kept at a temperature of fifty or sixty degrees for the fever-striken patients.

This, I think, with proper medical attendance, would soon restore them to a good state of health. A steamboat also should be fitted up on the same plan, to convey the patients to the hospital. If this were done by the united effort of the missionary societies on the Congo, it might be the means of saving many valuable lives.

Yours respectfully,
Free Library, Camelford. George E. Pearce.

A WARNING TO SWISS CHRISTIANS.

Dear Sir,—I have received the following from a lady in Switzerland:—"Two English ladies were here the other day, named Mrs. H—— and Miss H——. They informed us that they were visiting all the Christians of Switzerland in order to speak to them of 'a full salvation,' which means that none of God's people ought ever to be sick. The Lord's Supper and baptism are quite things of the past; there is no hell; God is only love; there will be no death for people of this persuasion; they will be taken up like Elijah, &c. I know of one young girl, converted about two years ago, who has been much influenced by their teaching. They say they have a mission hall at Stepney-green, and work there among the poor. They seem to know Dr. Barnardo."

Your readers in Switzerland ought to be put on their guard against these people. The Agapemone evil is the natural climax of this sort of theology.

186, Aldersgate-street, E.C. D. Spencer.

THE PILGRIM MISSION.—From this Mission at St. Chrischona, near Basle, commenced forty-six years ago, faithful and devoted evangelists have gone into many parts of the world. In Switzerland there are eighteen at work in different cantons, while in Austria there are six, and eight in Germany. Others have laboured in Egypt, Nubia, Abyssinia, and the Galla territory. There are now sixty-eight students in the college, forty-four of whom are from Germany, and the rest from Switzerland, Russia, Bohemia, and Moravia. These work at the trades to which they have been brought up during the afternoon, the remainder of the time being occupied with studies. Last year at the consecration meeting, held annually on the first Sunday in August, sixteen young men of the senior class were set apart for the service of the Lord. An interesting feature of the work is the Home of Rescue, where during 1886 thirty-three men of different age and rank sought shelter for a time.

ITALIAN SOLDIERS.—In a letter to The Record, Sr. L. Capellini says:—My desire is to see military churches established in the other cities of Italy, to which the regiments that I have visited here in Rome are drafted on leaving the capital. I visit them when I am able, but the cost of the journey and living in these cities is more than I can afford. In Africa I have many friends to whom I write continually, and to whom I send books—the greatest boon in that climate. I have just received a visit from the Swedish missionary stationed near Massaua (Massowah), who is on his way home for rest. He gives the most excellent testimony to the faith and good conduct of our brethren in the garrison there, and how regularly they attend his services when they can. I am now making ready for my annual visit to the camps and to the great manœuvres. For this immense work, which is spread over a great part of Italy, I want a great quantity of books, tracts, Testaments, and Bibles. Besides this, I require the means for my journey, and my lodging, and that of my colporteur, and one other assistant.

The Book World.

Little Folks' half-yearly volume (Cassell & Co. 3s. 6d.) is equal in its varied attractiveness to any of its predecessors, and that is saying about as much as can be said. The artistic part of the magazine, indeed, seems to show a distinct advance, though there hardly appeared to be room for improvement. A splendid volume for the summer days at the seaside.

For Further Consideration. By Edward Butler. 3s. 6d. Elliot Stock. These pages are packed full of true wisdom, the fruit of much genuine and well-balanced thought, and keen observation The studies of Tennyson's "Idylls of the King," will interpret to many the allegory of the Laureate; while the shorter pieces furnish a rare stock of "apples of gold in pictures of silver."

Great Britain and Her Queen. By Annie E. Keeling. 1s. 6d. T. Woolmer. A charming Jubilee volume, giving a general sketch of the fifty years' reign under Queen Victoria. The many portraits of great men of all sorts—statesmen, soldiers, literary, and scientific celebrities—are excellent. Two chapters, on "Our Colonies" and "Intellectual and Spiritual Progress," complete a very readable little book.

Neville Trueman, the Pioneer Preacher. By W. H. Withrow. Wesleyan Methodist S.S. Union. This stiring narrative tells a tale of the war between the United States and Canada in 1812. With the sterner records of sanguinary fratricidal strife are intermingled pleasing glimpses of pioneer evangelism, with many graphic character sketches; while through the whole there runs a golden thread of constant and triumphant love. The author assures us that he had made diligent search into ancient records, so that the reader may rely on having a faithful transcript of an important chapter in American history.

An excellent addition is made to our biographical literature in Rev. E. A. Hoare's Notable Workers in Humble Life. (T. Nelson & Sons.) The humble workers portrayed are John Pounds, the Portsmouth cobbler, and friend of poor children; John Duncan, the Aberdeenshire weaver and botanist; Robert Dick, the Caithness baker and geologist; Thomas Edward, the "Scotch naturalist" and shoemaker; John Ashworth, the handicraftsmen and writer of "Strange Tales"; Thomas Cooper, Chartist agitator, secularist, and latterly defender of the Christian faith; Robert Flockhart, the soldier evangelist; and George Smith, of Coalville, with whose devotion to the cause of the poor and neglected nomad children we are all so familiar. The whole makes a capital gift-book for youths of humble social rank, in the formative intellectual stage of life.

We have received three small volumes that are heartily to be commended for the stimulus they must give to a consecrated, useful life. Mary Pryor (Hodder & Stoughton. 1s. 6d.) was one of those ministering women in the Society of Friends, who have served their generation well without any sacrifice of true womanliness, and with a devotion and self-abnegation too rare in the opposite sex. This "life-story of a hundred years ago," written by a sympathetic and practised pen, will bring pleasure and profit to all who peruse it. More recent, and equally beautiful in its way, is Outlines of a Gentle Life (Nisbet & Co. 1s. 6d.) full of interest to all mothers and home keeping wives. The life was that of Mrs. Shaw, sister of the late Miss Havergal, and the memoir now gains an added touch of sad interest, from the fact that the compiler (Miss M. V. Havergal) has herself joined the company of the glorified. The Memoir of Thomas Smith Thomson (Religious Tract Society. 1s. 6d.) is an object lesson in consecration of life to all Christian young men. Mr. Thomson's valuable career as medical missionary in India was cut short at the age of 41; may every reader be stirred to emulate his zeal.

THE JULY MAGAZINES.

The Family Magazines for this month are very attractive. Foremost among them stands The Sunday at Home; it contains the opening chapters of what promises to be a most interesting story, by the author of "The Spanish Brothers." A biographical sketch of Mary Willard, by Sarah Geraldina Stock, calls for special notice. But the paper of this number is Rev. A. Rowland's "Glimpses into American Sunday-schools." Every lover of the Sunday-school should get this and study it. In respect to Sunday-school work, America can teach us many things. What some of these things are Mr. Rowland points out with much skill and good judgment. We are sorely tempted to mention other papers, viz., "The Beatitudes," by Rev. Richard Glover, and "What General Gordon said to Hester Armstrong," &c., but we must reserve space to notice next The Quiver. This opens with an exquisite frontispiece, and contains, among other good things, a capital account of mission work in Paris, by Rev. Wm. Burnet. An unpretentious collection of nice sayings and happy illustrations, &c., under the title of "Short Arrows," deserves notice, if only for the "Bible Calendar" it contains. Bible students should find this very serviceable.—The Sunday Magazine has a charming little poem, charmingly illustrated, by Clara Thwaites; and another, "My Treasures," by L. Hinton-Dothie. But that which gives special value to this number is Mary Harrison's article, "James Fraser, Bishop." This is a noble sketch of a true and noble man. It is one that fires and invigorates the reader, and takes hold of him with both hands.—Good Words. "Nehemiah," by the late Chas. Reade, D.C.L., is bright, original, and full of common sense, For example:—"He did not answer the king out of his own head, and pray for wisdom six hours after, because it was lost time. He prayed standing on the spot, and like a skilful gunner, shot the occasion flying." Margaret Howitt's article on the "Royal Duke Doctor" is worth the whole number. It is a sketch of Prince Chas. Theodore, Duke of Bavaria, and his voluntary work among all classes as an eye doctor. This noble Prince maintains a hospital on his own estate, and at his own cost, where he ministers personally to the patients. When driven in spring to a milder climate, he still pursues his work in his new home. Last year, during a ten weeks' stay at Meran, some 1200 patients resorted to the Duke, and were received by him 4000 times, whilst 200 were operated upon. Beyond its serial stories, The Leisure Hour contains nothing remarkable. The Christian Treasury maintains its high evangelical tone.

We must not overlook the Children's Magazines. For the very little ones, Our Little Dots is most admirable; while for the older ones we heartily recommend Our Own Magazine. The Child's Companion is also good.

Our Boys' Magazine (Schoolboys' Scripture Union). This high-toned, manly little magazine deserves the notice of parents. If you have boys send for a copy.

Among Teachers' Magazines, we mention The Wesleyan Methodist Sunday-school Magazine, and the Church Sunday-school Magazine. The latter is full of interest and helpfulness. We like very much its paper "On Teaching," from which we quote the following: "These words, however true, will carry but little weight. We may teach them the facts of Scripture; we may explain hard words and sentences; we may tell them of ancient manners and customs, but we shall fail to make them 'rise up and walk' in newness of life, if we be not first partakers of the power of Christ."

Evangelistic Magazines:—As usual, The British Messenger is capital. We notice specially its first piece, "Something's got hold of me." Still, Friendly Greetings is not a whit behind in letterpress, and is splendidly illustrated. The Tract Magazine keeps well up to the mark. We would also mention The Gospel Trumpet, The Cottager and Artizan, and Good News.

Magazines: Practical and Theological.—The Life of Faith contains a stirring letter from Stanley Smith, and a telling article, full of sanctified common sense, by Pastor Otto Funke, on deciding by lot. The Believer's Pathway speaks to the point, when it says, "that a speaker has sometimes finished what he has to say a long while before he sits down." The Gospel Magazine is good in tone, but it would be much the better for a good boiling. Footsteps of Truth is full of helps to Bible study. We are glad to see there Dr. Somerville's famous little parable on the Bible, called, "A Noble Temple." The Contemporary Pulpit has, amongst other good things, a first-rate exposition of Ps. ciii., by Dr. Alex. Whyte, Edinburgh. The Expositor is, perhaps, not quite up to its own high standard. It contains an excellent and suggestive sermon by Dean Church, on "The Idolatry of Civilised Men," and a splendid etching of Dr. Maclaren, with a character sketch by the Editor. We cannot close this review without commending All the World—the monthly record of the Salvation Army—and Toilers of the Deep (Mission to Deep Sea Fishermen) to our readers' best attention. They are both full of interest and stimulus. Our ever vigilant and faithful friend, The Sentinel, well deserves honourable mention.

MISS FAITHFULL'S INSTITUTE, 136, Regent-street, W., has within the last twelve month clothed 153 necessitous ladies, gentlemen and children, thus enabling them to carry on their daily work

Among the Churches.

* We shall be happy to receive from our readers brief items of news for this page, respecting Christian work carried on, or progress achieved, in connection with any evangelical church at home or abroad.*

CHURCH OF ENGLAND.

Rev. W. Hay Aitken has been conducting a mission at Broughton-on-Furness.

Truro Cathedral will be opened in October by the Prince and Princess of Wales.

The Church Army Training Home will in August receive a fresh instalment of students to be trained for evangelistic work.

The Reformed Church of England is about to commence work in that hotbed of Anglican popery, Brighton, where a church upon a freehold site has been legally secured by Bishop Gregg.

St. Bartholomew's Church, Rotherhithe, recently consecrated, is the last of the ten churches erected as a result of the special appeal made by Bishop Thorold some years ago, in order to meet to some extent the spiritual destitution of South London.

Canon Overton, a plain-speaking high churchman, condemns the want of unction which characterises too much of the work of the S.P.G., and points out that the average Church Missionary Society parish is four times as fruitful as the average S.P.G. parish.

Canon Wilberforce, addressing the students at Wycliffe College, Toronto, showed by the various Greek terms used for the ministry that meekness and humility are its essential features, and warned the students against sacerdotalism and self-glorification.

The Crown Prince and Princess of Germany, who have been staying at the Queen's Hotel, Upper Norwood, attended the evening service at Christ Church, Gipsy Hill, on Sunday, June 26. An impressive sermon was preached by the vicar, Rev. R. Allen, M.A.

The Dean of Ripon thinks the evangelicals have gained a great deal during the past fifty years. He remembers the time when people would get out of their pews, slam the doors, and walk out of the church when a Gospel sermon was preached. Now even ritualists hear the Gospel.

CONGREGATIONAL.

There is a proposal to have Rev. R. F. Horton, of Hampstead, added to the professional staff in New College.

The British Weekly states, on the authority of a well-informed correspondent in New York, that it is expected Dr. Parker will settle in Brooklyn.

PRESBYTERIAN.

At a Presbyterian bazaar held in London lately, under very distinguished patronage, the expenses were £600, and the total returns £400.

The Broughton-place United Presbyterian Church, Edinburgh, have raised over £620, or one-thirtieth part of the whole amount, to liquidate the deficiency on the Foreign Mission Fund.

Dr. Marshall Lang, preaching at the Barony Church of Glasgow, on the Sunday after the Jubilee, said the service in Westminster Abbey was an hour of supreme, solemn, family union. Artistic as was the form of service, however, there was, somehow, a want of heart in it.

SALVATION ARMY.

South Africa has now fifty corps, thirty of which have been opened since Major Thurman arrived twelve months since. The officers have increased from forty-seven to one hundred and thirty.

Several officers of the Army have recently been brought before the magistrates at Stamford, and fined in heavy amounts for holding open-air meetings. Failing payment two were recently sent to prison.

The seventh anniversary of the Londonderry corps has awakened deep feeling—night after night large numbers professed to find salvation, and within four weeks over a hundred names have been taken.

There is a marked contrast between the attitude of the authorities in Copenhagen towards the Salvation Army and that of some in our own country. The Government organ expresses the hope that its coming may stir up pastors and congregations "to care more than hitherto for every class, but especially for the spiritual needs of the working classes."

BAPTIST.

This month's Expositor contains a life-like etching of Dr. Maclaren, with an able sketch by the editor, Rev. W. Robertson Nicoll, M.A.

A portrait and sketch of Mr. O. S. Dolby, the new pastor of Surrey Tabernacle, Wansey-street, Walworth-road, are given in this month's Earthen Vessel.

We much regret to hear of the death of Rev. George Pearce, who had laboured longer in India than any other missionary. He died at Ootacamund, Nilgherry Hills, on June 6. He went to India in 1826.

The Baptists of the United States gave last year for home and foreign missions, for education and other purposes, and for church support, about £1,740,000. This was the contribution of 2,700,000 members.

Mr. J. G. Brown, missionary secretary of the Pastors' College, who sails for the Congo in a few weeks, gave his farewell address at the Metropolitan Tabernacle last week. Mr. Spurgeon, speaking of the dangers of this mission-field, said, "Our lives are in God's hands, but our duty is in our own;" and further, "We cannot lengthen our lives by neglecting duty, and could we do so, it would be a wretched sort of existence."

METHODIST.

Rev. William Jackson has resigned the governorship of the Wesleyan College, Didsbury.

At Forton, near Chard, where for several years worship has been conducted in a cottage chapel, a larger building is now being erected.

A Chinese convert from one of the leading Methodist stations in China has been visiting Newcastle-on-Tyne. He speaks English well, and has addressed some Sunday-schools, and sung hymns in the Chinese language.

SOCIETY OF FRIENDS.

Great blessing has attended the labours of Evangelistic Friends in New England and Indiana. Many conversions and restorations are reported quite recently.

Special meetings have been held in Great Yarmouth' George Wood, Luton, Alexander Eddington, Norwich' and Isabella Young, of York, took part in them. As a result an adult school for men has been started on Sunday mornings, and on Sunday evenings a mission meeting is to be held.

We regret to hear that "White's Iowa Manual Labour Institute" has been burned down, and the family of fifty-three is sheltered in the out-buildings. The miscreants who burned down the meeting-house in Buffalo, Ohio, by a slip of the law, have escaped the punishment earned. Hatred to Prohibition was the cause of their deed.

NOTES FROM IRELAND.

A Training Home for girls, in connection with the Presbyterian Orphan Society, is about to be built at Belfast.

The memorial stone of a Training Home for girls (under the care of the Presbyterian Orphan Society) was laid on Saturday in Belfast.

The annual meeting of the Reformed Presbyterian Synod was held in Belfast last week. The reports on missions, &c., were of an encouraging character.

The sum of £1000 has been given anonymously by a gentleman towards the cost of erection of a Jubilee Memorial Hall for the Presbyterians in Belfast.

There are now thirty-six orphan societies in Ireland in connection with the Episcopal Church, the gross income of which was during the past year £26,000.

The Irish Evangelisation Society's tent which has been at Crumlin, co. Antrim, for about five weeks, has now been removed to Killultagh in the same county.

A fund in commemoration of the Queen's Jubilee for the education of the sons and daughters of clergymen of the Episcopal Church is being promoted in Ireland, and already a sum of several thousand pounds have been subscribed.

"FALLEN ON SLEEP."

Davey, for many years a Baptist missionary in the West Indies.—Mr. E. Henwood, an ardent worker in the Sunday-school of the Leysian Mission, Whitecross-street.—Rev. John Addyman, of Dewsbury, for more than fifty years a Methodist minister.—Mrs. Jones, Bryndedwydd, one of the founders of the English Presbyterian Church at Towyn.—Dr. Roswell H. Hitchcock, President of Union Theological Seminary, New York.—Dr. Mark Hopkins, formerly President of Williams College.—Mr. Ronald Johnstone, of Sunnyside, near Lanark, an elder of Sandyford Church, Glasgow.—Miss Jane Elizabeth Laughton, sister of Dr. Laughton, late of Greenock.—Mrs. Leckie, wife of the Presbyterian minister of Airth.—Dr. Hillier, of Sandwich, for many years pastor of the Congregational Church in that town.—Mr. W. G. Peachey, formerly deacon and treasurer of Harecourt Chapel, Canonbury.—Mr. Thomas Edwards, for many years senior deacon of Queen-street Church, Wolverhampton.—Mr. George Heys, of Hafton, near Padiham, who for nearly fifty years filled the offices of Sunday-school teacher, superintendent, class-leader, and local preacher in the Wesleyan Church.—General Granville Moody, the Methodist minister who at the outbreak of the American Civil War formed a company in Ohio and performed remarkable exploits in the battlefield.—Mr. Joshua Leadbetter, of Heckmondwike, for many years a zealous Sunday-school teacher and earnest local preacher of the Methodist body.—Rev. H. W. Bagnell, rector of Naffield, Oxon.—Rev. John Gibson Thomson, Presbyterian minister, Crossgar, Ireland.—Rev. H. C. Ogle, Fellow and Tutor of Magdalen College. He was to have sailed in August to join the Archbishop's mission to Assyria.—Rev. W. F. White, Presbyterian minister of Lucan, Ireland.—Rev. George Pearce, of the Baptist Mission, Calcutta.

SALVATION ARMY.—At a meeting in Exeter Hall on Wednesday evening last week, fifty additional officers for India were present to say farewell. Thirty are women. All were dressed in Indian costume. General Booth, who presided, said there are now in India eighteen corps, comprising 136 officers. Of these 54 are English, 2 Anglo-Indian, 10 Eurasian, and 69 natives. The 50 now going out will live as the natives do. The meeting was addressed by the three converted natives whom Major Tucker had brought over with him. One was formerly a Brahmin, another a Buddhist farmer, while a third had been intended for a Buddhist priest. Major Tucker spoke hopefully of the progress of the Mission in Bombay, and said the police there were now their friends.

CONTINENTAL & FOREIGN NOTES.

NIMES.—The Salvation Army has had for more than a year a Rescue Home in Nîmes, where many have been led from evil ways to occupy good places as respectable servants.

A MOSSOUTO DOCTOR, having a lunatic under his care, dug a hole, filled it with dry leaves, and then put his patient into it; after setting fire to the leaves, the hole was covered with an ox-hide. The patient was soon cured of all his woes. Alas! for the poor heathen of Lessouto.

SWITZERLAND.—Several Swiss papers are calling attention to the multiplicity of Sunday fêtes and amusements in Switzerland. Not only are the churches forsaken, but drunkenness increases, morals degenerate, and the exercise of thrift and economy is much on the wane, so that family and national life is endangered.

JAPAN has just given its first missionary student to the Bâle Mission. Geuso-Igutsi was instructed and baptized (John) in China. The missionaries who have had opportunities of closely observing him have great confidence in him. It was in 1874 that Buddhism ceased to be the State religion. Since that time the number of Buddhist priests has fallen from 240,000 to 50,000.

AT BERLIN a man named Bolle, at the head of a large model dairy, has set apart in his establishment a large room for worship, which is tastefully arranged and provided with an organ. At four o'clock every Saturday afternoon a pastor conducts divine service for the hundreds of men employed in selling the milk. A brass band is formed from among them, and they play with great enthusiasm and precision the beautiful German chorals; the singing too is very hearty.—Le Journal Religieux.

INDIA.—Some of the ignorant natives regard the postal institution as absolutely miraculous. In certain places the letter-boxes are worshipped. A native will take off his shoes on approaching the wonderful box, and go through his devotions before putting in the letter, and on retiring will leave a little propitiatory money-offering. Another will sometimes, after throwing in his letter, call out in a loud voice the name of its destination, that the great spirit who inhabits the box may know it.—L'Evangéliste.

THE McALL MISSION.—On Sunday, June 19, at the close of the English morning service, in the Salle Philadelphie of the McAll Mission, 23, Rue Royale, an English-speaking Christian accosted the minister and said he had enjoyed the meeting, and would like to give a trifle towards the work; so he drew out of his pocket a twenty-pound note, and handed that in as a gift. On being asked his name he answered, "It does not make any difference." The worker said, "Thank you! God will bless you for it!" and they parted.

SLAVERY IN BRAZIL.—A law is proposed giving freedom to all slaves in Brazil within two years. The Bill gives freedom to all the slaves in the Empire immediately upon its passage; but, to enable the masters to arrange their affairs gradually, it allows them to retain the services of their slaves for two years, paying them fair wages, however. There are several exceptions to the rule of enforced labour even for two years. A slave may buy his freedom at a price not to exceed two hundred dollars. Those who have reached an age past the time of active labour are exempt from further servitude. Husband or wife being freed, both are set free simultaneously. We trust the Bill may be carried.

IN ECUADOR the Pope still names the president, the priests still make the laws; as a natural result, in that whole country there is not a railroad, nor a telegraph, not a stage-coach, nor a highway upon which a carriage or a cart can be driven except the great roads built by the Incas before the Spanish invasion, which have never been kept in repair, and are now almost useless. There is not a railroad in Ecuador, except a tract ten miles long on the sea-coast, which was laid some years ago, but was never operated, and is now covered with tropical underbrush like a jungle. There is a law in Ecuador prohibiting the importation of books, unless they shall first receive the sanction of the church, and Jesuit priests act as inspectors at the Custom House, to prevent the dissemination of intelligence among the people.

A ROMAN CATHOLIC PRIEST, of the name of Michalet, in the diocese of Toulon in France, applied at the Mayoralty of Toulouse on June 18, in order to be married to a lady named Motel. The Mayor refused, because he had not brought a special dispensation from the Pope. The priest claiming his right according to the law, threatened to prosecute, and the Mayor then complied with his request. At the Council of Trent, 1563, celibacy was made absolutely necessary, but France, Spain, Germany, and Hungary made objections to certain clauses. At the French Revolution, the Constitution of September 3, 1791, said, "The Law considers marriage only as a civil contract." Some of the worst abuses from which France suffers would be removed, were the marriage of the priests to become general.

BASLE.—Writing on the subject of theatre-going, which now seems to be becoming more popular in this city than was the case formerly, when it was known as "Christian" Basle, the Basle Volksbote says:—"Even our so-called classic dramas move in an atmosphere which, once for all, cannot be called Christian. Every description of passion and feeling is represented and glorified, and even when vice is punished, it is not in a way or spirit according with the Scriptures.". "For him who has breathed the air of Christ's resurrection and ascension, for him who has moved in the element of Pentecost, the theatre is a most dangerous place. It drags him down to a lower sphere, and cannot but seriously damage the Divine life." Notwithstanding a Government subsidy the theatre, it appears, has not hitherto been a success in Basle, but some actors from Germany, presenting classic performances, have for a time, at least, made it popular. Hence the faithful protest and warning.

"ART THOU IN HEALTH." A Plain Word for Young Men. By Rev. THAIN DAVIDSON, D.D.

The importance of these Tracts makes it desirable that they should have a large circulation, and special terms are offered for quantities.

WANTED £1500 IMMEDIATELY

FOR A

COFFEE TAVERN & GOSPEL HALL

At Ventnor, Isle of Wight,

IN CONNECTION WITH

The Cow Cross Mission Home of Rest.

I HAVE an offer, direct from the Freeholder, of a very valuable piece of Land for the sum of £750. An estimate of a substantial building, 46 by 36, to cost £700; Furniture, £50; Total, £1,500. We (or any one else) can secure this most excellent site if the above amount is forthcoming immediately; if not, a grand opportunity will be lost.

The Coffee Tavern in Front

Is bound to be a success, as we shall have no rent to pay. Its position is the very best in the town, being in the centre of the High Street, near the Post Office, facing the Coach Office, in a direct line from the Railway Station to the Seashore. Back entrance opposite our "Home of Rest." A Coffee Tavern on the same principle as "Lockhart's" would, at least, be self-supporting.

The Gospel Hall at Back

Would, no doubt, be a blessing to Ventnor, and a "Conference Hall" for the Island. Our simple testimony in Open-Air during the past few months has been signally owned of God in surrounding Villages, but more particularly in Ventnor. We know of several saved souls who are longing for a meeting place that we may have fellowship together; also there are some dear saints of God who will come together over the Word, as we have seen at our Bible Readings at Pelham Villa, where also we generally have two or three of our helpers resting (a change of work would be rest to them).

Then again, we are in fellowship with the Mission Rooms at Shanklin, only four miles east, and Blackgang, six miles west, from either of which we can always get a supply of good sound Gospel Preachers.

I am so sanguine of the success of this undertaking that I will give a year's income, that is, £100 towards it, if needed, and I do feel constrained to ask who will help me to erect a "Jubilee Memorial" on the Isle of Wight.

Yours in the Lord Jesus,
WILLIAM CATLIN,
June, 1887. 17, Claremont-square, Pentonville, London, N.

P.S.—A List of Subscriptions will be published in The Christian during July. Should these not be sufficient the same will be returned to the Donors at the end of August.

Appeals.

EVANGELISTIC MISSION.—Mr. C. RUSSELL HURDITCH appeals for help to carry on tent and other work through the summer months. His exchequer is empty.

MIDLAND RAILWAY.—Miss MURRAY MACGREGOR, 17, Castle-hill Avenue, Folkestone, has a number of men waiting to be supplied with monthly packets of Gospel papers and tracts, and would be thankful for help.

ANGLO-INDIAN PROTESTANT MISSION.—Earnest appeal is made for the sum of £200, to enable this Mission to send out an agent to work amongst our own countrymen in India. Several tea growers and others have promised their support when the Mission is able to make a start. Mr. THOMAS COGSWELL, Meopham, Kent.

TEMPERANCE NOTES.

HOME.

In the county of Shetland there was not a single arrest for drunkenness last year.

Bishop Bardsley, the new Bishop of Sodor and Man, has long been an earnest temperance worker.

Canon Hopkins says that, as a rule, even the strongest barmaids break down after a few years, the constant strain is so great. In addition there are ever present moral perils.

The Carrubber's Close Mission report (Edinburgh) states that during the year 1000 have signed the pledge. Outside the city the mission has assisted in Gospel temperance work in thirty towns and villages.

In an address, last week, at the Jubilee Tent Mission, Mr. Spurgeon said those working men who earned 25s. a week and took 10s. and sometimes 15s. of it to spend in drink, are nothing more than brute beasts.

At the Edinburgh drink-traffic plebiscite enormous majorities voted in favour of refusing all new applications for licences; of reduction in the present number; of Prohibition; and of entire popular control.

The "great gala of the North," the Newcastle Temperance Festival, was held on the Town Moor of that city on Wednesday and Thursday last week, and was in every respect a great success. This was the sixth annual festival, and the popular interest seems to increase rather than otherwise.

Dr. Marcus Dods, in a paper on "Ezra," in the July Expositor, says: "More disastrous and threatening to all that we value in our nation than the vice with which Ezra contended is our national vice of drunkenness. This vice is notorious, it is shameful, it makes us the scorn of other nations, and loathsome to ourselves."

FOREIGN.

The Statesman, Bengal, says the majority of great village assemblies of India would, if allowed, prohibit the liquor-trade.

The St. Louis Globe Democrat says the whisky-dealers of the State are becoming genuinely alarmed for their trade, and have lost their "old swagger."

In Michigan a woman recently obtained 9500 dollars as damages from a liquor-seller, who had sold her husband drink before he committed a murder.

The Greek liquor-dealers expelled from Assouan by the British Commander brought actions for damages, but have been defeated and saddled with costs.

Interviewed by The Pall Mall Gazette, Rev. J. Gelson Gregson defends at length his statements on the Indian drink-trade and its encouragement by Government.

The endeavour recently made to enforce the Sunday liquor law in New York has been given up for the present, and again shameful violations of the law are ignored.

Montreal Methodist Conference recently passed some most drastic resolutions against the drink-traffic, and declared its willingness to join the other churches in seeking Prohibition.

In America, in Prohibition States, drug stores have become to some extent drink-shops, and efforts are being made to prevent permission to sell spirits for medicinal purposes being misused.

A plebiscite of the Swiss people was taken, May 15, on the federal monopoly of alcohol. By a majority of 252,791 against 127,474 it was decided that the Government should have the sole charge of the sale and fabrication of spirituous liquors. It is hoped that this may check the progress of drunkenness.

PRIESTS AND THE CONSCRIPTION.—By a recent vote in the French Parliament, students for the priesthood will be compelled to serve in the Army.

VERSAILLES.—M. Alfred André has devoted part of his estate, Ombrages, Versailles, as a convalescent home, in memory of his mother. It is to be opened this summer under the direction of some deaconesses.

THE EMPRESS OF CHINA.—A remarkable tribute has just been paid to woman's power and ability by the mandarins of China. The Empress-Dowager has administered the government so well and wisely during her regency of twenty-three years, that a body of these high officials have extended to her an invitation to occupy the throne with the Emperor for some years. He is fifteen years of age, and has already taken steps preliminary to ascending the throne. In view of woman's position in China, this act seems a very significant one. While such respect is being paid to her, the iron should be struck—infant daughters rescued alive, girls' schools established, and women trained for their homes and heaven.—Northern Christian Advocate (New York).

JOSEPHINE BUTLER.

A LIFE SKETCH.

BY W. T. STEAD.

"As one of the host of more or less insignificant fellow-workers in the New Crusade since 1871, I venture to hope that in the glimpses herewith afforded into the inner source of the inspiration which created the movement and guided it to victory, there will be something that is new even to those who themselves were foremost in the fray.—W. National Vigilance Association

FOR THE REPRESSION OF CRIMINAL VICE AND PUBLIC IMMORALITY

(With which are incorporated the Minors' Protection Committee, the Society for the Suppression of Vice, and the Belgian Traffic Committee).

Chairman of Council—THE LORD BISHOP OF SOUTHWELL.
Treasurer—FRANCIS PEEK, Esq.
Organizing Secretary—WM. ALEX. COOTE.
Bankers—Messrs. COCKS, BIDDULPH & CO., 43, Charing-cross.
Offices—No. 267, STRAND, W.C. (near the Law Courts).

THE NATIONAL VIGILANCE ASSOCIATION is an Association of men and women to enforce and improve the laws for the suppression of criminal vice and public immorality; to check the causes of vice; and to protect minors. This Association gives prompt and gratuitous legal help and advice to friendless and oppressed women and children throughout the United Kingdom, righting wrongs, and securing the punishment of evil-doers.

But while rendering legal assistance, and aiding as far as possible in Rescue work, the Association is more than ever convinced that the great hope of the future of the movement lies in general measures of prevention, in the protection of the young from temptation. Rescue saves the individual, preventive measures reach the mass.

The disciples of the Saviour cannot consecrate themselves to a nobler work for God and for Humanity, than that which aims at securing pure Homes for little children to be brought up in, protection in their play and school-work from the vicious habits of unscrupulous men, and safeguarding them from those temptations and dangers which are spread with such relentless ingenuity round the important years of youth by evil men and women.

THE NATIONAL VIGILANCE ASSOCIATION is well served by a very active volunteer Executive, superintending the work of eight Sub-Committees, namely, (1) Legal; (2) Preventive and Rescue; (3) Suppression of Foreign Traffic; (4) Registries Inquiry; (5) Parliamentary and Municipal; (6) Literature; (7) Organising; and (8) Finance.

The Legal, Office, and other expenses of an Association covering so much ground are necessarily heavy, and the Executive earnestly appeals for funds.

It thankfully acknowledges the following contributions, very recently received, through The Christian:—

"AN EXCELLENT TEXT-BOOK FOR BIBLE CLASSES."—Sabbath School Magazine.

The Number "SEVEN" in Scripture.

Compiled by SIR ARTHUR BLACKWOOD, K.C.B.

Tinted Covers, 1/-; Limp Cloth, 1/6; Cloth, Bevelled Boards, Gilt Edges, 2/6.

"Readers of history, and observers of nature alike, have often remarked on the frequency with which the number SEVEN occurs, and on the peculiar significance which, in all times, has attached to this number. Readers of the Bible, too, cannot well have failed to notice how frequently this particular number occurs in Holy Scripture; but many of them will be astonished to find the extent to which that number enters into the structure of God's Word, when they read a little book by Mr. S. A. Blackwood, C.B., entitled 'The Number SEVEN in Scripture.' This gives a complete and exhaustive record of all the passages in which the number appears, quoting about three hundred instances in the Old Testament and one hundred in the New Testament. It will be found to run through the whole of the Bible, commencing with the institution of the seventh day, or Sabbath in Eden, and concluding with the various series of 'sevens' in the Apocalypse. The variety may be gathered from the following:—

Seven Utterances of God in Eden.
Seven Sayings of Christ on the Cross.
Seven Weepings of Joseph.
Seven Excuses of Moses when commissioned to deliver Israel.
Seven Prayers of Jesus recorded by Luke.
Seven Miracles recorded by John.
Seven Resurrections mentioned in Scripture.
Seven 'Walks' described in the Epistle to the Ephesians.
Seven Beatitudes in the Revelation.

"As the Author observes, 'We must surely acknowledge that a Divine design has caused this particular number to be so frequently employed, and to enter into the composition of the books of the Bible—books written by so many hands, and at such various periods. Whatever other object the Divine Author of the Bible may have had in view in making such frequent use of the number, it seems to be generally believed, for one thing at least, that it was intended to convey the idea of completeness or perfection. Its first employment on the occasion of the completed work of creation is strongly in favour of this presumption."—The Quiver.

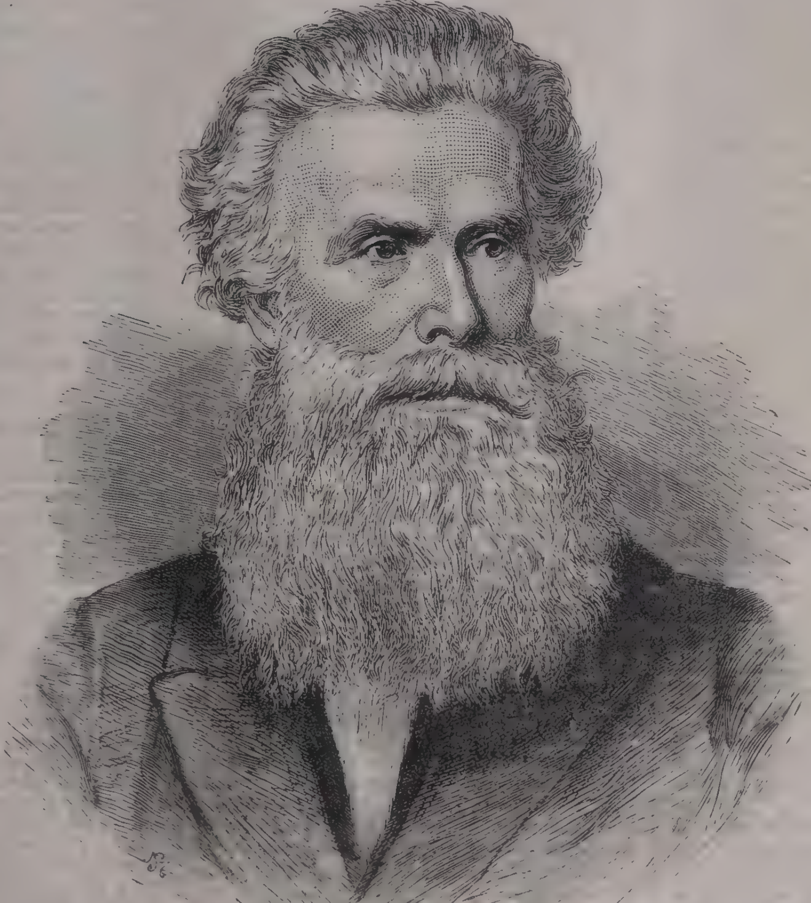
THE LATE ALEXANDER DUFF, D.D.

SPEAKING of the missionary heroes who have added a special glory to the history of the Victorian era, Mr. Gladstone once said :—" Dr. Duff was one who not only stood in the first rank for intelligence, energy, devotion, and advancement in the inward and spiritual life, among those distinguished and admirable personages, but who likewise laboured so intensely in the cause, that he shortened the career which Providence would in all likelihood have otherwise committed to him ; and he has reaped his reward in the world beyond the grave at an earlier date than those whose earthly career is lengthened into a long old age. He was one of the noble army of the confessors of Christ." This is a generous and just tribute from an eminent statesman to an eminent missionary. Dr. Duff's services to the cause of missions can scarcely be exaggerated. In addition to varied and successful labours in the foreign field, he did splendid work by his eloquent writings and spirit-stirring addresses. His influence affected all the evangelical churches of the world ; and to him is due, in no small measure, the revived interest in, and cheerful obedience to, the command of the risen Lord, "Go ye into all the world, and preach the Gospel to every creature."



ALEXANDER DUFF was born in 1806, of poor but godly parents. From the cradle he was trained in the way he should go. His father's teaching told in producing a thoughtfulness and a habit of introspection which marked him out from other boys. At school and college he was very diligent, neglecting no opportunity of gaining knowledge, and winning golden opinions from his professors and fellow-students. What proved to be the crisis of his career came with the appointment of Dr. Chalmers to the chair of Moral Philosophy in his university. Dr. Chalmers had the rare faculty of inspiring with enthusiasm those who sat at his feet ; he filled them with an earnest desire to seek truth for its own sake, and a passion for high thinking and pure living. Burning with evangelistic zeal himself, he sought to imbue his students with the same zeal. Some of them were set apart for teaching in Sabbath-schools ; others were led to devote their spare time to visiting poor families and conducting kitchen-meetings. Through him a Missionary Association was formed, which helped to kindle a fire not yet extinguished, and which, we believe, will never be extinguished until heathendom is won for Christ. In this Association, and by means of the impulse given by personal contact with Dr. Chalmers, Duff learned lessons to which he was a stranger before. The duty of carrying the light of the Gospel to those who dwelt in the dark places of the earth laid hold of him, and forced him to leave home and friends for India. This was in 1829.

On the voyage out he had to face severe trials. The ship struck on a reef of rocks some forty miles from the Cape of Good Hope, and the safety of the passengers was for a time in doubt. Ultimately they were landed on a small island, whence they were conveyed to the Cape. One incident connected with this disaster made a deep impression on the young missionary's mind. Of several articles belonging to the ill-fated ship, which were washed ashore, the only thing fit for use was a Bible presented to him by his College friends. Its preservation was taken by him as a sign that the proclamation of the truths contained in the Bible, was the work to which he should henceforth consecrate his strength and talents.

Calcutta was his destination. He reached it, after passing through the horrors of another shipwreck and the dangers of a hurricane. With characteristic promptitude, he set himself at once to the difficult task of influencing the natives for good. A way to this end he found in the general desire for English education. He organised an Institution, which started with only five students. But great issues often flow from small beginnings. So it was in this case : the Institution flourished, and by and by it became a power in intellectual circles. In his anxiety to reach the upper and more educated classes of the Indian capital, Mr. Duff projected a course of lectures, in which Natural Theology and Christian Evidences were fully discussed, and in which the Gospel was clearly set forth. Not the least gratifying of the results of these lectures was the conversion and baptism of three or four young men of social standing and more than average mental power, who did much to strengthen and deepen the effect of Mr. Duff's teaching.

As the months rolled on the ice of prejudice and indifference began to melt. The natives were drawn towards the man whose one desire, it was evident, was to do them good. Just when their hearts were opening to the truth, the indefatigable worker was struck down by a dangerous disease. His constitution had been weakened by his ceaseless energy. He was ordered home, and the discharge of his duties fell to the colleagues who had by this time gathered round about him.

A calamity often proves a blessing in disguise. The friends of missions mourned Mr. Duff's departure from India as a crushing blow to the cause, but God overruled it to be the means of awakening a widespread missionary enthusiasm in the Church of Scotland. As soon as his health was in some measure restored, Mr. Duff was sent out on a tour throughout the country to plead for heathendom. What he accomplished in that tour we have not space to tell. One whose knowledge of missions entitles his opinion to respect has written, "I declare that Dr. Duff's advocacy of the cause of missions"—referring to the particular advocacy now under consideration—"was more powerful than any advocacy of the same cause that has ever been conducted in any church since the Reformation." The work of the tour began in a speech before the General Assembly of 1835, which thrilled its hearers through and through. The magnetic eloquence of the speaker fascinated his hearers, and his intense earnestness carried conviction to them. They felt that he was right, and they took to their pulpits some of the fire which entered their souls with his memorable appeal. The closing words of that appeal may be quoted as a specimen of its power and of its spirit:—

> Let us enter into a "Solemn League and Covenant" before our God in behalf of that benighted land, that we will not rest till the voices of praise and thanksgiving arise in daily orisons from its coral strands, roll over its fertile plains, resound from its smiling valleys, and re-echo from its everlasting hills. Thus shall it be proved that the Church of Scotland, though poor, can make many rich, being herself replenished from the fulness of the Godhead; that the Church of Scotland, though powerless as regards carnal designs and worldly policies, has yet the Divine power of bringing many sons to glory, of calling a spiritual progeny from afar, numerous as the drops of dew in the morning, and resplendent with the shining of the Sun of Righteousness — a noble company of ransomed multitudes that shall hail you in the realms of day, and crown you with the spoils of victory, and sit on thrones, and live, and reign with you amid the splendours of an unclouded universe. May God hasten the day, and put it into the heart of everyone present to engage in the glorious work of realising it!

In 1840 Dr. Duff began what may be called his second Indian campaign He flung himself eagerly into the work. In teaching, co-operating with other missionaries, writing for the press, and in direct missionary effort, he laboured with a zeal which was both a wonder and an inspiration to those who witnessed it. The Divine blessing visibly rested on his activity; the number of converts increased, and the Institution grew from five to 600 pupils. The Disruption of 1843 gave an impetus to the Mission, although the buildings in which it was formerly carried on had to be abandoned. In 1845 a revival broke out. It lasted for weeks, and many souls were saved. The tide of spiritual success rose so high that Hindoo envy and hatred were provoked. Strenuous efforts were made to cripple the Institution, and to win the converts back to their old faith. Plots were on foot to assassinate Dr. Duff—at least, so it was said. A time of trial, dark and grievous, followed, but the unflinching faith and courage of the missionaries carried them through. In their trouble they realised God's presence, and his presence carried fresh strength into their fainting hearts.

The great importance Dr. Duff attached to mission work was clearly shown in 1848, when he declined to fill the place left vacant by the death of Dr. Chalmers. He was unanimously chosen by the Church at home, but he thought it his duty to remain where he was. His decision must have been influenced by the communications which poured in from all kinds of people in India, begging him not to leave the land in which he was doing so much good. The Assembly of 1849 acquiesced in his decision, but asked him to return to Scotland for a time that he might again plead the cause of missions at home. To this he agreed, for he saw how very much depended on keeping alive the missionary sentiment in the Church. He appeared once more on the floor of the Assembly, and began a new crusade with a speech of moving eloquence and heart-stirring earnestness. Money was needed for foreign missions, and he set himself with all his might to the getting of it. Wherever he went, he awakened great enthusiasm. Space would fail us were we to attempt to describe how congregations quite callous to the fate of heathendom were quickened by his burning words to pray for, and give of their means to carry the Gospel to, those who never had the privilege of listening to the story of redeeming love.

He could organise as well as speak. The admirable system according to which contributions to the Foreign Mission funds of the Free Church are collected, owes much to his sagacity. In view of the great good done by the increased operations of that church in the mission field, we feel that if Dr. Duff had done nothing else than plan this scheme, he would have conferred a lasting benefit on the cause he had at heart. But he did more; through his appeals young men were led to dedicate themselves to missionary service, and the standard of Christian consecration was raised.

In 1851 Dr. Duff was elected Moderator of the General Assembly of his church, the highest ecclesiastical distinction he could attain. The honour was at once a fitting recognition of his personal merits and of the importance of mission work. In 1854 Dr. Duff went to America, where he was received with open arms. The labours he undertook were herculean, but his indefatigable energy carried him through them. In the New World as well as in the Old, he was a man of one idea. "Rescue the perishing" was his motto and his aim. That his missionary addresses were not in vain, is amply borne out by the after history of American missions.

In 1856 Dr. Duff returned to India. The welcome he met with was overwhelming in its heartiness. His third campaign opened brightly, but it was clouded in the following year by the terrible Mutiny. That event, gloomy as it looked at the time, helped in the end to further the cause of Christ. Order was evolved out of chaos, and a new start was taken in India's history. It was fortunate that Dr. Duff was on the spot at this critical period. He enjoyed the confidence of both Eurpeans and natives, and his advice was generally acted on. So it came about that his last years in India were devoted to reforms of a special nature. Ruled himself by the teaching of Christ, he sought to infuse into every question he handled, the spirit of his Master.

In 1863 the veteran missionary bade a final farewell to the land he loved and had served so well. He was called to the Convenership of the Foreign Mission Committee of the church at home, and he could not refuse the call. We cannot linger on the work he did in this capacity, nor can we speak of the power he wielded as Professor of Evangelistic Theology in the Free Church College of Edinburgh. For fifteen years after his return from India he toiled with all his old earnestness and enthusiasm on behalf of the millions of heathendom. On February 12, 1878, he passed from the earthly to the heavenly service, leaving behind a record and an example for which all Christian workers are grateful.

This is but a mere outline of a great and honoured life. We make no attempt to estimate the work done by Alexander Duff. The Day alone can declare the results of his labours. Most men, when dead, require monuments to keep their memory alive; but Alexander Duff is not of the number. The missionary enthusiasm of Scotland, and the missionary progress of India, unite in building for him a monument far more enduring than any that could be erected in brass or stone.

OUR COUNTRYMEN IN INDIA.

Dear Sir,—Tidings come from India fitted to gladden, to sadden, and to move home Christians to more earnest efforts. We have tidings of blessings from various parts of India. Evangelists are welcomed by those who have been left to wander in darkness; hearts are touched, souls are saved, and solitary believers are refreshed. At the hill station of Mussoorie Rev. P. R. Mackay has succeeded Rev. J. Gelson Gregson as minister this summer of the Union Church. In the cold season he will do the work of an evangelist in the plains. He has had a hearty welcome at Mussoorie. In May a series of meetings was held in the Union Church, in which Episcopalians, Presbyterians, Baptists, and Methodists met in harmony.

Almost countless facts might be given to move compassion, and to animate hope. A Christian mother in London writes:—"I have a son labouring in tea-planting in a dark corner where not a ray of Gospel light is shining." Rev. I. F. Row, who has made a tour of five or six months in Assam, wrote in May last of much spiritual destitution in one large district in that great province. Among many admirable plans of missionary action no one is more important than an effort to multiply the number of Christ's witnesses among the Anglo-Indian dispersion.

JUBILEE DECORATIONS.—A correspondent writes:—Now the Jubilee is over, those of your readers who have flags and decorations of no further use to them, might send them to mission halls, where their gay appearance would brighten the walls, and make them attractive to the poor, who love colour so much.

THE CHURCH'S OPPORTUNITY.*

By Rev. A. J. GORDON, D.D.

I am persuaded that the Christian Church has reached her supreme occasion in these closing years of the Christian dispensation, as the Jewish Church reached hers in the last days of the Jewish dispensation. Our times bear the aspect of a crisis of Providence—a kind of summary of the centuries, wherein the old leases of opportunity are running out, and new ones are waiting to be issued to such as may have the faith and courage to take them. Literally are we the people described by Paul as "those upon whom the ends of the ages are come." We are living at the terminal point of the old and at the germinal point of the new, and happy shall we be, indeed, if we know the time of our visitation....

For quick results and large returns there was never such an age before. "Man's extremity is God's opportunity," we are wont to say. What if I turn it about and reverently say that "God's extremity is man's opportunity"? It is such now. He is pushed for time; He is straitened for help. He will hire at the eleventh hour if labourers have not come at the first. He will take reformed drunkards and converted gamblers; salvation armies and travelling gospelers—if only his work can be done before the night cometh in which no man can work. It is God's extremity, and, therefore, man's opportunity. Obligation presses a pound to the square inch where once it pressed an ounce. The Lord is in a hurry, and it becomes us, as never before, to be in haste.

And as with the field, so with the labourers. Think of it, that in this year of grace, 1887, there are more than 2000 young men in our [American] colleges and seminaries who stand pledged for missionary service, home and foreign. There has been no such uprising in this century, nor in any century since the first. Extraordinary prayer for more men began two or three years since, and the volume of intercession has been deepening and widening in our colleges; and now the labourers are presenting themselves. But let us understand that this is God's challenge to us, not our challenge to God. It is not for us to present these men to the Lord, and say, "Behold, Lord, here are the men, now provide the money to send them." Just the contrary. We have been praying, and the Lord has sent forth labourers 2000 strong, and now He calls on us to open our purses and provide money to dispatch them to their fields. We cannot make missionaries; this is the work of the Holy Spirit. But we can make money. Oh, Church of Christ, put your pay-roll against God's muster-roll; hand out the wages as the Lord of the harvest sends forth the workmen, and so match your ability to God's occasion, and thus make a full-orbed opportunity. We have the money—enough, and a hundred times more than enough, if it were laid upon the altar. And here, undoubtedly, is where the heaviest strain of responsibility comes at present upon the purse-strings. Haven't we for a century been hearing that challenge of Andrew Fuller, "There is a gold mine in India; who will explore it, venture to explore it?"

Look at our gold mine in India—twenty-five thousand Telegus dug from the heart of heathenism whose faces now shine, precious coins fresh from the mint of the Holy Spirit. Look at our gold mine in America. One hundred and sixty thousand disciples added to our membership in the last year, a noble portion of the result of Home Missionary effort. Do you hear of any such returns as these elsewhere? And above all, that which crowns the present as the opportunity of opportunities is the signal manifestation of the Holy Spirit in our world. "And it shall come to pass in the last days that I will pour out my Spirit upon all flesh," saith the Lord. We are living under the fulfilment of this promise. The calling out of so many young men for missionary service is to my mind the most extraordinary proof of this. God never makes half a providence any more than man makes half a pair of shears. When God says to Philip, "Go near and join thyself to this chariot," it is because He has opened the heart of the rider in that chariot to receive the word of life. When God says to 2000 young men in our colleges and seminaries, "go and preach the gospel in the regions beyond," it is, I believe, because He is about to put in the hearts of these unprivileged ones a great hunger after salvation.

Whence is our peril? One danger is that we may fail through the very abundance of our resources; that excess may be thwarted by success—excess of opportunity by excess of ability. Do you not know that all history is written over with verifications of our Lord's saying to his apostle, "My strength is made perfect in weakness?" Not that there is any virtue in weakness of itself, only that it lets us down upon God and into the sway and sweep of his omnipotence. "All things are possible to him that believeth," says Jesus. But this is true only because of that other fact that "all things are possible with God," and that faith couples on our weakness to his almightiness. But the danger is that as God's favour towards us increases, our faith toward God may decrease; like the pupil of the eye which contracts more and more the more light is poured upon it. This is undoubtedly the tendency of things, such is the waywardness of human nature. So the danger is that our weakness may be made perfect through our strength.

According to recent estimates, it is computed that there are eight billions of dollars hoarded up in the hands of American Christians, a sum so great that it staggers our mathematics to compute it. Now, making a fair provision for sickness and old age, it is unquestionable that a vast proportion of this sum would still come under the description of our Lord's parable of money "kept laid up in a napkin." That napkin may be cut according to the strictest pattern of commercial integrity; it may be hemmed with the most rigid rules of political economy; nevertheless, I fear that if our Lord were suddenly to return from that far country whence He has gone, He would shake this napkin clear of its contents and exclaim, "Thou wicked and slothful servant, thou oughtest to put my money to the exchangers, that at my return I might have had my own with usury"—the usury of saved souls, the usury of evangelised nations, the usury of eternal praise returning to Him who, "though He was rich, yet for our sakes became poor, that we through his poverty might be rich."

And the most solemn consideration is that our Lord will not take one cent of this hoarded wealth by compulsion or seizure. He who saves no man without his consent, taxes no man without his consent. For our freedom of will is the most sacred thing in the universe—the very crown jewel of manhood. And God will never in any circumstance violate it. Think what an awful strain this fact puts upon your free will. The grip of avarice upon your purse-strings can strangle our missionary enterprises. But that is not all. As by a slight leverage of his bar, the workman can hold a hundred tons' weight from moving down an incline, so by the purchase of your unsanctified will you may thwart and hold back from a lost world the redemption of God, "who will have all men to be saved." Your "I will not," may defy God's "I will," who is "not willing that any should perish."

Do you accuse me of preaching to rich laymen in saying this, and so making invidious distinctions? I am speaking quite as much to ministers. In the prosperity which has come to us in these days, we have scores of pastors who are enjoying sumptuous salaries. Little to be envied is the minister who, with all his other responsibilities, has that of inherited wealth or a large salary. For in the missionary exchange of our times a dollar has come to have a well-nigh fixed equivalent in salvation; so that we may almost say that so many pounds sterling will yield so many souls saved. With this thought in mind, how can the minister who is set to "watch for souls as they that must give account" take the responsibility of carrying hoarded wealth? How, if he has a sanctified conscience, will he challenge every coin which comes into his hands, saying, "'Whose image and superscription is this?' God has ordained money as one of the means for reconforming lost souls to the image of his Son. Therefore, let who will render unto Cæsar the things that are Cæsar's; I will render unto Christ the things that are Christ's."

And having said this much to ministers, let me the more boldly speak unto you laymen who are rich in this world's goods. Oh, that you could apprehend the possibilities that are within your hands, and the narrow space of time in which you must realise those possibilities. If the early Christians did such great things with no money, what might you not do with your millions, if every ounce of gold were sanctified to the degree of 24 carats fine for God!

Ask social scientists concerning the perils which threaten our [American] Republic, and among these they will mention the out-populating power of foreign races. They tell us that the negro and the Celt are multiplying so rapidly that there is danger that our native stock may be swallowed up by them. And as the counterpart to this, they admonish us that the Americans, as they grow rich and aristocratic, evade the responsibilities of child-bearing, and so put the Saxon and Puritan stock to a constant disadvantage in the competition of races. I mention this only that I may dwell upon the analogous spiritual fact:—"As soon as Zion travailed, she brought forth children." It is the law of God that renewed souls should come forth, through the birth-pangs of prayer and faith in the Church of Christ. But the tendency is for the Church, as soon as it becomes wealthy and aristocratic, to shirk the responsibilities of child-bearing, preferring the luxuries of worship, the music and oratory and architecture of an elegant sanctuary, to the bringing forth and nursing of children. Fashionable religion frowns on the prayer-meeting exhortations as sanctified baby talk, and on simple Gospel preaching as weak pulpit milk, and on lifting the hand and rising for prayers as nursery exercises which cultivated Christians do not care to engage in. But the Church that knows its calling as the mother and nurse of souls will use all these things, because God has enjoined "milk for babes" and the rudiments of faith for children. All honour to the Church that accepts the function of child-bearing and nursing! but no honour for that Church which prefers barrenness to maternity, in order that she may be at ease in Zion. May God save us from this temptation, which culture and social position are constantly forcing upon us!

* From the Annual Sermon before the American Baptist Home Mission Society, Minneapolis.

We have a magnificent opportunity on this continent, and we have magnificent resources, if only we will use them. Let us have done with glorying in our members, and give attention to our opportunities. It is not more men, but more man, that the Church of God needs for the accomplishment of his work. John Wesley, looking over the needs of a lost world, made the startling exclamation: "Give me a hundred men who fear nothing but God, hate nothing but sin, and are determined to know nothing among men but Jesus and Him crucified, and I will set the world on fire with them." Therefore, I exhort that we all and altogether do these three things:

Contemplate. Lift up your eyes round about and behold, what fields are white unto the harvest, what wide and effectual doors are waiting to be entered.

Consecrate. Boast no more of numbers or resources. For "it is not by might nor by power, but by my Spirit, saith the Lord." The meekest man among us with the Holy Ghost resting upon him is stronger than the strongest. Therefore, through all our borders let us fall on our faces and wait upon God anew for the enduement of the Spirit.

Concentrate. Too long have we been using our wonderful prosperity as a magnifying glass for enlarging our own importance, and so ministering to our self-complacency. Let us use it henceforth as a burning glass for concentrating our religious influence, and bringing it to bear upon a perishing world, kindling the love of God where now there is only the love of sin and self; so shall we do our part towards setting the world on fire for Christ. —National Baptist.

A PLEA FOR SIAM.

The devoted "round the world missionary" of the American Women Christian Temperance Union, Mrs. Leavitt, has paid a visit to Siam, and interviewed the king. In a letter to The Union Signal, she says:—

I want to call for missionaries and money for Siam. Eight millions of people to be reached, and not one-hundredth of an adequate force in the field: England raising one and a half million pounds for missionary purposes, and we less; England spending one hundred and twenty-four million pounds for drink, and we more. Oh, for men, women, money, and especially women! I say the last advisedly, after a careful study of the matter. The women I want for the field are successful, "cannot be spared," teachers and physicians, from twenty-five to thirty-five years old, full of the spirit of Christ. And the money should come from the young men who are now spending it on cigars and drink. And when these women come they will talk to women, to men, to mixed audiences, wherever God opens the way for them. But oh, dear, reverend missionary boards, don't send out any of the wine-bibbing, cigar-puffing fraternity. There is bad example enough of every sort, in all these lands, from the ungodly men from Christian lands, who are in government places, and engaged in business. Let Christian missionaries be so free from all these things that no poor soul or body can be injured by following their example.

ELIJAH THE PROPHET.—9.

By Rev. F. B. MEYER, B.A., Leicester.

RAIN AT LAST!

1 Kings xviii.

We can in a very inadequate degree realise the horrors of an Eastern drought. And it would have been difficult, in the parched land on which Elijah gazed from Carmel, to have recognised that garden of the Lord of which Moses said: "The Lord thy God giveth thee a good land, a land full of brooks of water, of rivers and depths, which spring out of valleys and hills; a land wherein thou shalt eat bread without scarceness, and in which thou shalt not lack anything." Yet so it was. The rivulets and watercourses were dry; dry as Cherith. The ploughed lands were brown, chapt, and cracked. The hinds calving in the pasture-lands forsook their young, because there was no grass. And on the hill-tops, where cooler air might be found, the wild asses stood with dilated nostrils, panting for the rain that did not come. All this was the result of sin. The iniquities of Israel had separated between them and their God, and their sins had hid his face from them. Elijah knew this right well, and this prompted him to act the part of executioner to the priests of Baal, who had been the ringleaders in the national apostasy, but whose bodies now lay in ghastly death on the banks of the Kishon, or were being hurried out to sea.

Ahab must have stood by Elijah in the Kishon gorge, and been an unwilling spectator of that fearful deed of vengeance, not daring to resist the outburst of popular indignation, or to attempt to shield the men whom he had himself encouraged and introduced. When the last priest had bitten the dust, Elijah turned to the king, and said, "Get thee up, eat and drink; for there is a sound of abundance of rain." It was as if he said, "Get thee up to where thy tents are pitched on yon broad upland sweep; the feast is spread in thy gilded pavilion; thy lackeys await thee; feast thee on thy dainties; but be quick, for now that the land is rid of these traitor priests, and God is once more enthroned in his rightful place, the showers of rain cannot be longer delayed. Can you not hear the sough of the Western breeze, which shall soon become a rain-bearing hurricane? Be quick! Or the rain may interrupt thy carouse."

What a contrast between these two men! "Ahab went up to eat and drink. And Elijah went up to the top of Carmel; and he cast himself down upon the earth, and put his face between his knees." It is no more than we might have expected of the king. When his people were suffering the extremities of drought, he cared only to find grass enough to save his stud; and now, though his faithful priests had died by hundreds, he thought only of the banquet that awaited him in his pavilion. Cruel, cowardly, mean, and sensual are the least epithets we can apply to this worthless man, clad, though he was, with the royal robes of Israel. I think I can see them ascending those heights together: no sympathy; no common joy; no reciprocated thanksgiving. The King turns straight off to his tents; whilst the servant of God climbs steadily up to the highest part of the mountain, and finds an oratory at the base of a yet higher spur, or promonitory, from which a marvellous view could be obtained of the broad expanse of the Mediterranean, which slept under the growing stillness of the coming night.

Such contrasts still reveal themselves. Crises reveal the secrets of men's hearts, and show of what stuff they are made. The children of this world will spend their days in feasting, and their nights in revelry, though a world is rushing down to ruin. If only they can eat and drink, they are regardless of the needs of the perishing, and the judgments of God. Such feasted with Belshazzar when the foe was at the gates of Babylon; and filled with their frivolities the royal apartments of Whitehall when William of Orange was landing at Tor Bay. And woe to the land when such men rule! The sequence between the sensual luxury of the rulers and the decadence of the nation was well pointed out by Isaiah when he said:—"Woe unto them that rise up early in the morning, that they may follow strong drink; that tarry late into the night, until wine inflame them! And the harp and the lute, the tabret and the pipe, and wine are in their feasts: but they regard not the work of the Lord, neither have they considered the operation of his hands. Therefore my people are gone into captivity" (Isa. v. 11—13). May our beloved country be preserved from having such leaders as these! And may our youth be found, not garlanded and scented for the Ahab feasts, but with Elijah on the bleak uplands, where there may be no dainty viands, but where the air is fresh, and life is free, and the spirit is braced to noble deeds.

THERE ARE CERTAIN CHARACTERISTICS IN ELIJAH'S PRAYER WHICH WE MUST NOTICE AS WE PASS, BECAUSE THEY SHOULD FORM PART OF ALL TRUE PRAYER.

(1) It was based on the promise of God.—When Elijah was summoned from Zarephath to resume his public work, his marching orders were capped by the specific promise of rain, "Go, show thyself unto Ahab; and I will send rain on the earth." To natural reason this might have seemed to render prayer unnecessary. Would not God fulfil his promise, and send the rain, altogether irrespectively of further prayer? But Elijah's spiritual instincts argued otherwise, and more truly. Though he had never heard the words, yet he anticipated the thought of a later prophet, who, after enunciating all that God was prepared to do for his people, uttered these significant words: "Thus saith the Lord God, I will yet for this be inquired of by the house of Israel, to do it for them."

God's promises are given, not to restrain, but to incite to prayer. They show the direction in which we may ask, and the extent to which we may expect an answer. They are the mould into which we may pour our fervid spirits without fear. They are the signed cheque, made payable to order, which we must endorse and present for payment. Though the Bible be crowded with golden promises, from board to board, yet will they be inoperative, until we turn them into prayer. It is not our province to argue the reasonableness of this; it is enough to accentuate and enforce it. Why should it not be sufficient to silence all questions by saying, that we have here reached one of the primal laws of the spiritual world, as simple, as certain, as universal, as any that obtain in the world of nature. Promises of abundant harvest smile to the husbandman from earth and sky, but he knows that they will not be realised unless he puts into operation the laws and processes of agriculture; and as he does so, it is not necessary for his success that he should understand the why and wherefore; it is enough for him to do his little part, and he finds that every promise is fulfilled in the produce shed at his feet from Nature's golden horn.

When, therefore, we are asked why men should pray, and how prayer avails, we are not careful to answer more than this: "Prayer is the instinct of the religious life; it is one of the first principles of the spiritual world. It is clearly taught in the Word of God to be prevalent with the Almighty. It has been practised by the noblest and saintliest of men, who have testified to its certain efficacy. Our Lord Jesus not only practised it, but proclaimed its value in words, which have been plunged a myriad times into the crucible of experience, and are as true to-day as ever. Ask, and it shall be given you; seek, and ye shall find; knock, and it shall be opened unto you. We are content, therefore, to pray, though we are as ignorant of the philosophy of the modus operandi of prayer, as we are of any natural law. We find it no dreamy reverie or sweet sentimentality, but a practical living force. Whenever we stand by the altar of incense we become aware of the angel of the Lord standing hard by, and saying, "Fear not, O man greatly beloved, thy prayer is heard."

When your child was a toddling, lisping babe asked many things wholly incompatible with our nature, and its own welfare; but as the years ave passed, increasing experience has moulded s requests into shapes suggested by yourself. o as we know more of God, through his romises, we are stayed from asking what He annot give, and are led to set our hearts on hings which lie on his open palm waiting to be ken by the hand of an appropriating faith. his is why all prayer, like Elijah's, should be ased on promise. We stand on a foundation of damant, and have an irresistible purchase with od, when we can put our finger on his own romise and say, Do as Thou hast said.

(2) It was definite.—This is where so many rayers fail. They are shot like arrows into the r. They are like letters, which require no nswer, because they ask for nothing. They are ke the firing by artillery in a mimic fight, when nly gunpowder is employed. This is why they re so wanting in power and interest. We do ot pray with any expectation of attaining efinite and practical results. We wander out ke Isaac to meditate in the fields at eventide, ut we fail to ascend Carmel, with the compressed p and the resolute step of Elijah; as determined, we may, to win by prayer the fulfilment of ome blessed promise, as he was to bring the nged-for rain. Let us amend in this matter. et us keep a list of petitions, which we shall ead before God. Let us direct our prayer, as avid did, and look out for the answer, and we hall find ourselves obtaining new and unwonted essings. Be definite.

(3) It was earnest.—"Elijah prayed earnestly." his is the testimony of the Holy Spirit, through e Apostle James. It was the effectual, fervent rayer of a righteous man, which availeth much. he prayers of Scripture all glow with the white eat of intensity. Remember how Jacob wrestled, nd David panted and poured out his soul; the nportunity of the blind beggar, and the perstency of the distracted mother; the strong ying and tears of our Lord. In each case the hole being seemed gathered up, as a stone into catapult, and hurled forth in vehement eneaty. Prayer is only answered for the glory of hrist; but it is not answered unless it be accomanied with such earnestness as will prove that e blessing sought is really needed.

Ah! what earnestness pants and throbs on ery side. No listless attention! No flagging terest! No drowsy eye! Oh, for such violence, uided by holiness, to take the kingdom of eaven by force! Such earnestness is, of course, be dreaded when we seek some lower boon r ourselves. But when, like Elijah, we seek e fulfilment of the Divine promise, not for urselves, but for the glory of God, then it is npossible to be too much in earnest, or too full the energy of prayer.

(4) It was humble.—"He cast himself down on e ground, and put his face between his knees." Ve scarcely recognise him, he seems so to have st his identity. A few hours before, he stood ect as an oak of Bashan, now he is bowed as a lrush. Then as God's ambassador he pleaded ith man, now as man's intercessor he pleads ith God. Is it not always so, that the men ho stand straightest in the presence of sin, w lowest in the presence of God? And is it ot also true, that those who live nearest God e most reverent? True, thou art a child, but ou art also a subject. True, thou art a reeemed man, but thou canst never forget thine riginal name, sinner. True, thou mayest come ith boldness, but remember the majesty, might, d power of God, and take thy shoes from off y feet. The angels of his presence fly with iled faces to do his bidding, as they cry, Holy, oly, Holy. The most tender love, which casts t the fear that hath torment, begets a fear at is as delicate and sensitive as that of John; ho, though he lay his head on Jesus' breast, rupled too hastily to intrude upon the grave here He had slept. Our only plea with God is e merit and blood of our great High Priest. becomes us to be humble.

(5) It was full of expectant faith.—"Whatever things ye desire, when ye pray, believe at ye receive them, and ye shall have em." Faith is the indispensable condition all true prayer. It is the gift of the Holy Ghost. It thrives by exercise. It grows strong by feeding on the promises: the Word of God is its natural food. It beat strongly in Elijah's heart. He knew that God would keep his word, and so he sent the lad—probably the widow's son—up to the highest point of Carmel, and bade him look towards the sea, because he was sure that ere long his prayer would be answered, and God's promise would be kept. We have often prayed and failed to look out for the blessings we have sought. The stately ships of heaven have come up to the quays, laden with the very blessings we asked, but as we have not been there to welcome and unload them, they have put out again to sea. The messenger pigeons have come back again to their cotes, with the tiny messages concealed beneath their wings, but we have not been there to search for them and take them.

Sometimes we have to exercise faith on the simple warrant of God's Word. At other times, God seems to give us special faith for things which are not directly promised. The presence or absence of faith is a great test in prayer. Where it is present, we are so sure of the answer as to turn petition into thanksgiving. But where it is persistently absent, and where continued prayer fails to light up the spirit with the conviction of coming answer, then it would seem as if the Urim and Thummim stone is darkening with one of God's loving Noes; and He says, "Ask Me no more concerning this matter."

There is a faith which God cannot refuse; to which all things are possible; which laughs at impossibility; which can move mountains and plant them in the sea. May such faith be ours, but it can be ours only by careful and eager nurture. Such faith was Elijah's.

(6) It was very persevering.—He said to his servant, "Go up now, look toward the sea." And he went up, and looked, and said, "There is nothing." How often have we sent the lad of eager desire to scan the horizon; and how often he has returned with the answer, There is nothing. There is no tear of penitence in those hard eyes. There is no symptom of amendment in that wild life. There is no sign of deliverance in these sore perplexities. There is nothing. And because there is nothing when we have just begun to pray, we leave off praying. We leave the mountain brow. We do not know that God's answer is even then upon the way.

Not so Elijah. "And he said, Go again seven times." There is a truer rendering of this: "Then said he seven times, Go again." It is not that the prophet bade him run to and fro seven times without interrupting himself in prayer; but it would appear that, again and again, the lad came back to his master with the same message, "There is nothing," and, after an interval, he was bidden to go again.

He came back the first time, saying, "There is nothing, no sign of rain, no cloud upon the clear sky," and Elijah said, "Go again." And that was repeated seven times. It was no small test of the prophet's endurance, but he was not tried more than he could endure, and with the ordeal there came sufficient grace, so that he was able to bear it.

Not unfrequently our Father grants our prayer, and labels the answer for us; but He keeps it back, that we may be led on to a point of intensity, which shall bless our spirits for ever, and from which we shall never recede. "But none of them that wait on Him shall be ashamed." Then when we have outdone ourselves, He lovingly turns to us, and says, "Oh woman, great is thy faith: be it unto thee even as thou wilt." He waits, that He may be gracious unto us.

(7) And the prayer was abundantly answered.—For weeks and months before, the sun had been gathering up from lake and river, from sea and ocean, the drops of mist, drawing them as clouds in coronets of glory around himself; and now the gale was bearing them rapidly towards the thirsty land of Israel. "Before they call I will answer, and whilst they are yet speaking I will hear." The answer to your prayers may be nearer than you think. It may already have started by the down-line. On the wings of every moment it is hastening towards you. God shall answer you, and that right early.

Presently the lad, from his tower of observation, beheld on the horizon a tiny cloud, no bigger than a man's hand, scudding across the sky. No more was needed to convince an Oriental that rain was near. It was, and is, the certain precursor of a sudden hurricane of wind and rain. The lad was sent with an urgent message to Ahab, to descend from Carmel to his chariot in the plain beneath, lest Kishon, swollen by the rains, should stop him in his homeward career. The lad had barely time to reach the royal pavilion ere the heavens were black with clouds and wind, and there was a great rain.

The monarch started amid the pelting storm, but fleeter than his swift steeds were the feet of the prophet, energised by the hand of God. He snatched up his streaming mantle, and twisted it around his loins; and amid the fury of the elements, with which the night closed in, he outstript the chariot, and ran like a common courier before it, to the entrance of Jezreel, some eighteen miles distant. He did this to convince the King that in his zeal against idolatry, he was actuated by no personal disrespect to himself, and prompted only by jealousy for God.

Thus by his faith and prayer this single man brought back the rain to Israel. "More things are wrought by prayer than this world wots of." Why should not we learn and practise his secret? It is certainly within the reach of us all. Then we too might bring from heaven spiritual blessings, which should make the parched places of the Church and the world rejoice and blossom as the rose.

BRETON EVANGELICAL MISSION.

Pasteur Lecoat, after a most successful tour in England, has returned to the chief station at Tremel in time for the "pardon" season, or series of town and village semi-religious fêtes, which continue from June to September, during which time very many precious opportunities of reaching the masses in that priest-ridden country are afforded. On his return journey he and Madame Lecoat visited the Channel Islands, where, beside interesting the old friends of the Mission, and gaining new ones, they were enabled to gather some large companies of Breton labourers, who had not for a long while heard the Gospel in their native tongue, and many heard it then for the first time. So great was the interest excited among the hearers that, as an experiment, Pasteur Lecoat yielded to their pressing entreaties, and promised to send them a colporteur-evangelist for a month, and to continue his labours among them if the means could be procured to enable him to do so.

The summer work of wider distribution of the Holy Scriptures in Breton and in French, as well as general colportage and evangelistic visitation of the people at their homes, will now be vigorously prosecuted. Any English Christian friends who may be desirous of utilising their summer holiday in seeing for themselves the work done by this Mission in the beautiful, but almost unknown, country among tourists. will be heartily welcomed at the Chief Station Tremel, par Plestin, Côtes-du-Nord. The accommodation is of the farmhouse character, the climate good, and much of real mission work to interest Christians can be seen. The route is viâ Southampton and St. Malo, and the Channel Islands lie in the track. A female worker, with some means, is much needed, and the language is not difficult.

LONDON MISSIONARY SOCIETY.—We learn that Mr. Arthur Marshall has been elected chairman of the board of directors of the London Missionary Society for the ensuing year, and Rev. D. MacEwan, D.D, vice-chairman. This is the second time that Mr. Marshall has been called to this honourable position. Dr. MacEwan, who is ex-Moderator of the English Presbyterian Synod, has been an active director of the Society for several years.

The Railway Mission.

In the tent at four o'clock on Thursday, the 23rd ult., the Railway Mission had an interesting and attractive meeting, under the presidency of Sir R. Phayre. Mr. D. Spencer, secretary, rapidly set forth the object and extent of the Mission's work, urging those present to assist in it. The object is to bring the Gospel of the Lord Jesus Christ to the railway servants, of whom there are 367,000 in the United Kingdom; taking into account their wives and children, the Mission aims to reach over a million persons. Railway servants are engaged in a work which is of an arduous and responsible character, and those who travel owe the safety of their journey to the care, skill, sobriety, and oftimes the Christianity of the men engaged in running the trains. Over two hundred missions have been already started, and over four hundred meetings are held weekly in waiting-rooms, sheds, workshops, coffee palaces, mission halls, schoolrooms, platelayers' cabins, and in all sorts of places up and down the country. Many of the meetings are conducted by ladies. Reference was then made to the Railway Men's Christian Association, which, during 1886, received over a thousand new names to its list. It was also mentioned that several men were prepared to go out to South Africa and India to carry the Gospel to the railway servants there. Mr. Spencer said every Christian lady might undertake to do something in circulating The Railway Signal and Gospel literature, visiting the homes, speaking to one and another on the lines, or conducting meetings.

Signalman Balaam (M.R.) referred to the great change which had taken place on the railways in the past few years. Years ago there had existed a great amount of pilfering and bad language, and the idea was that no railway man could be a Christian; now, through the efforts of the Mission, hundreds are coming out on the Lord's side.

Driver Stokes said that although six or seven years ago he did not know a Christian man on the District Railway, now he believed they were to be found in all directions witnessing amongst their mates.

Mrs. Gates, of Brighton, who had been working amongst Railway-men for eleven years, gave a very encouraging and stimulating account of the progress of Christianity amongst the men, and affectionately pleaded that all her hearers might take opportunities of speaking to the men in their own districts, and as they travelled. She dwelt upon the kindliness of the guards and porters with children and invalids, and considered that they had a great claim on the Christian sympathy and practical help of the travelling public. She believed that many engine-men, firemen, and guards, habitually prayed on their journeys for the safe conduct of the passengers committed to their charge.

After Mr. T. A. Denny had invited pecuniary support for the Mission, and expressed the confidence he had in the work, Mr. George Clarke described the early days of the Mission, and the difficulties that had been encountered. The Chairman gave his experience of the Indian railways, and the means adopted to overcome the evils of intemperance, and earnestly pleaded the peculiar claims of the Mission as worthy of public support, on account of its real and effective work. Then Signalman Hole, representing the West Brompton District, told his experiences of the Mission, and how he had been led, through personal conversation, to give up gambling, drinking, and smoking, and become a follower of the Lord Jesus Christ. Mr. S. Gurney Sheppard, as the Treasurer, closed the meeting, saying that he considered it would be a privilege to anyone to help in the work. The converted men were many of them full of zeal, and it was a pleasure to work with and for them.

Home Mission Work.

Rev. H. M. Williamson, of Belfast, presided over a meeting in the tent on Friday afternoon for the consideration of helps and hindrances to Mission work. Mr. Spencer Walton said the hindrances often met with are those brought out in the early chapters of Nehemiah. A good deal of the ruin so much to be deplored results from the breaking-down of the wall of separation between the Church and the world. On all sides the Church is more or less in ruin, and before any real blessing can come to our churches and chapels the wall that has been broken down must be rebuilt. Individual members should take their part in this work. Concerts, penny readings, entertainments, the object of which, it is said, is to attract the young people—these are all hindrances to true religion, and as long as they are permitted the blessing cannot come down. Church defence is not needed, but Church purging is. Often, on entering upon a mission, everything is so cold—the evangelist finds he must begin with the members of the Church, instead of those who are outside. He finds the wall of separation has been broken down; after some time, the people begin to own how wrong they have been. The real work of the mission often only begins just as it is drawing to a close, because of this state of things. Mr. Walton spoke of four great hindrances to mission work—a worldly Christianity, denominationalism, dead professors, and drink. Restitution, and by this was meant not only the restoration of what did not belong to a person, but the restoration of good feeling so often disturbed by some petty jealousy, is also necessary. When this has taken place, then, as in Neh. v. 13, would the congregation be able to say, "Amen," and to praise the Lord.

Mr. C. Inglis said the hindrances he had met with in twenty years' evangelistic work are just those to which reference is made in Luke ix. In this chapter seven points of weakness in the disciples are recorded. The first is want of sympathy. They said, "Send the multitude away." There was also a want of watchfulness. "Peter and they that were with him were heavy with sleep." Peter made three mistakes: he was asleep when he ought to have been watching, he was talking when he ought to have been listening, and then he was working when he ought to have been resting. Then, because of unbelief, the disciples were unable to perform an act of mercy. "There is a terrible amount of unbelief in God's children," said Mr. Inglis, "and unbelief in a child of God is an awful thing." Again, there was a want of liberality. The disciples said, "We saw one casting out devils, and we forbad him, because he followed not with us." Here, again, was an illustration of the curse of denominationalism. There was a want of humility also—they reasoned together as to which should be the greatest; and in the request, "Lord, wilt Thou that we command fire to come down from heaven?" there was a great want of patience.

Dr. Mutchmore, of Philadelphia, and Rev. H. M. Williamson, also addressed the meeting, dwelling especially on the necessity there was, if the lapsed masses are to be effectually dealt with, that the Church should bestir herself, and go to the people in the spirit in which Jesus went to them—in true sympathy and love.

Mulberry Tree Meetings.

PRAYER FOR QUEEN AND COUNTRY

A meeting under the joint presidency of Mr Harry C. Nisbet and Lord Radstock was held on Wednesday afternoon under the Mulberry Tree and was well attended. Mr. Nisbet gave a brie address. Our meeting, he said, comes appropriately after a day of thanksgiving and rejoicing. We have personal and national mercie for which to be thankful. When we think of the proceedings of yesterday, we cannot but be thankful for the preservation of the Queen' health; and we thank God, too, that in the solemn observances of the day the song of glor to God took a prominent place. Then I think there was an acknowledgment by the nation tha we must look to God as the source of all tru honour and prosperity. We know very well tha our Queen must first have received from God the honour which belongs to her position, and we ma say the same of the nation. The pageant of yesterday might have served to remind us of the reproo given by Daniel to proud Nebuchadnezzar, who gave not God the glory. When we are showing our army and navy to foreigners, and boasting o our strength, it may be that we too require som such reproof from the Spirit of God to tell u that these, after all, are not the things we shoul pride ourselves upon. We meet here to-day t lift up holy hands without wrath or doubting and we spend this little while in earnest praye for our Queen, our Government, and our country We need every year to multiply our prayers, s to speak, that the vast dominions which God ha placed under British rule, and of which ou Queen is Empress, should also be regarded a the Lord's. And now our friend, Lord Radstock has a subject to bring before you which is ver dear to his heart, and after we have sung hymn he will take my place.

After a hymn had been sung, a friend presen offered brief but very earnest prayer for all th children of the Queen.

Lord Radstock said: We cannot meet to-da without feeling that there is great cause fo humiliation, and that the truly culpable one are the children of God. If things are goin wrong nationally, it is because the salt has lost i savour; it has lost its pungency and power, an instead of gaining a victory over the evil in th world, it is being overcome itself by the evil. fear there are few places in England to which w can point and say with certainty—there th children of God are all living in love. Than God, there is great improvement in this respec but the dangers arising out of false doctrine ar it seems to me, exceedingly on the increas For some time past there has been a yearning the hearts of several for united prayer, that the should be a concert for prayer among the chil ren of God. In connection with this yearnin friends should clearly understand two things: What have we to face? Who are to pray? B we should all recognise that there are many de children of God who never come to Mildma and are they to be excluded? What has bee laid upon the minds of many is to invite all who love the Lord, without presuming to pass an opinion on any one of them, but taking all who hold Christ to be the Head of the Church—that we should invite them to join with us in prayer. Accordingly a circular has been drawn up addressed to those who are on different lines.

His lordship then read the circular referred to (which appeared in a recent issue), and said: If all the children of God get polarity with their Lord it will not be long before they will get polarity with one another. The meeting was closed with prayer by Captain Chapman.

WORK AMONG WAIFS AND STRAYS.

On Thursday afternoon Mr. Samuel Gurney Sheppard presided over a large meeting gathered to hear about Dr. Barnardo's work. The Doctor's voice was in capital order, and was heard to a considerable distance. He began by maintaining that the command to "go out into the streets and lanes of the city" included the children, and that, apart from Christianity, a common humanity should move us to save them. He then gave some of the statistics of the Metropolis to show its vastness, and asserted that thousands are living in a state worse than beasts. Among these are the children, so easily saved, and so easily ruined. He rightly added that no work is so easy when the heart was full of love to Jesus Christ. But whether Christians moved in the matter or not, the children are not neglected, for the devil is busy among them. A fair, blue-eyed child, only five years old, was so shocking in her blasphemy and obscenity when received into the Home at Ilford, that he had to move her from Home to Home for fear of moral contamination. The state of the morals of the children is chiefly owing to the state of their homes, numbers of them having none worthy of the name.

He then described his efforts to reach big lads by his Labour House. These lads must be willing to do hard work and plenty of it, as he would have neither idle or dishonest boys. Numbers had been sent to Canada, and 150 were now in the Home. He was obliged to refuse applications every day for these trained boys. There had been conversions among these lads from time to time, with increasing numbers lately. He purposed visiting Canada again soon, and described his land there as "a thousand miles from everywhere." In speaking of the cases of girls received into the Ilford Home, he named one whose father, mother, sister, and brother were all thieves, the father saying, in answer to the Doctor's application for the child, "Anybody may take her, she's no good to us"; because she would not steal. This was a country case. The surroundings of some of the children sent to him were too shocking even to mention.

To show the extent of his benevolent work he stated that from fifty to sixty applications on behalf of children were received every day, and they were now receiving into the Homes an average of ten a day, and no really destitute boy or girl was ever turned away. Already 10,345 children had been rescued, of whom 2634 had been sent to Canada. £16 would keep a child in the Institutions for a year, and £8 10s. would emigrate one to Canada. A touching story, told as only Dr. Barnardo knows how, of a girl who took her piety into her Canadian home, and would not eat without saying her grace, brought tears to a good many eyes.

About fifty of the big lads from the Labour House stood on the outskirts of the crowd and sang some hymns very nicely.

OPEN-AIR PREACHING.

Popular as Dr. Barnardo is, the crowd on Friday to hear about open-air preaching, and to listen to the singing of the United Gospel Choir, was larger than on Thursday. Mr. John MacGregor ("Rob Roy"), the founder of the Open-air Mission, presided, and was surrounded by a considerable number of open-air preachers, all prepared to testify to the blessings of this mode of evangelisation; but time was pressing, and would only allow of brief addresses from the following:—Mr. Robert Scott Moncrieff, Edinburgh; Mr. E. J. Kennedy, Sec. Y.M.C.A. Exeter Hall; Mr. Reginald Radcliffe, Liverpool; Mr. J. Theodore Isaac, Strangers' Rest, Ratcliffe-highway; Mr. W. J. A. Rowe, Sec. South Evangelistic Choir; Rev. James Henry, Moravian Missions; and Mr. Joseph Weatherley. Near the chairman were specimens of street lamps, organ-harmoniums, "the Coloured Teacher" and hymn-sheets, to illustrate the external aids to open-air preaching.

PREACHING BY PICTURES.

But, judging from the eagerness of the crowd when Mr. Gawin Kirkham (Sec. Open-Air Mission) began to explain his allegorical picture of the "Broad and Narrow Way,"* it was evident that many of them were waiting to hear this address, which closed the garden meetings at this memorable Conference. The picture from which Mr. Kirkham lectured is painted in dull oils, and is 12 ft. high and 9 wide; and, as he told the audience, this was the eight hundred and seventh exposition in public in eighteen years. The various scenes in both roads were graphically described, and, as Mr. Weatherley (the chairman) observed at the close, it was a most interesting and striking address on a striking picture, full of Scriptural teaching.

The waiters in the large marquee, where dinner and tea is served, always look forward to the morning of the closing day of the Conference for their meeting. Nor did they look in vain on this occasion. As soon as the stewards' breakfast was over, about forty of them assembled in the marquee, and were addressed by Rev. W. F. Stubbs, vicar of St. Columba, Liverpool. Prayer having been offered by Mr. G. Kirkham, each waiter was presented with a volume of "Faithful Words" as a momento of the Conference.

HOME OF REST, ESK BANK.—A Home of Rest for evangelists, male or female, was opened last week at 1, Fairhaven Villas, Esk Bank, N.B. The Home will accommodate four persons, and is the result of the earnest efforts to this end of Mrs. Grant. It is entirely unsectarian in character, and General Smith, in a brief address on the opening day, bespoke for it the support of ministers generally.

NATIONAL BIBLE SOCIETY OF SCOTLAND.—The Western Board at their meeting on Monday week were occupied with matters connected with their agencies in China. Rev. W. H. and Mrs. Murray took farewell on their return to Peking, and were commended to God in prayer, led by the venerable Rev. David Russell, one of the four surviving directors who in 1863 gave Mr. Murray his first appointment in connection with Bible work. The Board accepted the services of two young men, both of Glasgow, who will shortly proceed to Central China, and one of whom will maintain himself. An occasional agent in South China reported good sales among the Ningpo fishing fleet. The men engaged in it are not easily got at, but he had been able to hire a boat with two men for the small charge of two shillings per day, and thus to visit the fleet and sell the Scriptures to the fishermen. The first Bible-case for use at street corners in Glasgow was on view, and was approved.

For the Young.

ONLY A PENNY.

A STORY FROM OUR LADS' EVENING CLASSES.

"Mayn't we come in too?" "Oh, Miss! it is so cold, do let us in!"

Such was the pitiful pleading that we had to encounter night by night last autumn from groups of big lads at the door of Berger Hall. One evening we noticed a young fellow sitting back from the rest of his class, uninterested, and looking out of sorts. Calling him aside we drew him into conversation, and the story he told us may serve as an example of the lives of many of these lads. He was a prodigal son who had run away from home two years ago and never seen his people since. He had lived as best he could from hand to mouth, but things had been getting worse and worse with him, and in the long winter season "no work" meant no food and no lodging. He had gone sometimes to a married sister who helped him now and again, but her husband did not approve of this; he himself only had two or three days' work a week, he "found it 'ard enough," he said, "to support 'er and 'er three children, let alone 'er brother!" and so the lad, too proud to take her help, was turned wholly adrift. He was a strong and handy young fellow, nineteen years old, and yet for three months could find no work to do, and now was pretty nearly starving on the streets. When the night school opened he came with the rest and had never missed an evening. We had often noticed that he looked half-famished, but tonight there was something about him worse than usual.

"Where did you sleep last night, Jim?" we asked.

"Didn't sleep nowhere!" he answered quietly. "Went fur a walk." From further questions we learnt that he and another lad in the school, both utterly homeless, were in the habit of starting about one o'clock at night, when the cold was so intense that they could no longer stand about the street corners, and walking up to London Bridge and back; reaching the East-end again about four in the morning when the busy city life was just commencing for another day.

"What do you have for breakfast then?" we asked.

"Cup o' tea and two slices of bread, if can git it;—I did 'ave tuppence to-day."

"And have you eaten nothing since—this is nine o'clock at night?"

"No; nothin'!"

And as he said it we looked into the lad's face and read there the truth of his story. Such a grave face it was, with such thin white cheeks and dull lack-lustre eyes! Such a heavy hoplesness, there was about it! It made one's heart ache to see that look!

The night was a bitterly cold one. February frost and icy east wind combined to pierce even the warmest wrappings. We looked at the lad's thin ragged coat, thought of that midnight walk,—and trembled!

The evening was drawing to a close and James had gone back to his class. It was the last half-hour, and a bright Gospel address was being given by our pastor to the school collectively. In the next hall the night school men were singing, sending through the double doors a volume of sound such as the combined voices of eighty or ninety working men alone can produce. Overhead the weekly choir practice was going forward with unusual zest. It needed a strong man's voice to drown the inharmonious combination thus produced, and Mr. Chaplin spoke out loudly. His voice rang right through the hall, securing the attention of every lad that was there. —Of every lad did we say? We looked round and saw James dropping asleep, just quietly going off! It was little short of a miracle; Poor lad; never had we seen such a picture of utterweariness as he presented!

The last hymn had been sung, and, as the classes were going out, we drew James aside, and slipping a penny into his hand, said, "You look hungry, my lad; go and get a cup of coffee and a bun!" A quick gleam of intelligence shone in the hungry eyes for a moment, and then he was gone. In the large hall buns and coffee are provided nightly for such of the men as can afford a penny, and into the large hall James had vanished. Our room was almost empty when he came back. What a change! Only a penny given; only a cup of coffee and one small halfpenny bun, but into that pale, pinched face had come a flush of health and a ruddy look of comfort. Oh, friends, had you seen that change you would not think even a penny a trifling or worthless gift! How many faces are there in this great London of ours that might be cheered that way by only a penny? And how many Christians are there willing to deny themselves of some little luxury for Christ's sake, so as to put by, for his needy ones, day by day, only a penny?—Regions Beyond.

SURE AND FAITHFUL.

"Charlie, Charlie!" clear and sweet as a note struck from a silver bell, the voice rippled over the common.

"That's mother," said one of the boys, and he instantly threw down his bat and picked up his jacket and cap.

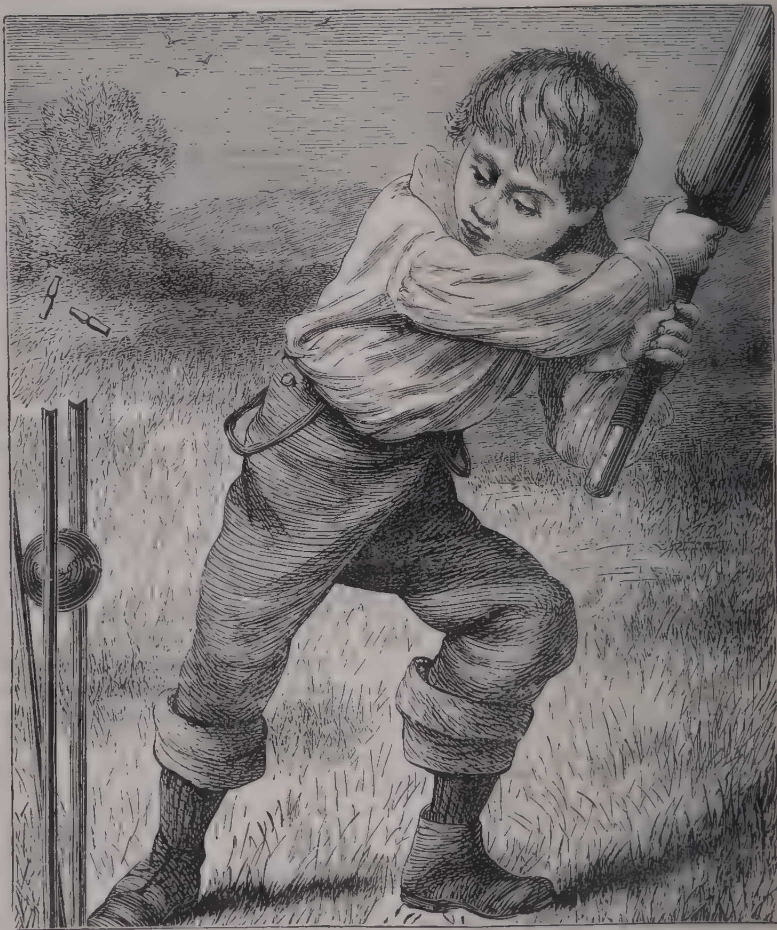
"Don't go yet! Have it out!"

"Finish the game. Try it again," cried the players in noisy chorus.

"I must go—right off—this minute. I told her I'd come whenever she called."

"Make believe you didn't hear," they exclaimed.

"But I did hear."



"She won't know you did."

"But I know it, and——"

"Let him go," said a bystander, "you can't do anything with him; he is tied to his mother's apron-strings."

"That's so," said Charles; "and it's to what every boy ought to be tied, and in a hard knot, too."

"But I wouldn't be such a baby as to run the minute she called," said one.

"I don't call it babyish to keep one's word to his mother," answered the obedient boy, a beautiful light glowing in his blue eyes: "I call that manly; and the boy who don't keep his word to her will never keep it to anyone else—you see if he does"; and he hurried away to his cottage home.

Thirty years have passed since those boys played on the common. Charlie Gray is a prosperous business man in a great city, and his mercantile friends say of him that "his word is a bond." We asked him how he acquired such a reputation. "I never broke my word when a boy, no matter how great a temptation; and the habits thus formed then have clung to me through life."

FRENCH CHURCH, BAYSWATER.

On Tuesday, July 5, the "Eglise Evangélique Française," in Monmouth-road, Bayswater, which is the headquarters of the ministrations of Pasteur Du Pontet de La Harpe, was thronged with a distinguished company of friends and sympathisers, for the 25th anniversary of the church, and of the manifold mission works connected with it. Every French-speaking country was represented in the audience, and others beside, including Sierra Leone. Pasteur Du Pontet de La Harpe read the report, which gave great satisfaction. The church is well attended. The schools near Fitzroy-square have had 160 attendants during the year. The medical mission, near Oxford-circus, the work among governesses, North Kensington, the registry office for servants, have all been prosperous. The foreigners reached by this mission and brought within the sound of the Gospel may be reckoned by thousands in a single year, while many more have been benefited by the various agencies.

The Dean of Canterbury, from what he saw and heard, concluded that a work useful to all classes of society was carried on. Dr. Joseph Angus said he rejoiced at the good done and the progress made during the past twenty-five years. It was nothing more, however, than what he expected from his friend the Pasteur. It was comparatively easy to get contributions, and build churches, but to do real work, a real man was needed, a man with a soul and heart as well as with brain, and that man they had. Dr. John Bennett said, in these times of Romanist propaganda and Jesuit invasion, one must rejoice at the existence of a work like this, and wish it prosperity. Professor Gladstone, from long acquaintance and personal knowledge, testified to the usefulness of the work. He was especially connected with the schools, and assured them that the value of such an institution to the French-speaking colony in London could not be overrated. Rev. Filmer Sulivan, Rev. G. R Thornton, Mr. George Williams, and others joined in heartily commending the work.

AGED PILGRIMS' FRIEND SOCIETY.—Mr. Frank A. Bevan has consented to become joint treasurer of the Aged Pilgrims' Friend Society. 1179 pensioners are now on the Society's books. The office is at 83, Finsbury-pavement, E.C.

SHIPWRECKED MARINERS' SOCIETY.—At the forty-eighth annual meeting of this Society, held last week, it was stated 11,512 shipwrecked and otherwise distressed sailors, or their widows and orphans, had been aided by means of its funds during 1886. The total number of casualties reported at Lloyd's was, except in regard to loss of life, larger than in the previous year, an exceptionally favourable one. The report contained an expression of thankfulness for the undiminished prosperity and usefulness of the Society, and Captain Maitland referred with gratitude to the national character of the support accorded to it. He also touched on the subject of the complaints against British seamen, and whilst maintaining their superiority over those of other nations, said masters and owners were to blame for having done away with the apprenticeship system.

NORWOOD COLLEGE FOR THE BLIND.—The Crown Princess of Germany last week distributed the prizes to the students of the Royal Normal College and Academy of Music for the Blind, Upper Norwood. After a gymnastic performance, a delightful concert was given by the pupils. Sir Lyon Playfair, who presided, in the course of his address, congratulated the principal (Dr. F. C. Campbell) and the management on the wonderful progress that had been made. Beginning with two, the Institution now numbered 170 pupils, and only three out of the 130 it had prepared to fight the battle of life had proved failures. The institution not only trains persons to provide for their daily wants, but it cultivates their minds, and gives them a feeling of dignity and self-reliance. Mr. E. J. Phelps, the American minister, also spoke warmly in advocacy of the claims of an Institution, nine-tenths of whose pupils were maintained and instructed, in a great part, if not wholly, gratuitously. It was matter for deep thankfulness that now physical blindness does not necessarily mean mental blindness, as once was almost universally the case.

THE DRINK TRAFFIC IN INDIA.

Dear Sir,—I am glad to see that you are opening your columns to a discussion on the question of the drink trade in India. Permit me to say that a recent visit to that country has convinced me that the Government, in its zeal for revenue, has adopted a licensing system which, of necessity, extends that pernicious trade with great rapidity.

The province of Bengal has suffered frightfully from the vice of drunkenness, largely owing to what is called the "Out-Still System"; that is, the planting of small local distilleries and dram shops among the rural population. So dreadful was the evil that a Commission was appointed by the Government to inquire into the whole subject, the result of which was the abolition of the system. As a natural consequence the Excise revenue fell off because less spirits were consumed, and now the Government is seeking to re-introduce this abominable system in order to replenish the revenue.

I have received a very interesting letter from Mr. Thos. Evans, an old missionary, who has devoted his life to combating this vice, and I would ask you to be so good as to publish it, for it throws a flood of light on this odious system. Nothing will check the gradual demoralisation of India through drunkenness except incessant agitation at home.—Yours faithfully,

Samuel Smith, M.P.

THE OUT-STILL SYSTEM IN BENGAL.

Sir,—Now that the people of England begin to take some interest in the drink traffic, pushed on in India in order to increase the revenue, it may be well to give them a fair outline of the whole concern. I shall consider first, the reason why this system was introduced into Bengal; secondly, the particulars in which this new system differed from the old and less injurious excise department; and, thirdly, the fruits which the out-still system has borne (1) in a large increase to the excise revenue, and (2) in a still larger crop of wretchedness and ruin to the people of Bengal.

As to the origin, or rather re-introduction, of this system (for it was practised long ago, though with far less injurious effects) it came about in this way. By a resolution of the Government of India, No. 1899, dated March 29, 1877, a new financial policy was introduced in respect to this department of revenue administration in Bengal. The Government of India may be said to have farmed out the excise of Bengal, for the period of five years, at a rate of sixty-four lakhs (£640,000) per annum. That is to say, the Government of Bengal was expected to raise annually this amount of money from its Excise Department on behalf of the public revenue of the land.

When this resolution of the Indian Government was issued to Bengal, that province, according to the report for 1876-77, was in receipt of only sixty-two lakhs of rupees on account of its Excise Department. This was something like £20,000 short of the sum imposed by the Government of India.

Here was a difficulty. The excise revenue of Bengal for years had varied from fifty-five to sixty lakhs of rupees. It seldom went up over sixty, but now sixty-four lakhs had to be found, and how could this be done?

It is the special duty of the Board of Revenue to maintain, and, if possible, to increase the income of the State. But the members of the board knew well that it would be impossible to reach the 64 lakhs from the excise, if the old "principle was adhered to." The subject, no doubt, was subjected to long and serious consideration by the members of the board, and the genius who has the credit of hitting the nail on the head, by which the extra revenue was secured, was Mr. C. T. Buckland, who had newly been appointed member of the Board of Revenue in Bengal. It was indeed what may be well called "a happy hit" so far as the fiscal success was concerned, for the excise revenue soon developed beyond the most sanguine expectations of even Mr. Buckland himself. While in 1876-77 the income from excise did not reach 63 lakhs of rupees, in 1878 79 it went up to over 70 lakhs, and the following year to 80 lakhs; or an increase of some £200,000 in less than two years. This was a grand fiscal success; but the dark cloud from which such rich showers of rupees poured into the Bengal Treasury had another aspect.

It is, perhaps, not much to be wondered at that his honour, the Lieut.-Governor, was so dazzled with the bright sea of wealth which now came flooding into the coffers of the State that he failed to hear the wail of woe which accompanied this wave of financial success, which rolled as a disastrous deluge over the land. The brilliant bribe which mammon offers to its votaries is often too tempting to the receiver to care much for the sighs and sorrows of those who are crushed to death under the ponderous wheels of the car of this merciless idol. So we need not wonder that when the social and moral devastation of the successful out-stills were brought to the notice of the then ruler of Bengal, he should in reply say, "It is naught, it is naught," which, in effect, was the answer of Sir Ashley Eden to the request of the Government of India that he should look into the complaint of the terrible manner in which the new system of excise in country spirits fostered the evil of drunkenness.

Under the old system there were many wholesome checks and restrictions, which kept the great mass of the people from any free use of country spirits. The distilleries were comparatively few in number in each district. In the district of Monghyr, for instance, we had but eleven Government distilleries under the old order, but under the new they went up in a short time to 400! In the town of Monghyr the Government distillery turned out on an average about fifty gallons per day, while the eight out-stills of the town produced no less than 1500 gallons daily, as I pointed out at the time to the Government of India.

Under the Government distillery system, only a limited amount of London proof liquor was allowed to be produced from a certain amount of material. For example, the rule was that only 2·12 gallons of proof spirits was to be manufactured from 80 lb. of Mowah-cassia latifolia, while under the new system as much as 20 gallons would be forced out of the same amount of material, which was charged with a large quantity of fusel oil, most injurious to health. Under the old system, the size of the stills was limited to four gallons, or sixty bottles, which were to be worked only from sunrise to sunset. But under the out-stills there was no such restriction observed, and I have seen stills of a capacity of fifty or sixty gallons.

Under the old "Sudder" system, care was taken that only pure liquor should be prepared, and that from wholesome material; while the out-stills could use any deleterious matter they wished, and force four times the proper quantity of adulterated drink from the materials used for adulteration. Under the old system the distillery was strictly watched by Government police, and the drink kept under lock and key. But the out-stills were left to the tender mercy of rentees, who could take any liberty they pleased both as to quality and quantity and sale, as long as they paid the rent due to Government.

Under the old system, the restrictions were such, and the tax levied on each gallon produced so high, that the liquor could not be sold under a shilling per bottle, while the London proof spirits fetched two shillings and more per bottle. But under the out-stills the drink is simply a vile decoction, largely adulterated, and freely diluted, which can be sold at a profit for about one penny per bottle. In short, the official oversight, and restrictions imposed upon the "Sudder," or Government distilleries were such as to produce liquor at such a price as the mass of the people could not reach; while now under the out stills the country is flooded with a vile and poisonous decoction which is sold so cheap as to be a temptation to the very beggars to drink.—Yours faithfully,

Thomas Evans.

NATIONAL VIGILANCE ASSOCIATION.

From all parts of the United Kingdom we are constantly receiving painful evidence that the sin of impurity is not confined to any class or locality; the old vice in a new form, adopting a more guarded method, is still insidiously undermining the social life of England. Not only are drink, music halls, theatres, &c., as of yore leading young women into temptation, but we are threatened with a new and most pernicious danger to our young men who are being trained in schools and colleges. Novels translated from the French and otherwise, with immoral plots and vile suggestions, are being sold in most of our commercial centres, and catalogues of these books, together with photographs of nude figures, are being circulated among the boys and young men at schools and colleges. With such seed so sedulously sown by the devil's emissaries there can be no question as to what the harvest will be.

How to circumvent these devilish efforts has been the question with the National Vigilance Association; the record of the last eighteen months' work is an encouraging answer. And we are now in a position to assert that if pure men and women will, for the sake of our common humanity, band themselves together in the fear of the Lord, the progress of this hydra-headed monster will at least be checked, and evil be overcome of good. That the conditions of such a contest involve pain and self-denial of no ordinary kind are but additional reasons why every Christian man and woman should hasten to inquire of the Lord in relation to this phase of work, "What wilt Thou have me to do?" Surely, when we remember the terrible consequences to women, especially, when evil men indulge in this hideous vice, it should create in us a determination to frustrate the hellish designs of these godless men, and inspire us with a holy zeal to prevent girls from slipping into the awful abyss, and to rescue those who have already fallen.

The great need in almost every town is a healthier public opinion in relation to the Social Purity question, and we have found that one of the surest ways of effecting this is to form a representative Vigilance Committee. With the experience we have already gained, we can very materially assist in the preliminary part of the work.

If those who sympathise can get up a drawing-room or public meeting, we are quite ready to send a deputation from London to explain what has been done in many other towns, and to show how essential it is that Vigilance Committees should be established throughout the United Kingdom.

Fortunately, the work is increasing on all sides. Wherever we are afforded an opportunity of addressing a meeting, so important is it realised to be, that a committee is always formed. Every committee so formed and affiliated to the National Vigilance Association has the advantage of legal advice and help without involving any expense to the local committee. This is an important element in connection with the work, and gives a local committee great power in dealing with the criminal forms of vice.

At present there are between eighty and ninety local committees at work. If there were 800 or 900, as there might be if good people could only realise their responsibility in relation to this work, we should have created a national public opinion, in which vice would find it difficult to live and virtue easy to thrive.

We have a right to work and hope for that time when society will consider it a far more heinous offence to rob a woman of her virtue than to steal from her purse; and we ask your readers to hasten the time when such an act will be regarded as criminal, and the law will mete out a punishment adequate to the offence. Of course we need money-help to carry on our work, and friends who contribute may rest assured that the money will be wisely used.

PROGRESS IN BELOOCHISTAN.

At Aldersgate Noon Prayer-meeting on a recent Tuesday, Dr. Andrew Jukes, C. M. S. missionary to Beloochistan, gave some interesting information concerning the progress of the work. Beloochistan is a large tract of country to the east of Afghanistan, and west of the Punjaub. Up till 1878, when, in company with another missionary, he went out, there was no Christian teacher of any kind in the country. The people are all Mahomedans, and, with the exception of a few chiefs, are unable either to read or write. Within the last two or three years some have begun to see the value of education, but for the most part the people are still under the impression that there is not much good in learning.

The people are chiefly of nomadic habits, and live in secluded places on the hills, where the ordinary traveller would see no trace of them, though there might be hundreds within two or three hours' call. They are, or rather were, until brought into contact with civilisation, a truth-loving people.

The principal mission station is at Dera-Ghazi-Khan, but another, on the hills outside British territory, and known as Fort Munro, is occupied during the hot season, when the Government officials and others reside there. Here there is a medical mission and dispensary, and the missionaries are able to do a great deal of work by reason of a very interesting habit that prevails amongst the people. This is, that when they meet each other they always ask, "What is the news?" and those who have been absent from their tribe on their return to the durbar have to tell what they have heard. In this way information is rapidly spread over the hill country, and in making known the Gospel to even a few the missionary is sure that, though there may not be a very clear idea of what the Gospel is, yet, as far as the understanding has been reached, they will repeat every word that has been retained when they return to their own people.

Notwithstanding Mahomedan fanaticism and opposition, the work is growing and full of encouragement. There have been a number of baptisms, though some have not turned out well, and a great number of Mahomedans and Hindoos are always inquiring after the truths of Christianity. Some time before Dr. Jukes left for England the son of one of the chiefs, a young man about twenty-two years of age, having heard something about the Gospel, was bidden to go to Alleyghur. He inquired of the astrologers, and received for answer, "Go, and go at once." This he did, and there met Rev. T. Bomford, of Mooltán. His words made such an impression upon the young man that he determined to be a Christian, and asked to be baptized. This, however, Mr. Bomford did not feel inclined to do quite so soon. A few days after, the young man, who had meanwhile been attending the services, again asked to be baptized, and was again refused, but, producing a New Testament, he then referred Mr. Bomford to the account of Philip's baptism of the eunuch, saying, "I believe in the Lord Jesus Christ. What reason have you to hinder me being baptized?" Mr. Bomford could give no satisfactory reason, and the young chief was therefore baptized. Dr. Jukes said he had since heard that the people of Dera-Ghazi-Khan were greatly disturbed when they heard what had taken place; they said, "Our nose has been cut off; we are greatly dishonoured." He therefore asked prayer for the young man, that he may be sustained and kept faithful amid the persecution he will certainly have to endure.

GREENWICH INFIRMARY.—A Men's Missionary Working Party, for the "China Inland Mission," was started last February for some of the invalids in the Greenwich Infirmary, in connection with the weekly Flower Mission and singing. On Thursday, the 7th inst., there was a sale of the men's work, and the sum realised (£1 13s. 9d.) was given to Mrs. Hudson Taylor, who spoke in the different wards, warmly thanking the men for their missionary efforts. All flowers should be directed to Miss F. A. S., Porter's Lodge, Greenwich Infirmary, S.E., to reach before 12 o'clock on Thursday mornings.

FROM NAPLES TO LONDON.

ON BOARD AN ORIENT LINER.

On June 28, I joined the Oroya at Naples, and had the pleasure of meeting Dr. Young of Rome, whose Christian labours among the Jews in that city are well known. Special services were in progress on board, but the preachers were all laid up, and an Australian gentleman who took the arrangements in hand called upon the new blood to fall into line. We had daily Gospel meetings, well attended by the 800 passengers and crew. One night the after poop was completely covered in by the sailors, and seated, with a large electric light to play upon a map of the Bay of Naples, which was the subject of the evening. Another lecture was given, illustrated with diagrams, "The Story of the Wonderful Book," and several persons who held free-thought opinions expressed thanks for the words spoken on behalf of the good old Book. Before the passengers separated a testimonial was signed by representatives of various parts of the Colonies, Italy, and Great Britain, and given to me, showing that God had owned the services on board.

From London, accompanied by Rev. D. M. Cameron, of Union Tabernacle, Wandsworth-road, we went to and formed a French branch of the International Social Purity League, and also had a conference with the English branch formed last year. From a notice in Galignani, this visit was owned of God to stimulate to renewed and progressive action against the social evils which abound in that city. We investigated the state of morality, and judged from what we saw and heard that society was growing more corrupt, and strong and vigilant measures ought to be put in operation, especially for the sake of the thousands of young English men and women in that great city.

JERSEY

being an island of seamen, and having had acquaintance with many at Naples, it gave me much pleasure, during a tour of ten days there, to meet with many who gave evidence of receiving spiritual benefit at the missions at Naples. Everywhere I had a hearty reception, and the attention to the Gospel was cheering. There are many earnest Christian workers on the island, but there ought to be a strong and well-organised united evangelistic effort, because over a thousand French Jesuits have made Jersey the base of their operations. This movement will require to be watched, and as the Jesuits are vigorous all over Europe at present, it is time that the friends of Gospel progress closed their ranks, and worked together with a will.

I was surprised to find that there was neither Bethel nor Sailors' Rest at Jersey, and I was pleased to hear words of sympathy spoken at public meetings in favour of a special mission for seamen. A Christian seaman, who was converted at Naples years ago, is doing a good and a quiet work, and I trust means will be used to establish something permanent there.

WANDSWORTH.

Sunday, July 3, was spent helping my old friend Pastor Cameron, of Union Tabernacle, Wandsworth road. The workers in this church were gathered by evangelistic work, and they are full of the missionary spirit. The Lord is blessing his own word in this district of the city of four millions. At the open-air meeting, between eight and nine p.m., crowds of people stood round and listened respectfully. The Londoners do verily listen with patience and respect. God has thus given an open door, and fresh thousands ought to go out into the streets and lanes of the city. The labours were not in vain; souls were awakened and converted at these services, and we could rejoice with the angels at sinners led to peace with God.

During my absence from Naples until the winter, all papers for the Sailors' Rest should be addressed to Mr. W. O. Folkes, Messrs. Shilton & Co., S. Brigida, Naples.

BLIND IN SOMERS TOWN.

Very gentle and loving is the hand stretched out in this district to those who are "lost in the shadows, feeling for the way," and who, being without sight, are unable to earn their daily bread. A spirit of deep sympathy animates all the workers, and breathes throughout the report of last year's work now issued. One hundred and fifty members, with nineteen hon. members, have received the weekly guide money, and all these have enjoyed the various privileges of the weekly gatherings, summer excursion, &c. Upwards of one hundred and twenty have been visited every week by ladies who read and pray with them in their homes, the blind being invited to choose their own books.

Pensions, amounting in the total to £328 19s., have been given weekly to the members of this Society, and an immense boon and blessing these pensions have been, enabling the blind people, in many cases, to keep up their little homes, and in others saving them from the workhouse. The great bulk of these poor people have, it is said, become blind late in life, and hence it is the more difficult for them to earn anything.

The Thursday evening entertainments form a prominent feature of the work, and so much are they enjoyed and appreciated, that there are rarely any absentees except those who are ill. Every second month also a praise and prayer-meeting is held. These meetings have been times of refreshing, and many of the blind people take an earnest part. The summer excursion, which took place last week, when one hundred and eighty blind persons and as many guides spent a happy day at Hendon, is keenly enjoyed by those whose other senses seem to be quickened by the loss of sight. Last year also two or three parties were sent to the seaside, in consequence of ill-health, for a fortnight or more, deriving much benefit from the change.

It may be mentioned that on Jubilee day 185 of these poor people spent a very pleasant evening together. The President, Dr. Dykes, gave a delightful account of the Queen's reign, and of the service at Westminster Abbey. The allowance to the guides was doubled on this occasion, and a Testament was given to each blind person.

A special effort is now being made by the Committee to raise a Jubilee fund of £500 to enable the managers to place on the Society's membership twenty blind persons, who are already approved, and who have long and patiently attended the weekly gatherings in hope of vacancies which have not occurred. The benefits of this fund, disbursed at the rate of £50 a year, would extend over ten years. It should be added that the "expenses" of the Society for the past year amount only to £16, and that therefore almost the whole of the sum contributed goes directly to aid these poor people. Mrs. Starey, 53, Hilldrop-road, Camden-road, N., is the hon. secretary.

DEACON ABRAHAM'S ORPHANAGES.—On Bank Holiday, August 1, a Sale of Work for the benefit of Deacon Abraham's Nestorian Orphanages will be held in Waterloo Workman's Hall, Andover, Hants. Mr. Henry Tasker, of Brookside, Andover, Hants, would be glad if any Christian who has travelled in Ooroomiah, or any of the American missionaries from that place who may be in England, would communicate with him.

ORPHAN HOMES OF SCOTLAND.—Mr. Wm. Quarrier says, in an Occasional Paper just issued, that he purposes visiting Canada once more at the end of this month, and while there will make arrangements for the formation of a new Home. There are between 600 and 700 children in the Homes, for whose daily maintenance in the months past "the Lord has been graciously pleased to send sufficient money, but we cannot say that we have more than a week's provision on hand." Great spiritual blessing has been conferred on the children in these Homes during the past few months. Throughout last year there were tokens of the Lord's working amongst them, and this was more especially seen during a week's special service, in May last, conducted by Mr. Thomas Eyres, children's evangelist.

THE KEITH-FALCONER MISSION TO THE MOHAMMEDANS OF SOUTH ARABIA.

In February, 1885, the Hon. Mr. and Mrs. Keith-Falconer projected a Mission to the Mohammedans and Sumalis around Aden. In the first week of 1887 the Medical and Bible Mission was begun in Shaikh Othman, in a native house, with remarkable success. The saving of a Jewish labourer, accidently buried in a well which he had been digging, and the healing of an Arab gardener (a man of influence in the district), opened to the missionaries the hearts of the people, near and far. During a visit on camels to the Bedawin village of Bir Achmad the relief of a poor woman who had suffered from dropsy for three years so spread abroad the fame of the missionaries that they were dragged from house to house to see sick people. In February new patients flocked to them at the rate of 150 a month. The Lord, who had said to his faithful disciples, "Lo, I am with you always," was seen to be accompanying the prayers and the labours of his three servants by the power of his Spirit. A wide door and effectual was evidently opened into the heart of South Arabia, for the first time in recent centuries.

In spite of frequent attacks of fever, Mr. and Mrs. Keith-Falconer held on, with Dr. Stewart Cowen by their side. The first of the two mission houses was slowly rising, a new well was being dug, and the garden was being prepared. It was felt that Shaikh Othman had been wisely chosen as the mission base for the interior. But on the morning of May 11, the beloved Ion Keith-Falconer was gently and suddenly taken to the Master's presence. The body of the first martyr-missionary of Arabia was carried by the loving hands of British officers and soldiers (H.M. 98th) to the cemetary of Aden Camp. There he has taken possession of the land for Christ, as, six centuries ago, in the north of Africa, did the noble of Spain, Raymund Lull, whom, alike in sanctified learning and self-devotion, Ion Grant Neville Keith-Falconer resembled.

Such a Mission to the too long neglected Arabs —so founded, so consecrated, so blessed with the promise of the Spirit—must go on. The grateful people, amid lamentation and tears, implored the Christian physician speedily to return. The Right Hon. the Countess-Dowager of Kintore and the Hon. Mrs. Keith-Falconer have lovingly resolved each to guarantee £300 a year, as the salaries of two missionaries thus continuing the arrangement made by the lamented Founder of the Mission. The Foreign Missions Committee of the Free Church of Scotland will become responsible for the other expenses. These ladies and the late Mr. Keith-Falconer had spent above £300 on the garden and first house.

I. To finish the first Mission Bungalow, and to build a second with a hospital, the sum of £1200 is required. Dr. Cowen will return in October to superintend the building operations, and possibly may be able to settle permanently.

II. A second missionary could go out in January, when the second Bungalow may be ready. Volunteers, in the spirit of the last appeal of the devoted missionary, will doubtless offer themselves for the work of preaching, teaching, and circulating the Word of God in Arabia. Who will apply, as an ordained missionary, to take up the work of the Founder?

What Christian is there—desiring to see Mohammedanism, in its original seat, fairly met by the Gospel of Christ, and praying that one of the most interesting of all the peoples of Asia, the Arab, may be brought to Christ now—who will not seek to have a stone in the Keith-Falconer Mission Buildings at Shaikh Othman?

"WHERE IS THY GOD?"

By MARGARET SCOTT HAYCRAFT.

And dost thou ask me, where is He,
Life of my life, Sun of my way?
Where is my God? His face I see
Around me, near me, all the day.

He whispers in the morning breeze;
He shineth in the noontide glow;
His voice I hear among the trees
When dews of even softly flow.

His smile is in the wakening rose
That from the east illumes the dale;
His blessing gives the world repose
When sunset crimsons hill and vale.

The silver wavelets of the sea
Witness of Him they own as King;
The mountain-torrents, foaming free,
His majesty, his glory sing.

Where is my God? I read of Him
In flowers that twine each woodland spot;
His praises never can grow dim,
While breathes the sweet forget-me-not.

His beauty still is newly told
Where roses flush through veiling green;
His purity mine eyes behold
Crowning the lily's stainless sheen.

His love is in the simple grace
Of infant lives so fair and blest,
And in the patient, holy face
Of many a pilgrim, fain for rest.

His power I know in every breath,
In every answered prayer and sigh;
In joy, in tears, in life, in death,
O Christ, for ever Thou art nigh!

O Saviour Christ! in Thee, for aye,
Am I not at the Father's side?
"Where is thy God?" some, doubting, say—
Thy name I whisper, Crucified!

EVANGELISM IN CUBA.

In our issue for May 5 we gave some particulars of the beginnings of what has since proved to be a remarkable evangelistic work in Cuba. Rev. W. F. Wood, representing the Jamaica Baptist Missionary Society, reached Cien-fuegos, Cuba, in the beginning of March, and very soon a deep interest in his mission was manifested. The congregations were large; the inquirers' class numbered nearly three hundred. Applications were frequently received from other towns, asking that preachers might be sent to them.

In a letter to The Jamaica Baptist Recorder, dated May 10, Mr. Wood states that the Baptist Church in Cien-fuegos was organised on Mar. 23, and that up to the date named there had been 137 baptisms. Many were inquiring the way of salvation. The work of grace was not confined to those of one colour, white, brown, and black being frequently baptized at the same time. There has been considerable opposition on the part of Jesuits, who have twice broken up the school; but the work is spreading marvellously, people coming from all parts to hear the Gospel. Mr. Wood has distributed fifteen hundred Bibles and Testaments, and says if he had twenty thousand he could put them in the hands of twenty thousand Cubans within twelve months. In order to feed those who are crying for the Gospel, he is anxious to send men with Testaments and tracts to the poor who live on the estates, and to the towns and villages, he himself following in due course, preaching and baptizing. Thus, he adds, we could fill this part of Cuba with bands of baptized believers. Further information may be obtained of Rev. E. J. Hewett, secretary, Jamaica Baptist Missionary Society, Mount Carey, Anchovy (P.O.), Jamaica, West Indies.

HOME OF INDUSTRY.

OUR FOREIGN MISSIONARY INTERESTS.

"First the blade." How deeply profitable is it to watch the first yearnings in those young hearts whom God is preparing to go forth to the foreign field—"called and chosen"—causing rejoicing with great joy, when in after years they are found "faithful."

The following testimonies are written to stir up Christian women to watch for those who need developing; and as many of us are now beyond the years suitable to go, let us deny ourselves and send our representatives to the heathen. Among our own rescued children in Canada, several have shown a desire to go to the heathen, and we rejoice that they are receiving the best education that Canada can afford.

While yet young, W—— showed a fondness for reading travels. His mother, a woman of prayer, never ceased to pray for her son's conversion—then for his entire consecration of himself to serve the Lord. Over his anvil he was heard praying, "A million a month dying who never heard of Jesus! Lord, here am I; send me." He became the secretary of evening schools for stone-diggers, and while helping to teach many of them to read their Testaments, he learnt patience, and gained experience. Then most readily did he accept help afforded to pursue his studies.

Soon after this he was introduced to Mr. Hudson Taylor, who encouraged him in his earnest desire to go to the heathen. Whilst waiting to go with the first band twenty-two years ago, we remember how eagerly he sought for the youths of the streets to come in to our first London evening classes for young lads at the Bedford Institute. Two of these very lads are now valuable foreign missionaries.

Now W——, having been twenty years in China, is the third time returning to China, with his wife and youngest child. His two sons we have emigrated to Canada, and they are doing well on the farms where they are placed. We hope in due time to receive his eldest daughter, now being carefully educated, and whose desire is to follow in the steps of her parents.

G—— was a Londoner, an engine-driver, converted while attending the Youths' Classes twenty years ago in the East of London. Then Bird Fair had not assumed the proportions it has now as to numbers. Still, there G—— found us alone, distributing tracts, and there he began to tell out the Gospel message to our perishing home heathen.

G—— went to Canada, saved money, went to Oberlin College and Woodstock College. After three years he came back to England, with a soul burning for the heathen. After meeting with Mr. Taylor his way opened up to go to China. He has proved a pioneer in many provinces in scattering broadcast the seed of the glorious Gospel where it has never been heard. He is now labouring in the most northern province, and rejoicing in the prospect of penetrating into Mongolia. He is the senior missionary in Shan-si. Pray, dear reader, that we may find many more G——s, rough diamonds, in the East of London in answer to your cries.

F—— was influenced by the example of W—— and G—— ere they left for the foreign field of China. Hearing their words made an impression upon his young heart, proving the importance of holding missionary meetings, especially for the young. F—— was an East Londoner; both parents of Huguenot descent. After his conversion he had a thirst for knowledge of every kind. His Bible became a new-found treasure, and the daily Bible reading at family worship his delight. Year by year we noticed him advancing as a well-taught scribe, and proposed his returning to attend a regular course of study. F—— was the junior student at Mr. Spurgeon's College. After a period of close study his health gave way, and he returned to Canada as a fellow-worker among children. Health was restored. Here he worked most assiduously, when the Baptist Canadian Missionary Society accepted him as their representative among the Telegus in India, where now he and his wife are doing good work, well spoken of as devoted and zealous. An orphanage is being established, and a library has been given by the Religious Tract Society.

We exclaim, "What hath God wrought!" by fitting these young men, who seemed, before their conversion, very unlikely instruments; but when "chosen," how much his grace can do in fitting them and making them mighty among the heathen. Our earnest desire is that in the Jubilee Home of Industry many other bright gems for his crown may speedily be found, to his praise and glory.

Thousands of bright spirits are met with every Sunday, in Bird Fair, within a few yards of where F—— and G—— were found, and where W—— worked.

Annie Macpherson.

A CHRISTIAN SOLDIER.*

Pessimists who join with Burke in lamenting that the age of chivalry has departed should read this biography. It will teach them that the old order has but given place to the new, and that the chivalry of barbaric days is surpassed by Christian chivalry. The knights of Christ do braver and better deeds than those who derived their inspiration from mediæval codes of honour and the smiles of fair ladies.

Sir Herbert Edwardes was from boyhood a defender of the weak, and a champion of the oppressed. At school he was ever ready to protect any boy who was bullied. His generous nature led him even to bear punishment to save a friend. Though an adept at caricaturing, he never yielded to the temptation of emphasising the weaknesses of his companions. True courtesy and goodness ruled his actions. As the boy so was the man: gentle, knightly, and noble. The story of his life shines with the glory which comes from following in the footsteps of the one perfect Life. His best work was done in India, where, as a writer qualified to judge says, he rendered services to the British power, and shed a lustre around the British name, that have scarcely been surpassed by any of the historic band of whom England is proud. A series of letters, contributed in 1845 to The Delhi Gazette, dealing with the political and military questions of the day, first brought him into notice. They attracted great attention, and were eagerly looked for from week to week. Henry Lawrence read them with delight, and, when he was appointed Resident at Lahore, he sought out the author and took him with him.

This was Edwardes's first step in the ladder of promotion, which he climbed rapidly. Later on he won celebrity while assistant in the management of the province in the neighbourhood of Mooltan. Alone and unaided, with but a single native regiment at his back, he drove the treacherous Moolraj into his fortress, and rescued the district from his evil influence. For this and similar deeds of bravery he received the thanks of Parliament, and the admiring applause of his country. The secret of the strength which accomplished so much in the face of such odds is to be found in the words he used on one occasion, "I knew I was fighting for the right. I asked God to help me to do my duty, and I rode on, certain that He would do it."

We have not space to record his successful negotiations with Cabul, which ensured the safety of the Indian Empire, and placed his reputation as a political administrator beyond doubt. Nor can we dwell on the invaluable services he performed at Peshawur during a protracted season of danger and trial. With calm courage and unfaltering trust in God, he remained at his post, guiding the perplexed, and comforting the downcast. The tale of these years is full of the truest heroism, yet such was the humility of the man that in reviewing it, he wrote: "I feel ashamed and sad at myself to think what a careless and unprofitable life I have led." The warm interest he took in missions was never lessened by the strain of public duties; he found rest in attending the services, and his delight was to do all in his power to strengthen the missionaries. His last act at Peshawur was to give his house as a present to the mission there, so that its rent might be a perpetual subscription to the funds of the mission.

In season and out of season he pleaded for the adoption of a Christian policy in the rule of India. That policy, he maintained, was the only policy of hope. His wide knowledge, varied experience, and persuasive eloquence were all brought to bear on the advocacy of this noble plea. The closing words of his splendid oration at Exeter Hall, in May, 1860, are as applicable now as then: "If you ask me what is safe for the future—if you ask me to indicate a safe and expedient policy to the Government—I say an open Bible. Put it in your schools. Stand avowedly as a Christian Government. Follow the noble example of your Queen. Declare yourselves, in the face of the Indian people, a Christian nation, as her Majesty has declared herself a Christian Queen, and you will not only do honour to her but to your God, and in that alone you will find that true safety rests."

Faith in the Lord Jesus Christ was the guiding star of Sir Herbert's brilliant career. Few men's words and deeds were more moulded by the spirit of the Master. Religion in him was simple and sincere; more a matter of life than of creed. God's will was the motive power in all that he did. Wherever he went he carried with him the fragrance of holiness. Several testimonies to the truth of this is given in these volumes, but the one which impresses us most is that of his servant Khummah, who said, on hearing of his master's death, "I have lived with Sir Herbert all the years he has been in India, and I have followed him everywhere. My master was such a good man!"

The gentle goodness of the man won the hearts of all he came in contact with. His men loved him fervently, and the wild natives were subdued by the charm of his manner. His sympathetic nature was strengthened by the gracious influences of his home. We would not seek to lift the veil which covers the sacredness of love, but no estimate of Sir Herbert's life could be complete without alluding to the wife who was so dear to him. He used to call her "the most precious possession I have in the world"; and over and over again he would say, "A throne would be nothing to me if I lost my Emma." In this biography, which gives to the world a picture of her husband, Lady Edwardes has shown something of what he owed to her constant love and care. With true wifely modesty, she tries to conceal this, but in trying to do so she only makes it shine forth the more brightly.

Sir Herbert Edwardes is one more example of the truth that we live more in deeds than in years. Into the forty-nine years of his earthly career he compressed a record which men of seventy-nine might well envy. He was marvellously versatile. Distinguished as a soldier, as a statesman, as an administrator, as a speaker, and as a writer, he carved his name deep on the history of the Empire to which he devoted his energies. Great in his gifts and services, he was still greater in his humility. He lay low at the feet of Jesus, and because he honoured his Saviour he was honoured by Him. As we close the story of his life, the picture we carry away with us is less that of the fearless soldier and the able statesman than that of the true-hearted Christian who sought in everything he did to glorify his Father in heaven.

We would wish a wide circulation for this biography, but we fear that its size and price will prevent its reaching the multitude. If a new edition is called for—as we hope it will—some of the speeches, letters, and matter dealing with the doings of Edwardes's friends might with advantage be left out. Thus the book could be cheapened without impairing its value as the memorial of a good and great man. Lady Edwardes has done her work with tact and skill. She will reap her reward in knowing that many will be interested in and helped by the life she has so sympathetically portrayed.

Repeat the story o'er and o'er
Thou, whose almighty word
I am now a child of God
Thou didst leave Thy throne
Oh, my Saviour, hear me!

Are you coming home to-night?

Oh, do not let the word depart!
The Lower Lights
None but Christ can satisfy
Light in the darkness, sailor

Dare to be a Daniel

When storms around are sweeping

The Wearing of the Blue

Yield not to temptation

LETTER from Mr. DAVID PUGH, of WELSHPOOL.

This old patient of mine is a grocer at Hope, near Welshpool, and well-known; and has been the means of recommending many others to me. The following is an extract from his letter :—

"March 24, 1887.

"Dear Sir,—I feel it to be my duty to acknowledge the great benefit I have received from your treatment. When I first commenced with it I was completely prostrated with hectic fever, chills, expectoration, cough, and every symptom of Consumption. My doctor pronounced it to be a very bad case. By God's blessing and perseverance with your remedy, a gradual improvement took place, and in about five months I was able to attend to business, and ever since that time I have enjoyed fairly good health.

"I know others who have derived the same benefit; and I recommend your medicine to all suffering from Consumption.

"You can use this as you think proper."

A LIFE SKETCH.
BY W. T. STEAD.

"As one of the host of more or less insignificant fellow-workers in the New Crusade since 1871, I venture to hope that in the glimpses herewith afforded into the inner source of the inspiration which created the movement and guided it to victory, there will be something that is new even to those who themselves were foremost in the fray."—W. Mr. Joseph Cook on "The Traffic."

In a letter published in the New York Voice, Prohibition organ, Mr. Cook says:—

This note I am writing immediately after a long lecture tour in the West and South, and with fresh recollections of the audiences I met, and the many conversations I held at or near the spots of the martyrdom of Haddock and Gambrell. The apathy of the general public in presence of these assassinations is amazing and portentous. It cannot fail, however, to prove true that the blood of the martyrs will be the seed of immense reforms. The liquor traffic, which has more money behind it than slavery ever had, is becoming as murderous as slavery was. It will perish, as slavery did, in its own lawlessness. When the liquor traffic takes the nation by the throat, but perhaps not until then, we shall take it by the throat, and break its neck. A half century of bitter experience taught us that the shifting sands of compromise were no adequate support for our feet in the conflict with slavery.

When the life and death struggle begins between law and order on the one hand, and the liquor traffic on the other, we shall be forced to plant ourselves, not on the treacherous footing of High License, but on the rock of Prohibition. If a license law is on the statute books I, as a friend of law and order, will help to execute it; but, so help me heaven, I will never vote to license either the dram-shop or the brothel. In great cities the gilded saloon, the gamblers' den, and the brothel go together. As Herrick Johnson has said:—"Low license asks for your son; High License for your daughter also." Besides giving legal respectability to an infamous traffic, High License entrenches the liquor power behind the cupidity of the taxpayers. We have all lived to see the abolition of slavery, and it is not incredible that some of us may live to see a yet greater evil, the liquor traffic, made an outlaw by both State and national enactment.

Canon Wilberforce's Tour.

Canon Wilberforce, of Southampton (says The Hampshire Independent), has enjoyed his American trip greatly throughout. The United States was a refreshing place to go to, and his one great wish was to study the practical effect of prohibition in the States, where drink was prohibited. He has gone very carefully into that. The answer to all the lies told about the failure of the Maine Liquor Law was simply this:—Thirty years ago, before prohibition, Maine was the poorest State in the Union. Now it is the richest. The people are so prosperous there that they do not know what to do with their money. The State of Maine saves immense sums annually. Portland city is the centre of Maine, and, of course, drink can be got there. Habitual drunkards, who cannot get any liquor in the country towns, gravitate there, and are able to get drunk surreptitiously. But the search for drink is as close in Portland as for a stolen watch. In the great town cellar they keep all the liquor that is discovered. This is allowed to accumulate for a month, and then poured down the town sewer. In one month there were seized fifty barrels of beer and two hundred bottles of spirits and wine.

Very hearty receptions were given to the Canon in every direction, and among the finest was a great public breakfast given in his honour in Philadelphia by Mr. John Wanamaker. At the various meetings in America and Canada no less than 6,500 pledges were taken, the last of his cards being used at a meeting when he gave an address in the great Chickering Hall, New York, to an immense gathering, with Dr. Talmage occupying the chair, taking no less than 600 pledges. A farewell meeting was held in Philadelphia, and a drawing-room meeting in the afternoon, with a great temperance meeting in the evening. The last place at which the Canon spoke in America was Harvard College. Altogether, since leaving home, the Canon had travelled 10,000 miles. Taking all things into account, the change has proved of much benefit to the Canon, who looks fit for any amount of work in comparison with what he appeared capable of when leaving England.

Rough Diamonds Polished.

AT A MARQUEE MISSION.

The fine weather has favoured the effort we mentioned last week, as proceeding at Canning Town in a marquee erected for the purposes of a special mission, which will close next Monday as far as relates to the removal of the tent. But the workers have decided to carry on the work, and conserve the glorious results.

During the past fortnight we made frequent visits to the tent, both at afternoon and evening meetings, Sundays and week days. A deep spiritual tone has pervaded them, whilst conviction has rested upon the people. Over six hundred of the 3400 new pledges have been taken in the homes of the people, a result which cannot be too highly estimated in this time of seeming apathy among temperance workers; and which must be appreciated when it is considered that they were secured after the nightly meetings, when the pledge-taker had time to consider the matter in his own mind, resulting in settled conviction. One lady, a moderate drinker, and church member of fifteen years' standing, having failed to see her duty in the past, became convinced, and signed the pledge. She said, "My husband has been in an asylum for fifteen years, sent there by the drink; he would have been in a happy home with wife and children now, but for moderate drinking. A man and woman went home to have their last night's "drink," and next day the woman came to sign the pledge, bringing with her the proof of the previous night's drinking—a black eye.

One evening a poor wanderer was attracted to the tent. God touched his heart and he signed the pledge. It is evident he did not reveal his state, and on the following day (Sunday) he wandered about. At night he entered one of the ditches on the Beckton-road, as report says, to wash himself. From weakness and want of food he was too exhausted to dress in the poor rags of clothing he possessed, and lay down as he was on the side of the bank. He was found in that state by the police on Monday morning, and conveyed by them on the ambulance to Plaistow Police Station in the Barking-road, unconscious and dying. They tried to feed him with a teaspoon, but he died from want in a very short time. The only clue to his identification was the pledge-card, which had written on it the name of Pfeffer. Surely this touching incident will rouse to greater earnestness those who are seeking such wanderers. It reveals but the state of hundreds of these men in this vast Metropolis, and such aggressive means may result on reaching many of them.

There is a sustained interest in the nightly meetings, and the numbers increase as the mission draws to a close. At first a great crowd of men representing dock labourers, stevedores, wharf men, and others, gathered round the public-house opposite; now, however, the crowd has dwindled away and most of the men visit the tent. Half of the men in the gas works have signed the pledge, and it is to be hoped the union will mean strength, becoming a power for good in that place.

The women's meetings have been well attended, the East London Women's Christian Temperance Union supplying the speakers in conjunction with the Hoxton Hall Blue Ribbon Gospel Temperance Mission, and local committee, who have acted unitedly in arranging and carrying forward the mission. Most of the ministers in the district have occupied the platform and preached temperance sermons from their own pulpits. Among others Mr. J. F. Shorey, of New York, preached from a local pulpit last Sunday evening.

Already many "rough diamonds" have been rescued and, surrounded by the better influences, are being "polished"; that they may become eminently useful to the cause is the heartfelt wish of every worker. "Q."

Congress on Inebriety.

Dr. Norman Kerr, who presided at the Colonial and International Congress on Inebriety, held last week, said in his opening address that the cure of inebriety is to be found, not in the nostrums of quacks and philanthropists, nor in vegetarianism, but in the adoption of sound methods of treatment, the first being the unconditional withdrawal of the poison, and in the removal, if possible, of the exciting cause. The results of the treatment at the Dalrymple Home, he said, had been satisfactory, more than half of the cases having been restored to their friends. The results are not quite so favourable in the case of females as of males.

Dr. Cameron, M.P., directed attention to the legislation on the subject, and said that, though a select committe of the House of Commons had reported in favour of the habitual control of the drunkard, it had been found impossible to secure assent to compulsion, and, therefore, they had to be content with a temporary and imperfect measure for the treatment of such inebriates as were willing to submit themselves to restraint. Several papers on various phases of the disease and its treatment were read. Among other facts brought out was this, that Colonial legislatures are far in advance of our own in reference to this subject, and especially in caring for the destitute, as well as for the rich, diseased drunkard.

A successful series of open-air temperance meetings has just been held at Aberdeen.

Another effort is being made to procure the release o detective Williams of the "Poole Perjury Case."

The opponents of the Scott Act, in Canada, have not scrupled to resort to violence to prevent its enforcement.

Sir William Gull says a large number of persons in society who were never drunk are daily dying, poisoned by alcohol.

The London and North-Western Railway have opened coffee-bars at all their principal stations for the use of their employés.

It is noticed that the report of the Royal Commission on the depression of trade makes no reference whatever to the annual waste on drink.

The Methodist Recorder says the "grandest use of the Jubilee year" would be the union of the churches for the destruction of the liquor-traffic.

In a letter from the General Post-Office authorities to the Good Templars, Glasgow, it is laid down that drink-selling may be carried on at a post-office, provided it does not interfere with postal duties.

The temperance fête at the Manchester Exhibition was attended by 40,000 people. The programme included public meetings, concerts, and band and choral contests. No intoxicating drinks of any sort were sold during the day.

That rising young writer, Mr. William Mark Noble, gives in last week's Temperance Record a lively account of a day's outing at Wellington College, recently provided by Mr. W. Palmer, of Reading, to the "Help Myself" societies.

Appeals.

Thames Church Mission.—Hard work has worn out our steam launch. The number of visits which the chaplain has been enabled to make is three or four times as many as could have been made without the aid of steam. We appeal for help towards the £600 required to purchase a new launch. Rev. H. Bloomer, secretary, 31, New Bridge-street, Ludgate-circus, E.C.

Bohemia.—Mr. Ruhmer, of Als-Tschau, near Neusabz on the Oder, in Germany, started a Mission Institution in 1886 for the training of teachers in Bohemia and Moravia, which has been doing excellent work. It has hitherto been supported by voluntary contributions, chiefly from Germany, but Mr. Ruhmer feels he must now appeal to sympathising friends in England. Mr. Leitritz, 179, Graham-road, Hackney, will gladly give any further information.

Y.W.C.A. Convalescent and Holiday Fund.—Many are now on the point of returning to their beautiful country seats or starting for pleasant trips. Will not some of these friends remember the hundreds of poor London girls, worn out with months of hard work behind the counter or in close work-rooms, who without their help must spend the whole summer in the stifling atmosphere of hot and dusty streets. Miss F. M. Fraser, hon. sec., 4, Inverness-terrace, London, W.

"THE GREATEST IS LOVE."

1 COR. xiii. 13.

"Circumcision is nothing, and uncircumcision is nothing, but the keeping of the commandments of God."—1 COR. vii. 19.

"For in Jesus Christ neither circumcision availeth anything, nor uncircumcision; but faith which worketh by love."—GAL. v. 6.

"For in Christ Jesus neither circumcision availeth anything, nor uncircumcision, but a new creature."—GAL. vi. 15.

THE great controversy at the beginning of the Gospel was between circumcision and uncircumcision. The Apostle Paul makes a great deal of circumcision and uncircumcision, when they stand for influential realities: as when he testifies to the Galatians that if a man become circumcised Christ shall profit him nothing—he is a debtor to do the whole law. "I would they were even cut off which trouble you." Yet, looking at circumcision and uncircumcision from another point of view, he says three times over that they are nothing; but the keeping of the commandments of God; faith which worketh by love; a new creature—that is everything.

May we not apply the principle here affirmed to other and more modern controversies? Our fathers were keenly divided as to Election and Freewill, and these are very important truths. But that controversy has worn itself out, and we are practically being taught that Calvinism is nothing, and Arminianism is nothing: but the keeping of the commandments of God.

As this controversy is dying out, however, Satan supplies others, that he may divide the saints and conquer them. Premillennialism and post-millennialism, going through the Great Tribulation or not going through it: the bride synonymous with the body or distinct from it; the 144,000 commensurate with the elect, or an election out of the elect—all these are interesting and some are important questions; but in comparison with the great commandment to love one another, and the Lord's intercessory prayer that they all may be one—may we not say concerning these and many other discussions, "Election is nothing, and freewill is nothing; but the keeping of the commandments of God." "In Christ Jesus neither premillennialism availeth anything, nor post-millennialism, but a new creation. "In Christ Jesus neither perfectionism availeth anything, nor unperfectionism, but faith that worketh by love."

The application of this principle is God's panacea for all our contentions. It is in accordance with the Apostle's example and exhortation: "Brethren, I count not myself to have apprehended: but this ONE THING I do—forgetting those things which are behind, and reaching forth unto those things which are before, I press toward the mark for the prize of the high calling of God in Christ Jesus. Let us, therefore, as many as be perfect (or mature) be THUS minded; and if in anything ye be otherwise minded GOD SHALL REVEAL even this unto you." We never shall be of one mind except as God reveals the truth to us. And we are not in a position in which God will or can make his revelations to us, unless, like Paul, we are not counting ourselves to have apprehended; but, concentrating ourselves upon the one needful thing, forgetting and reaching forth, we press toward the mark for the prize of the high calling. Our progress and attainment in the race may be very different one from another, "nevertheless, whereto we have already attained, let us walk by the same rule, let us mind the same thing."

The people are weary of denominationalism. They prefer going to a religious service in a theatre or a music hall to a church or chapel. The old controversies are to a large extent played out. But in this generation a new crop of these tiresome tares has been sown by the enemy, and while we all meet from time to time on one common evangelical or missionary platform, we go back to our little sets and cliques, drawn together by this or that view of conversion, or holiness, or prophecy; and there is more intensity in the narrower clique than on the broader platform. But our own Apostle appeals to us across the centuries: "Brethren, be followers TOGETHER of me, and mark them which walk so as ye have us for an example....Therefore, my dearly beloved and longed for, my joy and crown, so stand fast in the Lord, my dearly beloved." M.

Notes and Comments.

NEXT week we hope to give portrait and sketch of Miss C. Sharman, of the Southwark Orphan Home.

In The Harvest Field there is an account of a great Jain festival at Belagola, where, on the top of a hill, stands a statue of Gomateshwara, in puris naturalibus, 57 feet high. The Editor says:—

> A certain priest was moving about day after day perfectly nude. His appearance caused no horror. Men, women, and children rushed eagerly to see his sacred nakedness, to prostrate themselves, and to offer their gifts...Of course he would find justification in the nude image which all had come to worship. But fanaticism should not be permitted to outrage ordinary decency, and we confess unfeigned surprise at hearing that the chief officers of the Hassan district were present, and saw this without stopping it. Toleration may go a long way, but surely in presence of this it ought to have found its limit

If Government officials permit and look on at such abominations, how can the people believe that our religion is any cleaner than their own? This shows one of the difficulties missionaries have to meet.

The Dnyanodaya, a native paper quoted by The Bombay Guardian, referring to the deputation of missionaries and native gentlemen which waited on His Excellency the Governor, concerning the Abkari laws, says:—

> His Excellency assured the deputation that Government desired to restrain the spread of intemperance, and believed that it was accomplishing it through the present Abkari system...
> The main points in the address of the deputation, however, were hardly touched upon, in the reply. There can be no doubt that the present system encourages liquor-sellers to do their utmost to spread the habit of drinking, and unfortunately their efforts are only too successful in the upper as well as the lower classes. The Governor promised, however, that the Abkari laws should be more faithfully observed in a way to restrain and diminish the evil to its lowest degree possible. We hope the friends of temperance will not leave the subject at this point, but will use their utmost influence to create a pressure on Government and on its officials to make all possible modifications in the Abkari system, as shall tend to diminish the great evil of drink.

This agrees with the statements made by Mr. Samuel Smith, M.P., and Rev. Thomas Evans (page 9).

In the June Contemporary Rev. W. Arthur discusses "Methodist Union," and concludes that it should only be brought to a practical issue if it will serve purposes common to the churches it is desired to unite. There is no doubt another side to the question, but we cannot help recognising the sound, good sense of these words:—

> For my own part it is a settled principle that vital unity has diversity as its counterpart. The idea of the world under one political head, and, its offspring, the idea of a world-Church under one ecclesiastico-political head, is a hallucination that has caused more bloodshed than any other. It defies that Divine ideal of unity among accountable beings, which is that of liberty leading to diversity, and of charity accepting the diversity.

This question of Church Union is also being discussed by American Christians, through the medium of The Century. In the July issue a writer, from the Baptist point of view, thus vigorously states the case for unity in diversity as against organic comprehension:—

> The different denominations to-day have essential union. At present organic union is undesirable. It is possible only by making dangerous compromises. A union which is possible only to those who believe anything or nothing to secure it, is brought at too dear a price. Honest convictions must be respected. Better that men differ honestly than agree by being indifferent to all creeds. Essential union is possible and actual to-day among the great majority of our Protestant churches. There are to-day wider differences among some of the branches of the Roman Church than between some of the different churches in our great Protestant host. There are churches in New York, not Roman, of the same name, which differ more widely in spirit and life than do certain other churches bearing different denominational names. Rationalism and Romanism, in many of their distinctive features, may be found under the same church name and authority. Here is organic but not essential union. When churches of different names work along the line of their honest convictions of the teachings of God's Word, they have essential union; coming near to their common Lord, and coming near to lost men, they come genuinely near to one another. Such union is worth much. An organic union, secured by concessions, compromises, and concealments of honest convictions, is a positive damage to all concerned.

Will missionaries please note this. Mr. George Pearse writes:—"It seems to me that you could do much through THE CHRISTIAN to further the work of missions, by asking missionaries abroad to indicate openings for self-supporting missions, and occupation abroad for godly men and women desiring to maintain themselves while seeking to promote the kingdom of God." Will missionaries kindly respond to this as they find opportunity.

The Spectator holds that the late heavy vote of the French Chamber against exempting students for the priesthood from going into barracks, under conscription, sprung from a bitter anti-clerical sentiment. This feeling it maintains pervades France. Confounding priestism with Christianity, the nation has taken a significant attitude as anti-religious, and The Spectator argues that the French people, without religion, will not only be the most money-seeking, the most cruel, most profligate, and most dangerous people on the face of the globe, but will become the prey of the leader of some new creed.

We do not agree with very much of the article in The Nineteenth Century on "Artisan Atheism"; but, dealing as the paper does with the problem of the alienation of working-men from the Christian Church, there is a good deal in it which deserves attention. The writer—Mr. W. Rossiter—is the Secretary of the South London Free Library, and has considerable knowledge of intelligent artisans. According to him they are not hostile to Christianity, but think that the clergy do not try to understand their class; that in certain movements for free libraries they are conspicuous for their absence; that their thoughts appear to be too much taken up with their position and their incomes; that they do not preach the Christian religion as a crusade against wrong of all kinds among rich and poor alike; and that they do not study the Bible, often knowing less of it than Secularists.

We observe that The Nonconformist treats the article as "a terrible indictment against the system of Establishment." This is scarcely fair, since the writer says that, while among artisans "contempt for the Church is great, Dissenters are despised still more." It becomes both orders of ministers not to throw stones at one another, but to ponder the greatest of all English questions—how to come to a better understanding with working-men. There are ministers of religion who do this with the best results, and society would be little less than revolutionised if it were done by all.

The programme of the Autumnal Session of the Congregational Union, at Leeds, appears likely to contain valuable discussions upon county conferences for the revival of faith and piety in the churches of the body; upon the need of closer pastoral oversight of the young; upon the formation of Young Men's Guilds; and upon the deepening of the spiritual life of students during their college course.

Congregational Colleges are in much agitation just now. Professor Egbert C. Smyth has been dismissed from the Chair of Ecclesiastical History at Andover, U.S, for teaching doctrines in the direction of Universalism; and at Lancashire Independent College three professors have notice to vacate their chairs. This latter step would not appear to be from questions of heresy. We hope it may not be a movement towards what is called Theological liberalism, and taken out of deference to students. The new departure of Congregationalists which extends the non-residential system, and sends junior ministerial students to obtain their classical and mathematical training elsewhere, is the subject of an able letter in last week's Nonconformist and Independent, and will, it is hoped, be looked at all round.

It gives us great pleasure to say that the evangelist to whom we referred on June 24 has confessed his fault, and is, we trust, restored to the confidence of those who know him and the circumstances to which we referred.

Among the numerous ways (writes a correspondent) in which the Jubilee has been celebrated, there has not been one which has touched us more than this, the very smallest we have come across. In a little lodging in a sea-side town, a Christian lady and her pupils have placed nine little children from the very lowest part of London. They were chosen from the poorest families, brought down by railway, are housed and fed in the simplest way; clothing of a suitable nature has been given them, and they enjoy a treat of a few week's duration. The sea air and sea baths, the kind care, the happy, social life, and the simple Gospel teaching, will live in their memories for months.

It is a strange fact that many people who are extremely careful as to the distribution of their money are equally careless as to wasting time; yet as much good may be done by the wise utilisation of the latter as of the former. The Bishop of Oxford has, in a recent charge, illustrated forcibly the want of considerations of economy in this respect, large numbers of earnest persons being engaged in exercising themselves "chiefly on the form of the oath to be taken by the Dean of Arches," when at the same time "the sanctity of marriage, the authority of parents, the general obligations of religion and morals are called in question as they have not been for years past."

Dr. Hatch, preaching at a West-end church a Sunday or two ago, urged very strongly that the world day by day is becoming sadder, that there is little hope in this "increased wretchedness," and that "we are in sight of a depression greater than our time has yet seen, which may lead to social if not political disaster." Asking what should be the attitude of the Christian in the face of the fact, he went on to say that Christianity has had to deal with far darker ages than ours, and has conquered, but that the Christianity which would conquer again in our days must be of the primitive form:—

> It gave men and women a sense of brotherhood, and it will do it again. Every Christian addressed every other as a brother. The sentiment of brotherhood survives, and it is for Christians to realise it. To be brothers, in fact, once again, amid the competition of business—that is the secret of our deliverance from the growing sadness. When we realise that the principle of life is sacrifice, the bond of life is brotherhood, it is then, and then only, that the world will cease to grow sadder.

The Methodist Times hears on high authority, but hesitates to believe, that "the Government is contemplating the introduction of a Bill for the detention in hospital of patients who are suffering from the physical consequence of debauchery. This amounts practically to a renewal of the system embodied in the satanic Contagious Diseases Acts." All the friends of social purity, adds our contemporary, should write at once to their representatives in Parliament.

Last week we had occasion to refer, at length, to the growing boldness of Roman Catholic ecclesiastics among us, in their advocacy and defence of the tenets and practices of their church. Presuming on the ignorance, or the indifference, or the abounding charity of Englishmen, they are endeavouring to throw a veil over certain episodes in the past history of their hierarchy; and to persuade us that instead of being the mother of abominations, drunken with the blood of the martyred saints, the Papacy has been sadly misjudged and calumniated. The move is a daring and desperate one, but we do not believe that it will succeed to any serious extent.

At this juncture, however, we sincerely hail the publication of the admirable series of lectures recently delivered in Exeter Hall, by Mr. Grattan Guinness, on ROMANISM AND THE REFORMATION. During the course of their delivery we furnished our readers with an ample outline of the lecturer's comprehensive argument, but we earnestly commend the perusal of this volume, containing the lectures in their complete and revised form. We do not believe that anywhere else can be found a more sweeping indictment of the Church of Rome, compactly drawn by a master hand, and supported by overwhelming proof from history sacred and profane. It is a book pre-eminently fitted to open the eyes of the present generation as to the true origin, character, and past misdeeds of the cruel, hateful, and irreformable system that sits enthroned in the Vatican. If the rising generation of Britons could be induced to give it a candid and careful study, present day Jesuits might spin their sophisms in vain.

We are glad to see that Mr. Guinness has remodelled the closing chapters, so that the attention of the reader is not diverted from the main question by any discussion of opposing schemes of prophetic interpretation. The learned author begins his book by citing the opinion of an eminent statesman that the battle of the Reformation may soon have to be fought over again. This timely volume is one of the surest guarantees that if that battle has to be fought, it will not be waged in the dark, and that the issue of the conflict cannot for a moment be in doubt. But the facts here set forth must be deeply pondered and treasured up. We hope a cheaper popular edition will soon be called for. (Hodder & Stoughton. 5s.)

The excommunication by the Pope of Father McGlynn, of New York, seems likely to result in greater trouble than Rome appears to anticipate, for a large meeting of Roman Catholics not only denounced the excommunication, but protested against "ecclesiastical interference with the political rights of American citizens." Not a few of these people will probably arrive at the just inference that Rome ventures to lay her hands upon social and political rights, only because she is permitted to interfere with the even more precious spiritual rights.

THE BIBLE AND IRELAND.—From some cause which we are not able fully to explain, says The Christian Irishman, the sale of Bibles and Testaments among Roman Catholics as well as Protestants, is said to be unprecedently great in Ireland at present.

SOLDIERS' CHRISTIAN ASSOCIATION.—This Association, formed at the beginning of the year, is rapidly spreading, and meets a long-felt want. Branches have been formed in many places, and have proved a means of uniting together those who were previously strangers to Christian fellowship. At many of these there is a weekly prayer-meeting; this having been commenced at Sandgate by the late Miss Lucy Papillon. A special plea at these meetings is that a room may be set apart in every barrack, and on board every ship, for prayer, and the reading of God's Word. Such a room would be an immense help to all, to young soldiers especially, and would do much to foster the Christian life. In at least one regiment, there has been a daily prayer-meeting since the formation of the Association, which has had to encounter some opposition. It is hoped that Christians throughout the army will unite in supporting this movement, and also that a Sailors' Association will shortly be formed. All information can be obtained of the honorary secretary, Miss L. S. J. Deacon, Grantham House, Putney Heath, S.W.

THE POSITION OF A HINDU WIDOW, says The Indian Witness, is unenviable, if not indescribable. Among the keener privations of her condition is the bi-monthly fast imposed upon her. This fast is worthy of the name. The poor creatures—may we not call them beasts of burden?—are denied the right to drink water on these fast days. The widow may be a mere child, her health may be frail and her constitution debilitated, still the rule is as inflexible as fate, as unbending as ice. The life of the sufferer may be in the balance, still custom is king and obedience is necessary. A case has just been reported in a Calcutta paper where the "widow was in her teens," and although she was sick, and pleaded pitifully with her relatives for a drop of water to quench a raging fever, the boon was denied, and death ensued. How long shall "neutrality," triumph, and cruel superstitions prosper?

CHRISTIAN WORKERS IN COUNCIL.

A garden party and conference was held on Saturday, at the Homes, in Strangeways, Manchester; it was attended by some hundreds of Christians, representing many departments of Christian service, from Manchester, Liverpool, Bolton, and other towns in the county. About half an hour was first spent in rambling through the grounds and Orphan Homes. Many were the expressions of gratitude as the visitors passed from Home to Home, and room to room, where, at every touch and turn, might be seen the lovingkindness of God in raising up such honoured stewards for Him as Mr. and Mrs. Leonard Shaw and their staff of helpers. Inside, outside, and on every side there were evidences of a never-wearying desire on the part of the "mothers" and co-workers, to promote the happiness and truest welfare of the children who have been bereft of their natural guardians.

The large tent was filled to hear an admirable address by Dr. Barnardo, the subject assigned being, "The Christian Worker fitted for Service." The address was full of practical lessons, taken from the life of Hezekiah, and was listened to with much attention. Mr. G. R. Kirlew, who has for several years been associated with Mr. Shaw, gave a cheery, bright, and inspiring talk on Christian work, in which he urged the need for more hearty co-operation, especially in supplying the great lack of teachers in several of the ragged schools of the city. Two meetings were then held, one in the tent, presided over by Rev. E. H. Radbourne, to hear Rev. Thos. Pigott, a returned missionary, speak on "China's Millions" and her needs, and another under the thorn tree, presided over by Mr. Reginald Radcliffe. At the latter an instructive address was given by Prebendary MacDonald, on "Women's Place and Work in the Church." The speaker in well-chosen words, backed by various passages of Scripture, showed how it had pleased God in old as in modern times to bless the ministry of godly women.

After tea the tent was again well filled (Mr. John Thompson presiding), to hear an address from Major-General Haig, on "Arabia and the Soudan." This graphic and telling missionary address was followed by earnest words from Mr. Reginald Radcliffe, who pleaded for the countless millions of heathen that are perishing for lack of knowledge. At the close of this meeting the white heat of a missionary spirit appeared to be kindled, and some of us hung our heads with shame that at an earlier period in our Christian life we had not bestirred ourselves more on this subject of "telling out among the heathen that the Lord is King."

Mrs. Menzies, the newly elected President of the Northern Confederation of the Young Women's Christian Association, next spoke, on "Young Women in large Cities." Her forcible appeal was backed by well-chosen illustrations, showing the great perils surrounding our working sisters. Mrs. Grimké, who has so long worked for the young women of Manchester, followed with a fervid appeal for consecration of heart and life to this service for the Master, and urged that information might be given respecting towns and villages where there were no Associations for young women, that an effort might be made to form them.

The tent meetings closed with a brief address on Bands of Hope and Juvenile Temperance Societies by Mr. Hind-Smith, who enlarged upon the fact that he believed no better Institution (except the Y.M.C.A.) had been established during Her Majesty's reign than this, which now numbered something over thirteen thousand societies, and had over one million six hundred thousand enrolled members. He urged that "Prevention is better than Cure," and "Example than Precept," and recommended all Christian workers and parents to be true in bridging over the difficult period of youth, giving every encouragement by which they might keep them from the drink; he further recommended all to show their colours by wearing "the bit of blue."

The closing meeting of this Conference was held in the large room of No. 2 Home, where the subject of "Co-Operation in Christian Work" was spoken to. Much was said by Mr. J. W. McGill as to the crowding and overlapping of Christian work. He strongly recommended that there should be more systematic union, and a better organised plan of reaching the eight millions of people who are to be found within forty-two miles of Manchester. Mr. L. K. Shaw spoke of the necessity for more real and heartfelt consecration to the Lord's service. Mr. Hind-Smith dwelt upon the great need there was for personal, prayerful, and persistent effort in dealing with individual souls. Testimony was borne by several ladies who are engaged in various departments of Christian activity, special mention being made of kindness shown to the employées at the Exhibition in providing rooms for rest, &c.

Y.M.C.A. CONFERENCE.

The twenty-first annual Conference of the North-eastern District Union of Y.M.C.A. Associations was held last week at Bishop Auckland. Mr. C. S. Wilson, of Sunderland, presided, and drew attention to the danger of giving too prominent a place to secular objects and secular work. Important as were self-improvement and recreation, they should take care, while providing for these, they did not "drown out" religious life.

The annual district report, giving the returns received from twenty-five associations, showed an increase of 212 members, and 82 associates over the numbers returned last year from twenty-three associations. The aggregate number of members and associates, 4164, is almost double that of ten years ago.

The Bishop of Durham pointed out that the first object to be kept in view is the promotion of their spiritual welfare. After counselling the members as an Association to steer clear of party politics, he drew attention to the article by Canon Farrar in The Contemporary Review on the liquor traffic in Africa. This subject he earnestly commended to their notice as one deserving most serious consideration, with a view to some remedial action.

Dr. Bruce spoke of such Associations as showing the oneness of Christianity.

Mr. Robert Burn, general secretary of the Aldersgate-street branch, London, also spoke on "How to win and keep young men," and insisted on the necessity of making the institutes as attractive as possible.

SUNDAY POSTAL WORK.—A circular just issued by the Lord's Day Observance Society urges some important pleas for the cessation of postal labour, and suggestions for lessening it, should cessation not be carried. Principal among the former is the hardship caused to the post-office servants, and the fact that an immense mass of petitions have been presented to Parliament against its continuance. A very large portion of this Sunday work is, it should be known, caused by the posting of trade circulars, book packets and newspapers, and by racing and gambling telegrams for Sunday delivery. The alternative suggestions cover a considerable amount of ground, and chief amongst them is that the post-office should permit senders of letters to determine that these shall not be delivered on Sundays. Another authorises postmasters to detain circulars, &c., till Monday.

OUR SHOWPEOPLE.—Dear Sir,—At this time of the year, when so many fairs and races are being held, and showpeople gather together in such large numbers, may I ask the sympathy of Christian friends in arranging out-door meetings and free teas for this class of people on the Sabbath day. Numerous temperance societies, city missions, and private friends have most earnestly taken up this work in Yorkshire, Lancashire, Wales, and Scotland, also in London and other places. But there are so many fairs held in the far South and the Midland counties that our Mission has not yet reached. I shall thankfully give every information respecting this work, and forward a report and copy of our showman's quarterly paper, "The Caravan," to any address.—Yours in service, Elizabeth Millington, Hon. Sec.

THE CROWN OF LOVE.

By HARRIET McEWEN KIMBALL.

How can they live when earthly hopes take wings,
Who have no hope on high?
Who in life's desert find but bitter springs;
Who never see their woes to blessing turn,
Nor feel their yearning hearts within them burn
Because Thou, Lord, art nigh!

How can they live through days of loneliness,
When friends, however dear,
Seem far away; when loss and grief oppress,
And human sympathy is all in vain
To help us bear the burden or the pain,
If thou, Lord, are not near?

How can they live, who, sinning, never seek
To have their sins forgiven?
Who, knowing that the strongest yet are weak,
Ask not thy grace and never know thy peace—
The gift unspeakable of thy release,
The pardon sealed in Heaven!

How can they live who never, never feed—
Poor starving souls!—on Thee?
Needing so much who will not own their need;
Who empty go from barren year to year,
When Thou compassionate dost draw so near
Our Daily Bread to be!

My heart makes moan for them: How can they live?
It must be, dearest Lord,
Because Thou art so gracious Thou dost give
Even to those who ask not; and dost show
Pity for all; blessing thy very foe;
Sheathing in love thy sword.

So gracious, Lord! and yet to such as I
Art Thou less gracious? Nay!
The cry that should be theirs must be my cry:
Have mercy, Lord! They strangers are to Thee;
Not so am I! Have mercy, Lord, on me,
Lest I be cast away!

While Thou with me so patiently dost plead
How soon my strivings end!
While Thou dost pardon, strengthen, solace, feed,
How cold I am to all thy tenderness!
O crown of love, that Thou shouldst spare and bless
And treat me as a friend!

OBITUARY.

BISHOP STEVENS, PENNSYLVANIA, U.S.A.

The Church of Christ in America has sustained another severe loss in the death of this prelate, who was chosen as bishop of the Protestant Episcopal diocese of Pennsylvania twenty-five years ago. He was a devout and earnest man of God, and took a deep interest in Sunday-school work. He had for some time been president of the Pennsylvania Bible Society, and was greatly beloved and honoured.

REV. W. POOLE BALFERN.

After a prolonged period of weakness, followed by a few days of severe illness, this faithful minister of the Gospel was called hence on Sunday evening, July 3. His first pastorate was at Bow, in 1854. Subsequently at Spring Vale, where he built a chapel at his own cost, and at Norlands Chapel, Notting-hill, he laboured for the Master with much acceptance from his people. Weakness of health compelled his removal to Brighton, where for some time he took the oversight of Sussex-street Baptist Church, which, however, he was not able long to continue. He was well known as the author of many poems, some of which have appeared in our own columns, and of several books full of quiet pathos and power. The "Thought-Crumbs for Young Preachers," which have lately been appearing in The Baptist, were also from his facile pen.

WINTER AMONG HEATHEN WOMEN.—Mrs. Meredith is preparing to send out in October next three sisters, one of whom is an M.D., to labour for the winter amongst heathen and Mahomedan women. Ladies who desire to join this company, or to form others, should communicate with her. All who are going on this mission will be invited to live together during the month of September, in the Missionary Institute, 143, Clapham-road, S.W., to unite in prayer, and preparation for the work to which they are called.

Notes on Daily Readings.

SUNDAY, JULY 17.—PROVERBS XII.

9.—He that is despised, and hath a servant, is better than he that honoureth himself, and lacketh bread.—"Despised," i.e., as a poor man, for social, not for moral, reasons. When it is a question of domestic comfort versus display, choose comfort. It seems, then, that in Solomon's day, as in ours, there were foolish folk who would do anything—even starve themselves, their children, or their servants—if only they could be "grand."

10.—A righteous man regardeth the life of his beast.—Kindness to animals is here laid down as a distinct attribute of righteousness. In considering them we serve that God whose tender mercies are over all his works. They are his creatures, given for our use, and entrusted to our care. He that is cruel to these dumb beasts shows, by that cruelty, how little he understands God, or his own responsibility. He shows, too, how unlike he is to God. To be cruel is to be mean and wicked. "Consistent kindness to brute creatures is one of the marks by which a really merciful man is known."—Arnot. "Blessed are the merciful: for they shall be called the children of God." Observe God's care for dumb beasts as shown in the following:—Deut. xxii. 7; xxv. 4; Ps. xxxvi. 6; clv. 9; Jonah iv. 11; Matt. x. 29.

13.—The just shall come out of trouble.—As the Word never promises that the just shall never get into trouble—but very much to the opposite—no good man need be surprised to find himself there. The promise is that he shall not be always there. He shall come out. Why? Because it is written, "I will be with him in trouble," and where the presence of God is, there is salvation. "Many are the afflictions of the righteous, but the Lord delivereth him out of them all."

18.—There is that speaketh like the piercings of a sword: but the tongue of the wise is health.—How many speak to wound! How few to heal! Words can pierce and cut like swords. As a single sword-thrust may maim for life, so a single sentence may wound irreparably a tender heart. It is very easy to utter words that wound, especially to the clever and sarcastic, or to those who think themselves such. Far better be thought stupid and be kind, than be brilliant and cutting. We should both pray and labour for the rare gift of healing speech, while we renounce and fear the habit of attempting clever sarcasms.

MONDAY, JULY 18.—PROVERBS XIII.

7.—There is that maketh himself rich, yet hath nothing.—"The more an avaricious man has, the more he wants. Content is the poor man's wealth; desire the rich man's poverty." "Nothing can fill the heart of man but He that made it."—Bishop Hales. There is that maketh himself poor, and hath great riches.—"He loseth nothing that loseth not God."—Herbert. Christ Jesus made himself poor—"of no reputation"—"that we through his poverty might become rich"; "Wherefore God hath highly exalted Him, and given Him a name which is above every name."

12.—Hope deferred maketh the heart sick: but when the desire cometh, it is a tree of life.—That fulfilling of desire which is a tree of life, "belongs only to the hope of the holy. Many discover, when at last they reach their object, that it is a withered branch, and not a living tree. When a human heart has been set on perishable things, after the sickness of deferred expectation comes the sorer sickness of satiated possession. If the world be made the portion of an immortal spirit, to want it is one sickness, and to have it is another. The one is a hungry mouth empty, and the other a hungry mouth filled with chaff: there is no peace to the wicked."—Arnot. How different when the object desired is God Himself! Holy men and women were faint with longing for the coming of Him who was the Desire of all nations. But when He came, there was no satiated desire—only satisfaction, deep and unutterable, breaking out into the song, "Lord, now lettest Thou thy servant depart in peace," &c. So with those who hunger for a personal experience of God's pardon and love. "Hope deferred maketh the heart sick." But they persevere, the desire cometh, and when it comes there comes with it a great surprise that the peace it brings is so full and satisfying. Similarly with those who hunger for our Lord's second Advent. When He comes, He will be a Tree of Life to all that wait for Him.

TUESDAY, JULY 19.—PROVERBS XIV.

2.—He that walketh in his uprightness feareth the Lord: but he that is perverse in his ways despiseth Him.—Practical godliness, and practical atheism, contrasted. As the best profession of godly fear is a steadfast godly walk, so perverse wilfulness in sin is the surest sign of true atheism. There need be no profession of unbelief, but even the opposite. The man who deliberately chooses evil in the sight of God, proves that he despiseth Him. He acts either as though God were not, or as though He were not a Being to be feared by the evil-doer. The man may be a defender of the faith against speculative atheism: not the less is he, being perverse in his way, a genuine atheist.

6.—A scorner seeketh wisdom, and findeth it not, &c.—"It is the constant profession of those who reject the Bible that they are seeking truth. Their likeness is taken here from life. They seek wisdom, but do not find it. They want the first qualification of a philosopher, a humble, teachable spirit...Those who scorn the wisdom from above, seek laboriously for the wisdom that is beneath. The name 'Secularist' is adopted. 'Secularism' is the Latin for this-world-ism, and means, attend to the world that you are now in, and let the next alone."—Arnot. This is supreme folly, seeing it is by faith in the unseen that men steer a right course across the otherwise pathless sea of time.

9.—Fools make a mock of sin.—There is no folly like this, for sin is linked for evermore with sorrow, shame, and death. Sin built hell, ravaged Eden, ruined our race, and crucified our Lord. How desperately foolish must he be to trifle with sin! "He that hath slight thoughts of sin, never had great thoughts of God." Christians must be good haters, for "the fear of the Lord is to hate evil."

WEDNESDAY, JULY 20.—PROVERBS XV.

1.—A soft answer turneth away wrath, &c.—Observe the tremendous stress laid by the Bible, and by this book in particular, on the importance of right speech, and the harm, and folly, and sin of careless and evil speech. Take this one chapter alone, though there are others that say quite as much, if not more, about the power of the tongue. Verse 1 contrasts gentle and forbearing with exasperating words; verse 2, the knowledge spoken by the wise, with the abounding foolishness of the fool; verse 4, the healing balm of a wholesome tongue, with the crushing, wounding power of perverseness; verse 18, the inflammation caused by the wrathful with the blessed appeasement and peace which self-control and gentleness produce. The blessing of wise and timely words is extolled in verse 23, and the pleasantness of pure words in verse 26. Verse 28 reminds us that wise and helpful words are not got without trouble. Evil words are, for the mouth of the wicked poureth out evil things. But he who would bless others with wholesome, healing utterance must watch the door of his lips, and rouse himself to earnest diligence and thought. The heart of the righteous studieth to answer. Being righteous, he knows the vast responsibility of speech, and, being righteous, he rouses himself to the labour of true, careful, and kindly thought: he studieth—his heart studieth—to answer.

THURSDAY, JULY 21.—PROVERBS XVI.

2, 3.—All the ways of a man are clean in his own eyes; but the Lord weigheth the spirits. Commit thy works unto the Lord, and thy thoughts shall be established.—"The first of these two verses tells how a man goes wrong, and the second how he may be set right again. He is led into error by doing what pleases himself; the rule for recovery is to commit the works to the Lord, and see that they are such as will please Him. If we weigh our thoughts and actions in the balances of our own desires, we shall inevitably go astray. If we lay them before God, and submit to his pleasure, we shall be guided into truth and righteousness."—Arnot.

8.—Better is a little with righteousness, than great revenues without right.—Truly a noble sentence, and one sadly needed in this age and land of eager mammon-worship! But do we heartily accept it as God's truth? Do we really set doing justly before doing profitably? When wealth means comfort, rest, independence, artistic and delightful surroundings, power, and possibly health, it needs all a good man's faith in the worth of righteousness to be content with comparative poverty. Yet few things are more needed to-day than a band of noble, high-minded men who have a grand unworldliness about them that keeps them keenly alive to the supreme value of a pure and holy character.

FRIDAY, JULY 22.—PROVERBS XVII.

7.—Excellent speech becometh not a fool.—It is part of the punishment of ill-doing that it forbids excellent speech. When the hands are filthy the lips are not free to speak righteousness. The fitness of things would be outraged, the speaker condemning himself and playing the hypocrite.

14.—The beginning of strife is as when one letteth out water.—As a tiny leak in the embankment of some great reservoir grows larger, minute by minute, till the drops become a rill, the rill a stream, and the stream a raging, devastating torrent, so one angry word may lead to another, so acts follow words, and these again lead to other acts and words fiercer and more resentful, until a whole society is devastated. Only the heedless and the foolish trifle with strife. Wise men will bear much and travel far to avoid the beginnings of anger. At first, it is easy to stop: one gentle word will do it; but once allowed to gather force, it rages like a flood.

17.—A friend loveth at all times, and a brother is born for adversity.—We have here two brief and practical definitions. A friend is one who changes not, but loves always; and a brother is one whose kindness is best known when most needed—in adversity. He stands by one in the dark and cloudy day. Comparatively few friends—few brothers even—reach this high ideal. Thank God, there is one Friend, one Brother, we may all have as ours, who more than answers to this description. See John xv. 13, 14; Matt. xii. 50; Heb. ii. 11; John xiii. 1; Heb. iv. 14—16; xiii. 8.

SATURDAY, JULY 23.—PROVERBS XVIII.

9.—He that is slothful in his work is brother to him that is a great waster.—Their sin is similar. Waste is sin, and so is laziness—sin against God and man, and one's own nature. They are brothers, because their sin has the same root—self-indulgence. Also, because it leads to the same result—ruin. "Wilful waste makes woeful want," and "The slothful man shall suffer hunger."

10—12.—The name of the Lord is a strong tower: the righteous runneth into it, and is safe. The rich man's wealth is his strong city, and as a high tower in his own conceit. Before destruction the heart of man is haughty.—Contrast the two towers: the one, the name of the Lord—i.e., the Lord Himself; the other, the great man's wealth. The one hides in a warm, loving Person; the other in mere possession. The personal Refuge cannot fail, either in power or in love; the wealth must fail, sooner or later. Hiding in God, the righteous is humbled, satisfied, blessed. Hiding in his wealth, the rich man grows haughty and hard. His soul is starved. Thus he fits himself for the destruction that follows pride.

13.—He that answereth a matter before he heareth it, it is folly and shame unto him.—A golden word of wisdom which each reader should both learn by heart and take to heart. It applies to every department of life, rebuking well our much rashness of speech, and our frequent haste in judgment. Family life, but especially social and political life, would often be marvellously sweetened if this maxim were adopted as law. It is folly and shame to judge a cause before you have heard the other side, to speak before you know, and to speak, as is too probable, with far more self-assertion and intolerance than he who looks all round the matter.

EVANGELISTIC NOTES.

The Evangelistic Work begun among the Chicago churches by Mr. Moody is to be kept up during the summer by Major Whittle.

Rev. John Vine has been preaching the Gospel to large congregations, at the great Assembly Hall, Mile End, with blessing to not a few, believers and unbelievers.

Major Cole has been evangelising in the State of Missouri during the whole of this year. In that time 4500 persons have professed to accept Christ as their Saviour.

Rev. John McNeil, of McCrie Roxburgh Church, Edinburgh, has taken a circus for Sunday evening services, and this place, which holds something like 2000 people, is crowded at every meeting.

Blackdown Hills Mission.—For the past three weeks tent work has been in operation daily at Dorchester, and Bampton, Devon, in connection with this Mission. GEORGE BRADLEY.

Clayhidon, Wellington, Somerset.

Preston.—A month's mission has just been held at St. Mark's, Preston, by Mr. A Wolfe, diocesan evangelist for Manchester. Meetings, both outdoor and indoor, were held nearly every night. Many persons were helped and blessed, and several professed to accept Christ as their Saviour.

The Upper Clapton Local Evangelistic Mission have again erected their Gospel tent for the summer months. During the past week the opening services have been conducted by Mr. J. B. Wookey. The presence and power of the Holy Spirit were felt in each meeting; many have accepted Christ as their Saviour and found joy and peace in believing in Him.

Beaumaris, North Wales. — Mr. Robert Westall, of the Children's Special Service Mission, held services here from June 15 to 28. The chapels here have united meetings after service each Sunday evening, held in succession at the different chapels. At two of these meetings Mr. Westall spoke with much power. There were Bible readings, at which Christians were much strengthened and cheered. Mr. Thomas Walker, and Mr. G. B. Denton, of Beaumaris, assisted Mr. Westall, who has now gone to the mountains, near Penmaenmawr.

Cullybackey, Co. Antrim.—Open-air meetings for the preaching of the Gospel are announced to be held in the grounds of Mr. Wm. Young, Finaghy, Cullybackey, Ireland, on Wednesday and Thursday, August 10 and 11. Addresses will be delivered by speakers from different parts of the kingdom. Rev. J. Hudson Taylor, Lord Radstock, and Mr. Reginald Radcliffe are amongst those who will attend and speak. In the afternoon of each day there will be a meeting for dealing with inquirers, and others for believers, for the promotion of holiness, and for the consideration of Christ's claims upon his people for the extension of his kingdom in all lands. The prayers of God's people are asked for a blessing on these meetings, and for an outpouring of the Holy Ghost on the land.

REV. W. HASLAM will be at St. Mary's-in-the-Castle, Hastings, during July and August.

CHILDREN'S SCRIPTURE UNION.—The following are the portions for the ensuing week:—Sunday, July 17, 1 Sam. xxx. 1—15; Monday, July 18, 1 Sam. xxx. 16—26; Tuesday, July 19, 1 Sam. xxxi. 1—13; Wednesday, July 20, Matt. ii. 1—12; Thursday, July 21, Matt. ii. 13—23; Friday, July 22, Matt. iii. 1—17; Saturday, July 23, Matt. iv. 1—11.

SEAMEN'S FRIEND SOCIETY, BELFAST.—The annual meeting of this Society was held last week. The report, read by Mr. Thomas Sinclair, drew attention to the great work that had been done for sailors during the half-century of the Society's existence. This Society meets the sailor on his arrival in port, welcomes him to Christian fellowship, and, by the united ministry of friendship and religion, offers to be his good Samaritan. An important feature of the work is the friendly oversight of families of seamen residing in Belfast, through which port, it is said, 50,000 sailors pass every year. Acknowledgment was made of the work done by numbers of young men, and of the missionary labours generally. Rev. Dr. Johnson referred especially to the great success which has attended the labours of Rev. Robert Crawford amongst the seamen of the port, and to the obligation of Christians to those whose occupation so often kept them from religious instruction.

Letters to the Editor.

BAPTISM AND CONVERSION.

DEAR SIR,—It may help the consideration of this subject to refer to the following quotations from the Life of Bishop Hannington.—Yours truly, CHEYNE BRADY.

Extracts from Bishop Hannington's Life.

Page 318.—After the services of the day I had a long talk with Bishop Smythies; with all his ritualism, he is strong on the point of conversion, and is very particular about baptism and communion not being administered before conversion, either to heathen or professing Christians.

Page 322.—I find the custom has been to baptize children up to the age of eight years, who have been received from slave dhows, &c. Hence they get Christian names, and are, of course, educated as far as is possible as Christians, and go out into the world as such. The education they receive, good as it is, in too many cases does not seem to lead to conversion; and so these go forth, some of them with very bad characters, yet bearing the name of converts and Christians. This is, of course, the history of the Church at home, and its bane, but might surely be prevented here without our being accused of being Baptists. Bishop Smythies, I rejoice to find, feels very strongly, as I do, and insists that in the churches of the interior there shall be no baptism till after conversion.

HINDOO PRIESTS.

SIR,—I read with pleasure the interesting extract of Mr. Lambert's address, in THE CHRISTIAN of June 24, p. 18, but was grieved to see the statement that "in Benares there were 40,000 men consecrated to the service of their gods, and their influence told, because they had given up all worldly enjoyment, and consecrated themselves to the service." Christian ministers were urged to imitate them in self-denial.

Now, Sir, my wife and I have lived nineteen years and six months in India. We have conversed with missionaries who have been twenty-five and thirty years working as missionaries, and we agree that Hindoo priests are more wicked, more foul, than the other natives of India. As for me, I have visited their homes for years, and treated them when ill, and must say, with other missionaries, that Hindoo priests are greedy leopards; their influence is a blight, their life devoted to wickedness. I dare not put on paper what they commonly do; their life is vile. Mr. Lambert's statement is liable to confirm the ungodly in their idea that Hindooism is as good as Christianity, and a Hindoo priest a better man than a minister of Jesus Christ.—Yours in our Saviour,

"WHEREIN MILLENARIANS ARE WRONG."

DEAR SIR,—As Mr. Varley had not read my little book, but only my answer to Canon Fausset, he was not aware that I am not opposed to the doctrine of the Premillennial Coming, to which the greater part of his letter is devoted. I shall therefore only notice those parts in which he seeks to show that the Father is not pledged to make Christ's enemies his footstool before his Second Coming.

The first argument is, that when He bade the Son sit on his right hand till He made his enemies his footstool, all that He meant was, that He "empowered" the Son to do it Himself. To that I answer: (1) As the Father promised to make Christ's enemies his footstool, if He fail to do it his promise would be broken; (2) if the Son, instead of waiting till the Father fulfilled his promise, shall rise from his throne, and come down and do it Himself, He would disobey God; and (3) to say that the Father "empowered" Him to disobey, instead of solving the difficulty, only adds a third improbability.

The second argument is, that "to say that the Father's work is purely evangelistic is fanciful: He is the God of judgment also." To that I answer, John v. 22: "The Father judgeth no man, but hath committed all judgment to the Son," and John vi. 44: "No man can come to Me, except the Father which hath sent Me draw him."

But even though we were to set aside this Psalm, I have shown that there is an overwhelming amount of evidence in other Scriptures to prove that the Gospel is the one and only cure for the world's misery, and that God's word and honour are irrevocably pledged to its success. I have also shown that all the apparent "difficulties" are caused by mistranslation, and disappear when examined in the original.

The two inducements which Peter held out to the Jews to repent and believe were, first, that their sins might be blotted out; the second was that God might the sooner send Christ to earth again (see R.V.). If so, then every enemy that is brought to the footstool is a barrier taken out of the way; and there are few men who have been more honoured of God in "hasting" that joyful day than our respected brother. But if, on the contrary, it be true (which God forbid) that Christ cannot come till faith has disappeared from the earth, then one of the greatest hindrances to his coming that I know is Mr. Varley himself.

Edinburgh, July 5. JAMES GALL.

YOUNG MINISTERS AND CREEDS.

SIR,—In your issue of June 24 you quoted from the letter of "A Public Servant" in The Pall Mall Gazette, which stated that, "In the voluntary churches there are now but few of the younger and more active ministers who are not at one with the Unitarian creed in its essential particulars." I have waited to see if any contradiction of this statement appeared in your columns. I believe the assertion to be most untrue and harmful.

With regard to the great Methodist Churches it is ludicrously false. The Congregationalists are, I suppose it is admitted, more given to "advanced" views than any other of the numerically important Nonconformist denominations. It is uncertain and risky to make any computation from personal experience, though that experience may be extensive. Undoubtedly there are a considerable number of the younger and more active, and also of the younger and less active, Congregational ministers, whose belief is much nearer, in many important respects, to that of the Unitarians, than was the faith of their fathers. But I feel convinced that to say the views of one in ten of them are practically Unitarian, would be greatly to exaggerate the tendency in that direction. The Baptists occupy a position intermediate, in this matter, between the Pædo-Baptists, Congregationalists, and the Methodists.—I enclose my card, and am, Sir, very sincerely,

A TRINITARIAN NONCONFORMIST MINISTER.

SAILORS' WELCOME HOME.—Lord Radstock presided over the recent monthly meeting of the "Christian Life-boat Crew," and delivered an address on "The true Christian — his responsibilities and his duties." The address was replete with sound advice to Christian workers, and will not be soon forgotten by those who had the privilege of listening to it. His lordship complained that the main fault of Christian workers is that they are always superseding the Lord, and getting before Him, instead of waiting upon Him for his instructions as to how to act. The efforts put forth by the lifeboat crew for the spiritually shipwrecked continue to be greatly blessed. Branches are about to be inaugurated at Lowestoft, Smyrna and Boston.

QUEEN'S PARK CONGREGATIONAL CHURCH.—The work carried on at this place of worship in the Harrow-road (Rev. Charles Leach, pastor), has been so successful, that a new church capable of seating about 1200 persons, is in course of erection, and will be opened very soon. In the Sunday-schools there are over six hundred scholars, and many other agencies—a large Band of Hope and Temperance Society, Bible-classes for young men and young women—are actively carried on in this rapidly growing district, the population of which has been increased by more than 50,000 during the last fifteen years. Mr. Leach intends shortly to commence a series of Sunday afternoon half-hour lectures to working people, of a character similar to those given by him for many years in the Birmingham Town-hall with such marked success. Communications should be sent to Rev. C. Leach, 56 Fernhead-road, London, W.

BIBLE SOCIETY OF SCOTLAND.—The Western Board at their last meeting were much occupied with matters connected with their agencies in China. Rev. W. H. and Mrs. Murray took farewell on their return to Peking, and were commended to God in prayer, led by the venerable Rev. David Russell, one of the four surviving Directors who in 1863 gave Mr. Murray his first appointment in connection with Bible work. The Board accepted the services of two young men, both of Glasgow, who will shortly proceed to Central China, and one of whom has been able to offer to maintain himself there at his own charges. An occasional agent in South China reported good sales among the Ningpo fishing fleet. The men engaged in it are not easily got at, but he had been able to hire a boat with two men for the small charge of two shillings per day, and thus to visit the fleet and sell the Scriptures to the fishermen.

WAYSIDE SERVICE.

It may encourage some timid workers in the Lord's vineyard to hear how the Lord has gone before me and prospered my way, when taking a lodging for a few days or a week, when needing a little rest or change. Each time (with one exception) I was accompanied by a lady friend. On one occasion when evening arrived, I said if the household were used to assemble for family prayers, I should be very glad to join them; if not, I should be pleased if they would join us. The landlady came in, and we had a short portion of Scripture and prayer together. After we rose from our knees, she asked if we would mind coming into her niece's room, who had been an invalid for years from double curvature of the spine. And each night during the remainder of the week we assembled, six in number, in the invalid's room.

At another lodging, the day before we left, I heard a consumptive cough, and asked if I could see the sufferer; this request was granted. I spoke to her of Jesus, and when I asked her if she had a good hope for eternity, her reply was, "That is just what I long for." I endeavoured to tell her clearly and simply God's message of love, but I had no opportunity of seeing her again. One lodging was kept by a very respectable middle-aged woman. Having previously asked if any of her family or household would join us at prayers, she appeared at the appointed time, accompanied by two grown-up sons.

Once, when alone, I prayed that God would direct me to a lodging where I might be allowed to cheer one of his children. After I had been there a short time, I entered into conversation with the landlady. She told me she had been in much trouble—that she had prayed that God would send her a lodger, as she was in real need, but her prayer had been unanswered, and she was thinking that God had forgotten her. The very fact of my arrival had been to her a proof of his faithfulness, and each morning and evening we met together, with the little girl who lived with her, for the Word of God and prayer. When I left a few days after she was so bright, and I thanked God that He had permitted me to give her a lift heavenward. At other places I have had friendly talks with the children of the family where I lodged, inviting them to take the Good Shepherd as their Friend and Saviour. At one place a little boy got leave from his mother to stay up late one evening that he might come in for prayers.

The seed thus sown in weakness awaits the day when our Master has said, that "he that soweth and he that reapeth shall rejoice together." X. Y.

KASHMIR MEDICAL MISSION.—Twenty years ago, a young Scotchman, Dr. Elmslie, laid the foundations of this work, and the fruit of his faith and patience has been silently ripening in the years since, in a rude shed, he first treated the native patients who came to him. An interesting pamphlet, issued by the C.M.S., gives "a glimpse in the hospital wards," and shows us with what care the natives are tended, and how also earnest and prayerful effort is made to teach them of Jesus, whose gracious invitation, "Come unto Me all ye that are weary and are heavy laden" is inscribed in Persian character over the gateway of the hospital.

MISSION TO TRAMPS.—Since Miss Barnett sent forth her appeal to the masters of workhouses on behalf of tramps, libraries have been formed and sent to many unions, and in some of them ladies regularly visit the wards in which these unfortunates find a temporary shelter. In many cases blessing has resulted from the efforts thus put forth. The master of one workhouse writes that these "precious books" are read with avidity, and are "productive of good discipline, decorum, and quietude." He adds, "God has placed within the circle of your influence thousands, nay, tens of thousands, of helpless, despised, and broken-hearted creatures." The personal help of Christian friends will be cordially welcomed by Miss Barnett, 2 Eldon-villas, Battledown, Cheltenham.

A VETERAN MISSIONARY'S TALK.

Dr. Batcheler, of Midnapore, says The Indian Witness, gave one of the most impressive five minute talks at the last missionary prayer meeting that we have ever heard. It was full of facts and lessons gathered from a long and useful life. He emphasised the duty of preaching the Gospel. There are many kinds of labour in mission fields; but evangelistic work is of such paramount importance that it appears very clear to us that every real missionary ought to engage in it. Why should missionaries who can be kept out of evangelistic work be sent to mission fields? With the deafening cries of the perishing in our ears, and the doors of usefulness wider and more numerous than all can fill, how can ministers ask exemption from the task for which the ministry exists, and to perform which they have taken solemn vows? Educators are needed; the tables must not be neglected; but if the few missionaries divide up the work so that some permanently shelve their pulpit gifts, the work will languish. A conviction of duty and pressure of responsibility are needed by every missionary; like Jeremiah who said "I will not make mention of Him, nor speak any more in his name. But his word was in my heart like a burning fire shut up in my bones, and I was weary with forbearing and I could not stay."

Another point touched by the venerable missionary was that of making mission work the life work. He could not say that no missionaries nowadays come to the field to stay, but he looked back sadly to the time when he was young, when all who entered on a missionary career devoted themselves to it for life. He said that when he was at home recently on furlough, he felt out of his place and idle, and longed to be among the heathen, preaching the Gospel of light and salvation, as long as there was opportunity, in the kingdom of darkness. His words were very impressive, and had there been more incipient Duffs and Careys and Longs to hear them, there would, doubtless, have been silent resolutions formed to sever every tie, to cast aside every weight, to look no more back, but to spend and be spent for the world's great need, and to find through a grave the rest that remaineth to the people of God.

REQUESTS FOR PRAYER.—For blessing on services at Summertown, Oxford, by Mr. John Elliott, July 10 to 24.——For much blessing on a proposed effort by the British Society for the Propagation of the Gospel among the Jews, to carry the Gospel to the many thousands of Jews in Canada and the United States.

MRS. PARSONS, of Walthamstow, wishes to make known, in answer to many inquiries, that she is not connected with a Home at Eastbourne, conducted by a lady of the same name, the Orphanage at Eastfield House, Walthamstow, being the only institution which she carries on. On Monday next at 7 p.m. a thanksgiving and prayer meeting will be held there, to which Christian friends are invited.

SUNDAY, JULY 17, has been set apart as a day of special prayer for foreign missionary work in connection with the Y.W.C.A. It is hoped that a missionary subject may be chosen for the Bible classes, held on that day, and that at the close there may be a time of earnest pleading for the stirring up of a missionary spirit, and for a blessing on the work now being carried on in foreign fields.

MR. ROBERT RAE.—After nearly fifty years' devoted service to the temperance cause, Mr. Robert Rae, secretary of the National Temperance League, was presented last week, at Exeter Hall, with a purse containing £1550, in recognition of his active and earnest efforts. The Bishop of London, in making the presentation, said there were few men to whom the temperance cause owed more. A silver tea and coffee service was also presented to Mrs. Rae. In acknowledging the presentation, Mr. Rae said that since he joined the temperance movement in 1839, he had never heard an opinion expressed, a fact quoted, or anything said against total abstinence which was worth the snap of a finger. He advised all to inform themselves as to the principles of the movement, to think it out for themselves, and then they would work in it with greater fervour and perseverance. The meeting was addressed by Rev. Dr. Hannay, Canon Ellison, Rev. Dawson Burns, and others.

The Book World.

Great Thoughts from Master Minds. Vol. vii. Those who cannot derive pleasure and profit from this excellent repository of choice thinking, must indeed be hard to please. One timely feature of the volume is the biographical sketches of the leading men of Queen Victoria's reign, accompanied by their portraits.

Safe Counsels. By the late Rev. Clarmont Skrine. 1s. T. Shaw, 18, High-street, Wimbledon. This is a little gem, the value of which is already well known to those who treasured the deceased author's writings. To the first five chapters, which have been previously published, is now added a sixth, entitled, "Safe Pastures," written only a few weeks before Mr. Skrine's sudden and lamented death.

The Expositor (Third Series. Vol. v. 7s. 6d. Hodder & Stoughton) contains a set of papers on "The Origin of the Christian Ministry," by Dr. Sanday, Prof. Harnack, Prof. Harris, Rev. J. Macpherson, and Rev. C. Gore, which are very important. Dr. Maclaren contributes six most valuable chapters—three concluding ones on Colossians, and three on Philemon, which are to be continued. There are two very important articles by Prof. Godet, and a number of others, such as well maintain the high character of this magazine. It is enriched by a splendid etching of Canon Westcott.

Labour, Leisure, and Luxury. By Alex. Wylie. New edition. 1s. Longmans, Green & Co. We cordially welcome a popular edition of this admirable treatise on political economy. It is well fitted to check the evil tendencies of communistic agitators, who pretend to be the friends, but are really the enemies, of working men. Mr. Wylie is a large employer of labour, and has in many ways shown his interest in the welfare of the sons of toil. This is his best contribution to their prosperity, for it shows them how they may prosper without breaking the law, or trenching on the rights of others.

Walking with God: A Memoir of the late Ven. Archdeacon J. Alcock. By the author of the "Spanish Brothers." 7s. 6d. Hodder & Stoughton. The title is a bold one, but the subject of the memoir is not unworthy of it. Converted during College life, he devoted a long life and no small intellectual powers to the ministry of the Gospel. But he not only preached, he lived Christ. The judicious extracts from diaries and conversations show that Mr. Alcock lived very near to God. His long connection with, and cordial support of, the Home Mission and Irish Society gives material for an interesting chapter. As Dean Daunt was a typical preacher and leader, so was Mr. Alcock a typical teacher and pastor of the Irish. May both have numerous successors.

Helps Heavenward: The Beginning of the Christian Life. By Rev. W. L. Watkinson. 1s. T. Woolmer. The first of what promises to be an interesting and profitable series. In this day of abundant evangelistic effort, sound, bright books on Christian living are specially needed. To pastures green and still waters the lambs of the flock must be led, and this can only be done by shepherds of experience. In the chapter headed "Aspiration," we find, amid true teachings, a phrase not warranted by Scripture, "sin is not imperfection, sin is contradiction." St. John says, "All unrighteousness" (i.e., all that is not perfectly righteous has the nature of sin) "is sin," and, though the writer adds, "The contradictory element in the Apostle was destroyed," St. Paul gives in Rom. vii. 21—23 a very different diagnosis. With this needful caution, we commend to believers a very helpful little handbook.

The New Religio Medici: Chapters on Present-day Subjects. By Frederic Robinson, M.D. 5s. Elliot Stock. Readers of the essays contained in this volume will find much that is suggestive and thoughtful, on themes of far more than passing interest and importance. The greater part of the book deals with sickness and disease in various forms, the author regarding them from the Biblical, as well as the medical, point of view, and in so doing refuting several modern notions respecting their treatment and design which call for exposure and criticism. The chapters on Faith-healing, the School of Sickness, the Universalism through the Flesh, are specially helpful in this direction, and will repay careful reading. Other subjects come in for review, as "The Sunday Service," "Vain Repetition," "The Church and the Army," the whole forming a series of chapters full of food for thought, and calculated to assist the formation of principles sound and practical, as opposed to mysticism and extremist tendencies.

English History from Contemporary Writers. The Misrule of Henry III. Edited by Rev. W. H. Hutton, M.A. 1s. David Nutt. If the succeeding volumes of the series be as carefully edited and as interesting as this one, Mr. Nutt will confer a boon on students of English history who have not access to the original authorities. We get here a modernised version of what contemporary writers and documents tell about the troublous times of Henry III. The misery wrought by ecclesiastical grievances, royal greed, and foreign difficulties are graphically portrayed. If read in connection with a standard history, this book will be a valuable aid to a right conception of the period it deals with.

The Coming of the Flowers, by George F. Root, (Curwen & Sons) is a truly delightful cantata. It is the song of the flowers, a song full of gladness and praise to the great Creator.

The proprietors of The Century are said to have under consideration a proposal to publish a new illustrated religious weekly, the illustrations to be equal to those published in The Century.

Victoria Regina. 1s. Partridge. A collection o Jubilee papers, by E. F. Cobby, which, by contrast with other crowned women, show the true glory of Queen Victoria's "matchless career."

Income Tax. 1s. Effingham Wilson & Co. The words, "How to get it refunded," added to the title, sufficiently explain the object and the value of this revised addition to the series of Wilson's Legal Handy Books.

God's Messages for the Little Ones. 6d. Partridge. A little text book, attractively got up, for the lambs of the flock. The texts (for a month) are in large type, and are happily chosen, with a few pleasant words added.

Patrick and the Priest. 1d. The Monthly Tract Society This is a story by Dr. Kirton, which tells how a young Roman Catholic was led to Christ through reading the Bible, and how he was able to confound the priest who denounced him.

The Holiday Annual. 8d. Sir Joseph Causton & Sons, 9, Eastcheap. In this collection of papers descriptive of holiday trips in our own and other lands, there is much of suggestion for those who are contemplating summer excursions.

On and Off Duty Tracts (1s. 8d. per 100), of which there are several, are just suitable either for general distribution or to give to policemen. Each has two or three well-pointed stories, with plain and simple Gospel lessons, and is well illustrated.

The Two Kings. 1d. Hutchings & Crowsley, 123, Fulham-road. King Self and King Jesus are the two rulers put before us in this most tastefully got-up little brochure. The tyranny of the former is in painful contrast with the love of Christ, and this is clearly and beautifully brought out.

The Jubilee Sermon (Macniven & Wallace) preached in the Free High Church, Edinburgh, by Dr. W. C. Smith, points the lesson omitted in many such reviews, that it is by legislation giving power into the people's hands, and education that they may use it wisely, and not by wars, yielding in most cases only a harvest of shame, that the true greatness of this country has been built up.

Temperance and Jubilee. 1s. Elliot Stock. The "Pilgrim" who has written this "appeal to the young men and maidens of the nation" has written as strongly of the curse of strong drink and as ardently of the blessings of total abstinence as the staunchest abstainer could desire. His facts are such as are well known, but he applies them in a terse and vigorous manner that is very telling.

The Teacher at Work, a useful volume which contains a great deal of valuable help for teachers, is, by the kindness of a friend, offered to teachers, for a short time, at half price. Application should be made for copies to F. B., care of Mr. Elliot Stock, 62, Paternoster-row, London, E.C. Twelve stamps should be enclosed; where the volume has to be sent by post, five stamps should be sent in addition.

An Earnest Life. 6d. Morgan & Scott. The story of the life of such a true man as George Wilkins, of Derby, "printer, preacher, and painter," is always of peculiar charm and value. In the narrative before us, written by his widow, there are many beautiful portrayals of individual traits and characteristics, but through all shines conspicuously the man of God, earnest, fervent, devoted, seeking in all things the glory of Him whom He loved and served with all his heart.

The Acres and the Hands; or, The People's Inheritance. By A. B. W. Christian Commonwealth Office. This pamphlet is an excellent contribution to the literature of that Land question which is so quickly taking a front place in the rank of pressing nineteenth century problems. Although the writer has no practical solution of the land difficulty to offer, he certainly labours successfully to educate his readers into understanding the primary facts and fundamental principles of the subject.

Christian Thought. Ketcham, Bible House, New York. The June number of this excellent periodical contains several powerful papers, one of the most remarkable being by Rev. Dr. Lord, upon "The relation of Christ's miracles to Christianity." Rev. Dr. Deems' paper on "Paul at Athens" is an excellent statement of Paul's method of dealing with the philosophers of the Stoic and Epicurean Schools who met him with their materialistic and pantheistic theories; and Professor Bowne's paper on "Logic and Life" is a masterly study in the history of belief. Far too deep for the ordinary reader, it will be invaluable to the student of mental phenomena.

"For Kings." 6d. William Hunt & Co. From this text the Bishop of Liverpool preached his Jubilee sermon. Amongst other reasons for thankfulness he mentions the personal character of the Queen, and makes the outspoken remark, which others would do well to note: "If that inner life [of the Queen] had been such as the lives of some of the Plantagenets, Tudors, and Stuarts, I doubt extremely whether the Royal standard would have been flying at Windsor Castle this week."

⁂ Active Service, recently stated to be by P. A. E. Wood, is from the pen of Miss M. S. S. Herdman, although the facts mentioned under the initials "A. E," refer to Mr. Percy A. E. Wood.

MORE JULY MAGAZINES.

After Work (1d. Marshall Bros.) is a pleasant companion for the home circle.

On and Off Duty (1d. 18, Adam-street, Adelphi), the monthly organ for policemen, contains much profitable reading.

The Railway Signal (1d. 186, Aldersgate-street) is bright and cheerful in tone, and has a large amount of news interesting to railway-men.

Old Jonathan (Collingridge), with the story of "A Gallant Rescue," and a variety of other stories, is more than usually interesting this month.

The Boys' and Girls' Companion (1d. Church of England Sunday-school Institute) combines much bright and cheerful reading with sound teaching.

The Church Worker (1d. Church of England Sunday-school Institute) is a magazine for Sunday-school teachers and others engaged in church work.

The Vanguard (1d. Wells Gardner & Co.) has an important article on "Quacks," besides much information concerning the work of the Church of England Purity Society.

The Band of Hope Chronicle (1d.) continues its useful sketches of Band of Hope addresses, and thereby does much to strengthen the effect of early temperance teaching in the minds of the rising generation.

The Home Visitor. Wm. Hunt & Co. This is a remarkably good pennyworth, quantity and quality being both up to the mark. Besides most interesting matter, there are several admirable illustrations.

The Reaper. 1d. Houlston & Sons. This is a mine of inspiration and stimulus for Christian workers and others. "Extravagances: how they help and hinder the Work," is especially worthy of attention.

Bright Words (½d. Marshall Bros.) will be helpful to many a pilgrim to the heavenly city. Rev. J. G. Mantle contributes a valuable little paper on "Want of Confidence," which trembling Christians would do well to read.

Illustrations (3d. Kent & Co.) gives us some fine views of mountain scenery in Perthshire. The detailed and illustrated guide of the route to Paris by Newhaven and Dieppe, should prove useful to travellers at this season.

The Christian Irishman. 1d. Mecredy & Kyle, 49, Middle Abbey-street, Dublin. There is sterling matter in this monthly. "Famous Irish Preachers," "The Land we Live in," and "Comar's Talks" are the prominent features.

Among Social magazines, The Lady's World (Cassell, 1s.) caters chiefly for the "Upper Ten." Its current number contains a sketch of the Baroness Burdett Coutts, and much information of an artistic and gossipy character.

The Y.W.C.A. Monthly Journal (2d.) contains much information concerning the work in Scotland and Ireland, besides reports from many branches, and articles of permanent value. It may be had from the head office, 316, Regent-street.

Woman's Work. 4d. Partridge & Co. "Poverty and Wealth" brings clearly out the practical side of the Christian life, and the duty of entire dependence upon God. "Dropped Stitches," and "Not Lost, but Gone Before," both contain valuable lessons.

Rest and Reaping. 1d. Morgan & Scott. Miss Mason this month continues her charming narrative of "The Origin and Development of the House of Rest." Rev. E. W. Moore's sermon on "The Haunted House," is a valuable commentary on Luke xi. 24, 25.

Service for the King. 2d. Shaw & Co. This monthly record of Mildmay missions has, besides other interesting matter, some extracts from Mr. Baron' journal, and a very encouraging account of the Gospe in the Eastern Archipelago, by Dr. Macfarlane.

The Hospital. 6d. Whiting & Co., Sardinia-street, W.C. This monthly has grown wonderfully in interest, and contains a mass of valuable information concerning hospital work, and on medical matters generally. "Life in Hospital" reviews the whole subject in admirable terms.

The Girl's Own Paper (Religious Tract Society) has a delightful account, from her own pen, of Alice King, a blind contributor to the Magazine. A sketch of female life in Algiers ought to awaken thankfulness on the part of our sisters who live in a Christian land. The summer number of the magazine, "Victoria's Laurels," furnishes one more illustrated history of the Queen's reign. The summer issue of the Boy's Own Paper is also a very attractive one.

The British Messenger. 1d. Drummond's Tract Depôt, Stirling. This monthly is as good and fresh as ever. "Something's got hold of me" is a powerfully written article, true to life, that will do good work amongst artisans and others.—The Gospel Trumpet and Good News (each ½d.), the former printed in large type, are amongst the best known and effective of small religious papers. The books and tracts sent out from this depôt call also for a word of commendation. "Saturday Night" (1s. per 100) in the Olive Branch series, and "Forty-five" (1d.), a hospital story of real life, are excellent illustrations.

MISSIONARY MAGAZINES.

At Home and Abroad (1d. Wesleyan Mission House), The Juvenile Missionary Magazine, and Jewish Advocate (each ½d.) are effective aids to missionary sympathy and effort amongst the young.

The Church of Scotland Home and Foreign Mission Record. 1d. R. & R. Clark, 42, Hanover-street, Edinburgh. Rev. D. B. Spence and Professor Story contribute interesting particulars of the Jewish Mission.

The Friend of Missions (1d. Partridge & Co.). We have an interesting glimpse of the home of the Armenian monks, where sixty are in training for the ministry, in the island of St. Lazaro. Also an account of Friends' missions in various parts of the world.

The current number of The Chronicle of the London Missionary Society (1d. Snow & Co., Ivy-lane) is a double one, and contains details of the College at Antananarivo, and accounts of work in the wide field in which the Society's missionaries labour.

Medical Missions. 1d. T. O. Smith, 14, Paternoster-square. The progress this important work is making, both at home and abroad, and the blessing it is alike in our overcrowded cities and in India, amongst a people almost wholly given up to idolatry, are well described in this monthly.

The Church Missionary Gleaner (1d.) is in the front rank of missionary publications. This month, with a speaking portrait of Mr. Mackay, taken in 1876, it gives his chart of C.M.S. progress, together with "letters from the front" in various directions. The illustrations are, as usual, excellent.

North Africa. 1d. Partridge & Co. "Medical Mission Work in Morocco," by Dr. Churcher; "Sowing in Tlemcen, Algeria," by Miss Read; "Labours of Love in Arzila, Morocco," and other articles, make this quarterly record of the Mission to the Kabyles and other Berber races unusually interesting.

The Jewish Intelligence (1d. Nisbet & Co.), as the organ of the London Society for Promoting Christianity amongst the Jews, is doing effective service on behalf of God's ancient people. There is this month, in addition to gleanings from various parts of the mission field, a capital page engraving of Mount Gerizim.

MR. MOODY'S SUMMER SCHOOL.—A correspondent writing on July 1, says about 500 students were present at the opening of this school the previous day. The opening meetings were grand—the speakers, besides Mr. Moody, being Dr. A. Pierson, Dr. Broadus, of Kentucky, and Professor Drummond.

CHILDREN'S SERVICES are being daily conducted on the sands at Weston-super-Mare, at 11 a.m., with large assemblies. At 7 p.m. general services are attended by large and attentive congregations. The speakers are Rev. G. Bradbury, Wm. Midwinter, of Gloucester, Miss Haire, and Wm. Hallett, of Bridgwater.

HATTERCHELE MACHER KISTHESHE.—A well attended and enthusiastic meeting was recently held at Finsbury Park Hall, N., to hear a farewell address by Hatterchele Macher Kistheshe, a native of the Soudan, who was rescued from slavery by Gen. Gordon's expedition, and who is now, in company with a devoted and enterprising young Englishman, about to return to the Soudan viâ the Congo to preach the Gospel to some of the teeming millions located in that interesting region.

SERVANTS' INSTITUTE, WEST NORWOOD.—For some time past it has been apparent to the committee of management of this Institution that its sphere of usefulness might be considerably extended if it possessed a hall suitable for meetings, and Mrs. Woodford Fawcett has been indefatigable in her exertions to procure the necessary help, pecuniary and otherwise, to the supplying of this long-felt want. The generosity of the friends of the Institute has at length enabled the committee to take steps to erect such a hall, and the foundation stones were recently laid. The interesting ceremony took the form of a religious service, conducted by Rev. W. Fuller Gooch, who delivered an appropriate and telling address.

Among the Churches.

CHURCH OF ENGLAND.

The Synod of Nova Scotia has elected Rev. Dr. Edgehill, Chaplain-General of the Forces, as Bishop of the diocese.

The Dean and Chapter of St. Paul's have given the vacant living of St. Pancras to Rev. H. L. Paget, vicar of St. Ives, Hunts. Mr. Paget is a pronounced High Churchman.

The members of the C.M.S. Lay Workers' Union had the pleasure last week of meeting Rev. Dr. Bruce, from Persia, at Burntwood Lodge, Wandsworth. An interesting address on mission work in Persia was given.

Dr. Perowne, Dean of Peterborough, attended the missionary meeting and delivered an impressive speech in connection with the annual assembly of the general Baptist denomination held recently in that city. He also conducted a party of the delegates over the cathedral, and subsequently entertained them at a garden party.

At a "Church Defence" meeting last week, Rev. J.E.C. Welldon, Head-Master of Harrow, said that when in the South of London he not unfrequently attended Mr. Spurgeon's Tabernacle, and could assert that while he "heard much that was sound and nobly spoken, he never heard anything that could give offence to any devoted member of the Church of England."

Rev. Dr. Sillitoe, Bishop of New Westminster, British Columbia, at a recent meeting gave some information concerning the work in this large diocese, which covers an area of about 180,000 square miles. Starting in 1879 with four clergymen, he has now twenty-five, and expects soon to add three or four more. The work is much appreciated by the people of British Columbia.

A correspondent of The St. James's Chronicle writes that in Hastings and St. Leonards there are only four distinctly Evangelical churches—viz., St. Mary-in-the-Castle, St. Andrew's, Emanuel, and the old church at St. Leonards; the first of which (Rev. F. Whitfield's) he specially recommends to those desirous of attending a church where pure doctrinal and practical Christianity are proclaimed from the pulpit. Evangelical Churchmen should avoid Christ Church, and St. Mary Magdalen, St. Leonards; the former of which is Popish in everything but name.

BAPTIST.

In connection with the departure of Mr. F. G. Harrison, of the Bristol Baptist College for the Congo, a valedictory service was held at Tyndale Chapel.

The Baptist Missionary Society, says The British Weekly, has reduced its adverse balance to £1000, and this, it is hoped, will speedily be cleared. Three new missionaries will leave England for the Congo at the end of next month.

Rev. J. Gelson Gregson, speaking at the weekly meeting of Mr. Spurgeon's students, said in addition to the regular missionaries, evangelists whose sole work should be to travel from village to village, preaching and instructing the natives, should be sent out from this country.

At the meeting of the English Baptist Union for Glamorgan and Carmarthen, Rev. J. Howells, of Mountain Ash, gave an address on "The Present Outlook, and our Duty in regard to it." The only remedy, he said, for "lawless socialism" is the true socialism of the Church of Christ, which bridges the chasm between rich and poor.

CONGREGATIONAL.

Rev. P. J. Forsyth, Congregational minister, occupied the pulpit of the Episcopal Church, at Crumpsall, Manchester, on the occasion of the Jubilee service.

The new chapel at Clacton-on-Sea, erected jointly by the Congregationalists and Baptists, was opened on Wednesday. Rev. Dr. Mackennal preached the opening sermon.

The Young Men's Missionary Guild, in connection with the London Missionary Society, has now 139 members, and there are additions at every monthly meeting. These, however, will for the present be discontinued.

Great St. George-street, Liverpool, is thrown open for a special service for the people on the first Sunday evening in each month, when Rev. S. Pearson, M.A., delivers a sermon on a popular subject. His text on the last occasion was "A Penny."

Rev. John Brown, B.A., of Bedford, the biographer and editor of Bunyan, and Rev. Herbert Evans, of Carnarvon, one of the most powerful and eloquent of living preachers, have had conferred upon them the degree of D.D. by American Universities.

Before leaving for New Guinea, Rev. James Chalmers said to the directors of the London Missionary Society: "My great desire is to get back, so as to teach, preach, and live the Gospel of Christ among the natives of New Guinea." He pleaded also for men—"the very best that can be sent—godly, manly, Christ-like men."

In closing the present series of lectures to artisans at St. Paul's Chapel, Kentish Town, Rev. Edward White spoke on "The next fifty years of conflict between Christianity and Atheism." After dwelling upon the sources of atheism, he urged his hearers to live Christianity, for a practical Christianity is worth a thousand s—it leads men to believe that the Bible is real.

Rev. G. A. Shaw, in his address at the London Missionary Society's monthly prayer-meeting, prior to leaving for Madagascar, referred to the years of waiting in India and China before any fruit of missionary labours was seen. Central Africa, New Guinea, and Madagascar had also similarly exercised the faith of the Church. In the latter country only one-third of the natives have yet been won for Christ. Rev. R. W. Thompson mentioned that recent letters from Central Africa spoke of the serious illness of Captain and Mrs. Hore, and of Mr. Lee as having had fourteen attacks of fever.

At a floral festival held last week in commemoration of the anniversary of Christ Church, Westminster Bridge-road, of which Rev. Newman Hall is minister, it was stated that the ordinary church work includes the instruction of 6000 Sunday-school children, by 400 unpaid teachers, in Hawkstone Hall and branch schools in the district, besides several regular mission services in poor and crowded localities.

PRESBYTERIAN.

Dr. Cousland, writing from Swatow, China, gives an account in The Presbyterian Messenger of an alarming outbreak of persecution in Sin-un.

Rev. Dr. Somerville has declined the invitation to visit the islands of Orkney and Shetland. Rest for brain and nerves is indispensable. The call to visit Bohemia is also looming before him, and this, if entered upon, will occupy several months.

METHODIST.

There are now eighty young women in Mrs. Clegg's Halifax Training Home for female evangelists.

During a revival in Glasgow Second Circuit one hundred persons professed conversion in one month.

In connection with the Queen's-road Wesleyan Chapel, Peckham, three mission bands now hold services simultaneously. The movement commenced amongst the members of the Young Men's Bible-class.

Rev. T. Champness has now forty-three lay agents under his care and at his disposal. The applications he receives from circuits for the help of lay evangelists are far more numerous than he can grant.

A new mission hall, in Greenwich-road, Aintree, was opened on Sunday week. This is the result of mission services commenced about two years ago by a few young men connected with the society at Walton.

At the London district meeting of Bible Christians, held at St. James's Church, Forest-hill, S.E., a gratifying increase in membership and all other departments of work was reported. There are nine ministers, with fifteen local preachers, in active work. A resolution in favour of Methodist Union was unanimously adopted.

The third annual Holiness Convention was recently held at Southport, in a tent capable of seating fifteen hundred persons. Among those who spoke were Revs. W. H. Tindall, Chas. Garrett, E. E. Jenkins, T. Champness, I. E. Page, H. P. Hughes, &c. The addresses were marked by much variety, directness of appeal, and loyalty to the Word of God.

SALVATION ARMY.

Students in great numbers attend the Army meetings in Rome.

Seventy-four of the soldiers in the Talampitiya corps used to be Buddhists.

More than one hundred and seventy persons sought salvation during six months' work at Bridgwater.

Two new barracks have been opened in Dundee. Over one hundred persons professed conversion during the week.

A corps is now at work at Utah, the head-quarters of Mormonism, and some conversions have already taken place.

At Llanrwst, North Wales, after only three or four weeks' work, more than a hundred persons professed conversion, many of them the worst characters in the town.

An Irish back lane Amazon (a Roman Catholic), a woman separated from her husband because of her drunkenness, and a man who had "gone to the dogs," are amongst the cases of conversion reported by the slum-post officers.

Alexandra Palace will be the scene of the celebration of the twenty-second anniversary of the Salvation Army, which is fixed for Monday, July 18. One feature of the proceedings will be the march-past of ten thousand soldiers.

SOCIETY OF FRIENDS.

Hettie Butler, who has just graduated at the Missionary Training School, Chicago, is going out as a Friend missionary to Nankin, China.

There are many evidences that the young Friends of Philadelphia Yearly Meeting are in sympathy with progressive work, and ready to render help in winning souls.

Many Friends have expressed their readiness to spend their holidays in the vicinity of country meetings, and to help there in Christian work. Such services will be greatly valued.

C. Whitney, of Tokio, Japan, pleads for Christian teachers in that country. The way is open now for them, but may soon be closed by the appointment of heathen teachers. There is "room for almost any number" to teach elementary English.

William L. Pearson, of Minneapolis, earnestly pleads for a "School of the Prophets" or "Training Home" for Quaker missionaries, that the gifts possessed may be turned to the best account. "Consecrated scholarship" is needed, and many young people are ready. If Friends do not use them, other churches will.

NOTES FROM IRELAND.

Mr. J. Malcolm Ingles, who is a Presbyterian, has been appointed a member of the Irish Board of National Education in succession to the Duke of Leinster.

Open-air Services.—Taking advantage of the fine weather, field meetings were held in many parts of the north of Ireland, last Sabbath, and were largely attended. Such meetings were held by the Methodists at Antrim, Glenavy, and other places.

South and West.—At the last meeting of the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church, it was resolved to send deputies from Ulster to the congregations in the south and west of Ireland, on a visit of encouragement and sympathy, and for the purpose of holding evangelistic and missionary meetings.

Methodist.—Rev. Thomas Waugh, British Conference evangelist, has visited Belfast, and has held a series of meetings which have been largely attended, and at which much good is believed to have been done. The Irish Methodist mission tent is now near Manorhamilton, in the province of Connaught, where no mission tent has ever previously been pitched. There are many evidences of Divine blessing.

Prayer for Revival.—It is proposed to hold open-air meetings on the grounds of Mr. William Young, J.P., Fimaghy, near Ballymena, for two days, about the beginning of August, for the purpose of uniting in prayer for the outpouring of the Holy Spirit, for the preaching of the Gospel, and for conference regarding the evangelisation of the heathen. These meetings will be the first of the kind in the neighbourhood.

"FALLEN ON SLEEP."

Rev. T. C. H. Croft, of Richmond.—Mrs. Stowell, widow of the late Rev. Wm. Stowell.—Mr. Walter Smith, of Southport, a member of the Methodist community, and a prominent temperance advocate.—Mrs. Dingwall Fordyce, a prominent member of the Free Church in the Blairgowrie district.—Rev. J. Jackson, of Colchester, a Methodist minister for nearly half a century.—Mr. Samuel Taylor Hake, of Great Yarmouth, a prominent member of the Methodist body about forty years.—Mr. R. L. Dawson, of Acaster, Yorkshire, for many years a Methodist local preacher and class-leader.—Mr. William Creed, a member of the Wesleyan Society at Pilton.—Rev. Colin Campbell, for more than a quarter of a century a missionary of the London Society in the district of Bangalore, South India.—Mr. William Talbot, a prominent member of the New Meeting Church, Kidderminster.—Rev. S. Cozens, pastor of Zoar Baptist Chapel, Ipswich.—Mr. Crum-Ewing, late M.P. for Paisley, a liberal supporter of the United Presbyterian Church.—Rev. W. P. Balfern, of Brighton, a Baptist minister.—Mrs. Paul, wife of Mr. John Dennis Paul, of Leicester, and an earnest member of the Baptist Church. Rev. Wm. May, of Kettering, a Baptist minister.—Rev. Peter Prout, formerly pastor of Trinity Baptist Church, Blackowen-road, Haslingden.—Mr. Charles Gaussen, of West House, Greystone, Ireland, a well-known and highly-esteemed philanthropist, in his ninety-second year.—Rev. Allan Macarthur, Free Church minister at Barvas, in the Island of Lewis.—Sir Edward Coey, a warm friend and hearty supporter of Irish Presbyterianism.

CONTINENTAL & FOREIGN NOTES.

THE BILL raising the age of protection for young girls to fourteen years has passed the Illinois Senate.

THE ALDERMEN OF BROOKLYN have appointed fifteen women as police matrons, with salaries of 600 dols. each.

WURTEMBERG has just been celebrating the bicentenary of the birth of the theologian and true Christian J. A. Bengel.

SEVEN YOUNG MEN were graduated from Mr. Moody's School for Christian Workers at Springfield, Mass. All of them have been offered positions as secretaries of Young Men's Christian Associations.

THE CHURCHES AT ROME and elsewhere in the old cities of the Roman Catholic world, are complete museums of relics, which nine hundred and ninety-nine thousand times in a million, are gross impostures.—New York Evangelist.

THE BALE COMMITTEE, which occupies itself in organising evangelical worship in the different places of summer resort in German-speaking Switzerland, has provided for Axenstein, Engelberg, Mürren, Ragatz, Rigi-Kaltbad, St. Moritz, &c.

ROME AND THE CONGO.—It is stated that negotiations will be opened in the coming autumn between the Pope and Portugal, in regard to the proposed establishment of a Roman Catholic Hierarchy in the Congo State, on a similar basis to that established a little while ago in India.

A GOOD REPORT is given of rescue work in Canton Vaud. At Lausanne, out of abysses of vice and impurity, Christian love has reached some hearts, and by it has been led to believe in God's love, so that more than one young girl has said, "I will arise, and go to my Father."—Journal Religieux.

ROMANISTS AND THE JUBILEE.—The Berlin Evan. Kirch. Anzeiger says that the Romish clergy are much surprised that the Pope should have ordered celebrations in honour of the Queen's Jubilee to be held in all the Romish churches. Hitherto such ceremonies have been observed only in the case of Catholic rulers.

FRENCH REFORMED CHURCH.—The General Official Synod met at St. Quentin, June 15. The Synod gave great satisfaction to those who took part in it. Many questions were considered, and, with one exception (marriages of divorced persons), with perfect unanimity. A special commission was appointed to examine the disputed question.

CAWNPORE, the scene of one of the most terrible tragedies in connection with the Mutiny of 1857, is fast becoming the commercial centre of Northern India. Four lines of railroads connect it immediately with the ports of India, where the vast resources of the fertile Gangetic plain find an outlet. Cotton in vast quantities is shipped to England, Germany, and Italy, and grain to France and England. Besides these interests, Cawnpore is becoming the manufacturing city of Northern India. These marks of the introduction of western civilisation make the city a valuable missionary field.

"It was a dark page in my experience when first I knelt at the feet of a mortal to confess what should have been poured into the ear of God alone. . . Though I believe my confessor was, on the whole, as guarded as his manner was kind, at some things I was strangely startled, utterly confounded."—EXTRACT.

BIRDS OF THE BIBLE

Chats with the Children about Bible Birds.

By JAMES BOWKER, F.R.G.S.I.

With Coloured Frontispiece and 29 other Illustrations.

Beautifully Printed on Toned Paper in Red and Black.

"We delight in books of this character. Scripture and Nature are set side by side; and the young are made to see the one illustrated by the other. Fine type makes these pages pleasant to the eye of the old, and simple language adapts it to the taste of the young."
Sword and Trowel.

"Chats with the children about birds mentioned in the Bible, in which are introduced anecdotes illustrating their instincts and habits, and explaining and applying the references to them in Scripture: contains many pictures and a pretty coloured frontispiece. A beautiful little book, and very handsomely got up."—Christian Age.

"A very pretty little volume, beautifully illustrated, handsomely printed, and very tastefully bound. It contains much information and much useful teaching about Bible birds. It is just the book for a present to our young friends, to whom it will prove very attractive."
Living Waters.

"Mr. Bowker knows much about the birds; and he makes his feathered favourites teach many a sweet lesson. By all means let the children have this prettily written and prettily illustrated book."—British Messenger.

MISS CHARLOTTE SHARMAN,

Of the Southwark Orphan Home.

AMONG the crowning glories of the Victorian era has been the remarkable growth of that pure religion and undefiled which visits the fatherless and the widow in their affliction. Orphans have been plentiful enough in all recorded time; yet, we imagine, it would be hard to find an institution specially devoted to their care and training, that dates its rise beyond the half century of our Queen's reign. It is fitting enough that this development of practical Christianity should have taken place under the régime of one who, these many years, has worn the weeds of widowhood; but it seems also to prove that the Church of Christ has been wonderfully slow to learn and practise the most elementary of its duties and privileges.

The portrait we give to-day is that of a Christian lady who has earned for herself a high place in the esteem of all who would follow closely the footsteps of the Master, in his tender love and helpful sympathy towards the friendless and helpless children. In this brief sketch we purposely refrain from bringing the personal element into conspicuous relief. It has been true of Miss CHARLOTTE SHARMAN, to a more than usual extent, that her personality has been hidden behind the work to which she has devoted the maturest years of her life. Indeed, we feel it right to say that, in the publication of her portrait, and these few details of her work, we have not taken her into our counsels at all, fearing that in her aversion to over publicity, she might have discouraged us in the performance of what is to us a pleasant task. We are hopeful, however, that she may regard this mention of her labours on behalf of orphaned girls, as an indication of the providential care of the protégées; all the more as prolonged bodily weakness has this year prevented her from preparing and issuing her usual annual narrative.

We can vouch for it that these narratives, or "short accounts," as our sister modestly calls them, make very delightful reading. If any students of God's dealings with his children would like to have their hearts thrilled by a genuine sensation, and to possess a counteractive to the self-centred influences of the holiday season, let them place a bundle of these little "blue books" in their satchel before starting on the trip to the Continent or the seaside.

some quiet hour when the mind is unbent, may not only furnish a valuable spiritual tonic, but peradventure gain for this noble Christian enterprise some much-needed help, that would otherwise evaporate into thin air, in the shape of holiday luxuries or indulgences. On a flying visit to Miss Sharman's Home in Southwark the other day, we saw quite a pile of these "blue books"; we should dearly like to believe that they will all be scattered to the four corners of the kingdom within the next fortnight.

From the very first of these, printed in 1866, we cull the following paragraph which will describe better than we could do the origin of Miss Sharman's life mission. She then wrote:—

> In the year 1862 two little orphan girls were thrown by a remarkable train of providential circumstances on my hands. They were in absolute and immediate need of protection. They had no relative or friend able to afford them this protection; and the voice of God seemed to say to me with unmistakeable clearness, "Take these children"; therefore I took them. All the service these little ones required was completed, and they were removed from my care in about a year; but, from that time, case after case has come before me, each of pressing need, and each without any hope of more efficient help than that which I could render, till I find myself surrounded by a little family.

That "little family" consisted of eight orphaned children, their ages varying from one year to fourteen years. Now, when the institution has almost attained its majority, the eight have grown into three hundred, or thereabouts, not reckoning those who have passed from underneath its sheltering wing into the great, busy working world, or have been taken home "to the Father's home on high." It was not till 1867 that the Orphans' Home was opened in West-square, Southwark, a quiet, of the world-famed Bethlehem Hospital. The growth of the Institution was rapid; if it had increased in proportion to the calls on its help, it would have been far more rapid. Very soon the one house was multiplied into four, all adjacent, and all filled with young lives welcomed and mothered in the same spirit as that which prompted the reception of the first two. In the sixth report we find that the need for consolidating the work by building one large Home had been growing more and more apparent, and had reached a crisis. It is in the tenth report, however, dated May, 1876, that we read this little paragraph, the writing of which must have given to Miss Sharman a thrill of unspeakable delight:—

> The joy of entering the first portion of the new Home will make this year one to be ever remembered with thankfulness.

We have to take a big jump, to the eighteenth report, that for the year 1884, in order to find the last report of the London Building Fund, in which we are informed that "the Orphans Home is now finished and furnished." This Home, we learn elsewhere, was erected and fitted up at a cost of over £21,500. A fine and well-appointed Home it is, as we are prepared to testify from our recent cursory inspection of it. But some reader will naturally ask how it came to pass that it took so long to build. The answer to the question will bring into view the distinctive features of Miss Sharman's work. When she started out, or rather, was led out, into this field of Christian service, she laid down for herself, guided by God, as she believed, three rules: no voting, no begging, no debt. That is high ground to take, especially with respect to the last two items. It is easy enough to found an orphanage without the voting system, but in the present day, when the claims on the sympathy of the Christian community are so many, it may appear to some to be sheer fanaticism to think of carrying on a large and growing work without systematic solicitation of public support, and without now and then overdrawing the banker's account. We do not feel called upon to adjudicate in the matter; our present duty is to record the simple fact that Miss Sharman has from the first year till now consistently adhered to these root principles, and so far as we know, she means to go on doing so. In the twentieth and latest report, she thus explains her position on these two points—no begging and no debt:—

> Instead of using begging appeals, we make known our requests to God, and in all these years He has never failed us. As to debt, the best that anyone attempts to say on behalf of it is that it is a necessary evil. But how can any evil be necessary? It seems to be the simplest deduction of Gospel logic, that good being stronger than evil, light than darkness, and Christ than Belial, evil is *un*necessary for the furtherance of God's work.

In strictly carrying out these principles, Miss Sharman has undoubtedly experienced many and severe trials of faith; but probably she would say, with the Apostle, that these have been as precious in their result as the refining of gold in the fiery crucible. In the erection of her new Home, as in the supply of daily needs, she has followed closely on the leadings of God's providence, never allowing expenditure to go by a hair's breath beyond income possessed, or actually assured. Thus the north wing was first built; then the centre block; by and by the south wing. We could gather from these "blue books" as many instances of God's clearly defined interposition, at the moment of supreme need, as would probably constitute one of the most notable collection of answers to the prayer of faith to be found in the literature of the Christian religion. Space permits of mentioning but one instance, which is thus recorded:—

> In March, 1878, a circular was issued to inform the friends of the Home that the builders had received notice to stop, as the funds were exhausted. It seemed very grievous that when all was going on satisfactorily, it should suddenly be suspended. But the question of debt was involved, and it is at such sharp testing times as these that the value is felt of adhering rigidly to the principles of right and wrong. So the notice was given . . . But a fresh instance was revealed of the faithfulness of the promise: "Before they call I will answer; and while they are yet speaking I will hear." Before the order to stop the work could be carried out, a large donation was received, which enabled us to recall the notice. While the builders were reading the letter from the architect, telling them to suspend operations, Mr. Simpson [a helper of the work] was reading one from his friend—who still wishes to remain anonymous—asking him to forward me a note for one thousand pounds for the building fund.

It is interesting to note, in looking at the early reports of the work, that among Miss Sharman's warmest supporters, at its commencement, were such men as Samuel Martin, Alexander Raleigh, Luke Wiseman, Thomas Binney, and William Brock, all of whom have now gone to their rest. The sainted Samuel Martin, as well as his congregation at Westminster Chapel, showed a special concern in the prosperity of the Institution; this has been continued to the present time by the church and Mr. Martin's successor, Rev. H. Simon. No Christian effort is better calculated to evoke the deepest sympathy of all classes than that on behalf of orphan girls, and so we are prepared to find that the Southwark Orphanage has been supported by rich and poor alike. The generous friend who contributed £1000 at the critical moment when the building was likely to be stopped, gave eight of these handsome donations at various times, all of them anonymously. The late Samuel Morley was a liberal helper in connection with the new building. On the other hand, there are some pathetic entries relating to gifts from the very poor, showing how one touch of nature—love to the helpless and the bereaved—binds the whole world in one blessed kinship of mutual endeavour. We have been glad to see frequent records of gifts from our readers, though in more recent years we regret to say these appear to have fallen off. Work among the very young does not afford the same proportion of immediate and manifest result as in some other branches of Christian service, and it is therefore in danger of being overlooked. It is slow work; but it is all the more sure. Miss Sharman receives children, when the need is urgent, at a very tender age, and, of course, long years must elapse before there is much outcome of all the care lavished on them. But the fruits will be more patent by and by; indeed they are now constantly appearing. The girls are all trained for domestic service, and, so far as we can judge, the training they receive is very thorough and satisfactory.

In addition to the large Institution in Southwark, there are now branch Homes at Gravesend and Tunbridge Wells, and one at Hastings for a superior class of orphaned girls, socially considered. At each of the Homes the house work is entirely done by the girls, so that the expense is not only lessened but experience is gained before they go out into situations. Special attention is paid to their instruction in needlework, and this secures for the girls a better position in the households they enter. It was pleasant to hear, on our recent visit, from the experienced matron who has held her important post from the very inception of the work, that the ladies whom they serve almost invariably express great satisfaction with them; no better testimony could be had as to the value of the training the girls receive, especially in these days when so many housewives are perplexed with the "domestic" problem. Everything seems to be done, not only to make the Institution a real home to the homeless ones, but to respect and to develop the individuality of the girl. With true wisdom, born no doubt of much experience, Miss Sharman says in one of her latest reports:—

> It is our earnest endeavour to store the children's minds with Scripture, and to lead them to the Saviour, but we do not aim or expect to see them full-blown saints in their infancy. In working for children one learns to be content to see first the blade and then the ear, believing that the full corn in the ear will come in due time. Plants that bloom too early are apt to wither soon.

This good work has gone on from year to year, with plenty of sunshine, and the due proportion of shadow that comes to all things terrestrial. Sometimes Miss Sharman has gratefully reported that a whole year has passed without a break in the large household circle; at other times she has had to tell of sorrow upon sorrow—many smitten with one or other of the complaints incident to youth, and some taken away from this chequered scene. But the death-rate has been extremely low, a fact that no one would wonder at who saw the excellent arrangements of the Home. Contrasting the lofty, airy dormitories and the general sanitary appointments, with the appearance of the Southwark slums through which we passed the other day on the way to West-square, we could not but feel that in the case of these children at least there are many compensations for the sorrows and trials of orphanhood. The girls had recently returned from their summer outing in the country or the seaside, and a merrier, healthier looking set of maidens we never wish to see. Our only regret is that Miss Sharman herself has succumbed to the stress of the work, and has been invalided for the greater part of this year. She is still in very poor health, and the doctor has prescribed a period of complete rest and freedom from anxiety in connection with her loved work. How far she may be able to shake off this burden we cannot say, but we hope our readers will help her to do it, as much as they can, by practical reminders of their sympathy, so that the three hundred orphaned girls may lack for no good thing. To those who may accept our hint about perusing her little reports, we may say that the address of the Orphan Home is Austral-street, West-square, Southwark, S.E.

WOMEN'S PLACE AND WORK.

By PREBENDARY MACDONALD.*

The right determination of this question seems to involve in a pre-eminent degree the extension of the Saviour's kingdom in the world. In our time, under the pressure of the world's needs and the awakening zeal of the Church, the question seems to be solving itself. Christian women are admitted, nay are urged, into spheres of labour and influence which until lately were closed to them. But whether this is right and according to the Master's will, must be decided, first of all, by the touchstone of the inspired Word.

I do not pretend that the subject is without difficulty; but the difficulty seems less to me than to some of my friends. There are two passages which at first sight seem to assign narrow limits to the place and work of women in the Church. In 1 Cor. xiv. 34, the Apostle says, "Let your women keep silence in the assemblies; let them be in subjection, as also saith the law; and if they would learn anything, let them ask their husbands at home." And, again, in Timothy (1 Tim. ii. 11, 12), presiding over the Church in Ephesus, he says, "I suffer not a woman to teach, nor to usurp authority over the man." In both these passages, the Apostle employs a first principle of human society (that God has placed woman in a subordinate position to her husband, Gen. iii. 16), to enforce a direction which, I am persuaded, was intended to be neither universal nor permanent.

"If they would learn anything let them ask their husbands at home." This obviously belongs to a temporary state of things. The Apostle certainly does not intend to hand over to the sorry and precarious teaching, even of Christian "husbands at home," the women in our time, who might have such husbands, and who "would learn anything" of Christian truth. In how many hundreds of instances, teaching "at home" has come from the wife to the husband, awakened to inquiry.

These counsels were adapted only to the condition of women in the churches of Corinth and Ephesus; a condition which was not universal, and which it was the very design of Christianity to remove. The women in Greece and in Asia Minor were in a degraded condition, and unfit for the position of teachers, or even of intelligent questioners in the church; a position, however, which they were prematurely asserting for themselves, in the new-found liberty of the Gospel. The Apostle insists on their silence in the assemblies; as only leading to disorder. This chapter, 1 Cor. xiv., is occupied with directions, for the most part applicable only to a temporary condition of things, connected with the exercise of special gifts which were not to be permanent in the Church. Yet, even then, this direction was not to be taken without exceptions; for he speaks (in ch. xi. 4, 5) of women as well as men "praying and prophesying" (i.e., preaching, with special Divine assistance), and insists that women should pray and prophesy with their heads covered.

Moreover, there are many other lights of Scripture which prove that St. Paul did not intend his words, "I suffer not a woman to teach," to have any universal or permanent application.

The truth is, the bondage of special rules and prohibitions does not belong to the Christian religion. These were characteristic of "the Law," as adapted to the spiritually infantile condition of Israel. Christianity inspires motives and implants principles, and leaves large liberty for their application to the life of individuals and of the Church.

Thus, e.g., in the establishment of Christianity, the Gospel was preached first to Jews only, but when the men of Cyprus and Cyrene came to Antioch, under the constraint of the love of Christ, and without any special direction, they broke through the barriers of prejudice and "spake unto the Greeks also, preaching the Lord Jesus" (Acts xi. 20). The need of perishing men was in their view. They felt the Gospel which they possessed was the only and the sufficient supply. The opportunity was present, and constrained by the love of Christ they used it, and God gave his sanction to their work.

And such was the Divine method for providing for the growth and extension of the Christian Church. Not as Judaism, of which the pattern was showed to Moses. Complete from the first, and to be strictly followed, the Christian system was to be a providential development, free from the yoke of multiplied ceremonies, and leaving wants to be supplied, as they arose, by the best wisdom of the Church, under guidance sought from her Living and her Present Head.

First, the need was felt of deacons, and this was supplied. Afterwards of elders in the Church at Jerusalem, &c,, and soon the requirement was felt for such work as Christian woman was well fitted for, and the want was supplied. Woman's place and work in the Church was found, as we have seen. And for some centuries she held her place and did useful work, till in the growing corruptions of what have been sadly, but truly, called "the Dark Ages of the Church," her zeal became a wretched superstition; noble gifts were suppressed or prostituted, while the opportunity for their beneficent use was abandoned in the name of "the religious life." We are devoutly thankful that no small part of the revival of spiritual and evangelical life in this century has been the awakening of all the churches to a sense of the immense value of woman's work to the life and growth of spiritual religion in the world.

The abundant blessing with which God has crowned the lives and labours of Christian women at home and abroad in this age has for ever established woman in a high place of honour in the Church, and has amply illustrated the value and importance of her work for Christ. Let Christian people become acquainted with such books as "English Hearts and English Hands," by Miss Marsh; with the grand work among our soldiers of the Daniells and Miss Robinson, and among our sailors of Miss Weston and her companions, and the work of Miss Hopkinson among the policemen and their families in Manchester, and of the thousands of "devout and honourable women" who are "labouring much in the Lord" to bring his light into the darkest dens of ignorance, and infamy, and woe. Let them read the story of the blessed lives and work of such women in the great mission field, as Mrs. Judson, of Burmah, and Mrs. Baker, of Travancore, and they will feel that the warrant which St. Peter alleged as justifying his work in the house of Cornelius is the ample vindication of woman's place and work in the Church:—"Forasmuch as God gave unto them the like gift as He did unto us, what was I that I could withstand God?"

Oh, that the prayer might go up to the —"O Lord, renew and continue the power of Pentecost in the Church! Pour out thy Spirit on thy servants and on thy handmaidens still, and more abundantly and everywhere!"

Oh, that every Christian woman, as well as every Christian man, young and old, would open their eyes to see the need around them for work for Christ, and the gifts and opportunities they possess by which the need might be supplied; and then as good stewards of the manifold grace of God would say, "Here am I; Lord, what wilt Thou have me to do?"

EDINBURGH NOTES.

"I would almost as soon leave a curse, as I would leave excessive wealth to a child," said Andrew Carnegie when presented with the Freedom of Edinburgh, on the occasion of laying the foundation-stone of the Free Public Library, the outcome of his gift of £50,000 for its origination. It does not lie in our way to ask how in America men speedily amass magnificent fortunes. This is but one of several instances in which millionaires across the Atlantic have practically emphasised the doctrine that wealth left to be appropriated after death, even for public welfare, is misapplied. The graceful pile shortly to adorn George IV. Bridge, will embody the idea in stone and lime; while "Abbotsford to let" is the most painful comment on Sir Walter Scott's heroic struggle to found a family.

If men give one or two millions for universities and the like, as instanced by Mr. Carnegie, they must have accumulated extraordinary sums before disbursing; when are men with ordinary fortunes to begin? Of course, "there is that scattereth and yet increaseth," as well as the reverse. The transference of exceptional sums of money to individuals, in the course of Providence, acting often through modern manufacturing organisations on a great scale, leaves the matter for personal determination. The rules of Christian giving apply equally to the weekly wage as well as the prosperous commercial ventures. But one considerable donation may, as in the case of the Edinburgh Public Library, float an enterprise hitherto impossible by small aggregate subscriptions.

Three to four thousand pounds are asked for, to erect mission premises, designed on the American Sunday-school system, in connection with the Drill Hall Sabbath morning breakfasts. The inhabitants of the Cowgate will not likely gain much advantage by the Free Library. But a multitude come out on the Sunday mornings to swell the two meetings severally for old and young, where nourishment for soul and body is unitedly given. Mr. Robert Wilson, 2, Queen-street, and his staff of two hundred or so voluntary workers, have often desired to come to a close grip in evangelistic operations with their guests. A site has been secured and paid for close to the Police-office and Courts of Justice, overlooking what Dr. Chalmers happily designated a rich field for territorial work. They desire some imitator of Mr. Carnegie to give but a tenth of his gift to float their mission.

In the week after the Public Library meetings, Dr. Haviland laid before the Scottish Meteorological Society some striking facts regarding the geographical distribution of cancer, consumption, and heart disease in the British islands. His researches bore that £1000 spent on cottages placed in favourable localities, such as he indicated, for the preventive treatment of patients of consumptive tendency at certain seasons of the year would do more good than £10,000 spent on consumption hospitals. Will some-one like the Scoto-American ironfounder try this experiment on the specified scale?

A MISSION TOUR IN INDIA.—3.

Arrived in Madras on the morning of Nov. 28.—Here I am the guest of Mr. R. C. Chapman of the Finance Department who takes an interest in all the mission work of this place. Madras has been rightly called "the city of magnificent distances." The only plan is to hire a conveyance by the day; even then one cannot accomplish more than four or five visits in a day: some of the places are four and five miles apart from each other. There is a great deal of earnest mission work being done in this city, and many missionary societies are represented; both evangelistic and educational work is being vigorously carried on. Among the societies at work are the Church Missionary Society, the Free and Established Churches of Scotland, the London Missionary Society, the Wesleyan Mission, and the American Episcopal Methodist.

Nov. 30.—Dr. Miller kindly took me all over his grand institution, where one sees the very cream of the educational side of missionary work. Without touching on the vexed question of Educational versus Evangelistic work, one cannot but see that an institution such as this must wield a tremendous influence for good. Indeed I have had some disinterested and valuable testimonies to this being the case. A police officer, in the Madras Presidency, in speaking of the Madras Christian College, said, "Miller's College! I snap up all the men I can get hold of from that institution, I find I can depend upon those who have been educated there." Dr. Miller is like a father among his boys and young men, and appears to exercise a wonderful influence over them.

I called upon Mrs. Theophilus, having been for a long time interested in her Bible-women's work. She is the daughter of Rev. Raja Gopal, of the Free Church, and the wife of a native clergyman, and is, I believe, doing immense good through her Bible-women. Two of them at one time visited in the wards of the Government Leper Hospital, and became deeply interested in some of the leper women there; but she was told by a medical missionary that it was unsafe for them to visit the asylum in their bare feet—I understand that it is customary for Madras women to go about barefooted—so it was thought expedient that the visits should be discontinued, much to the grief of those concerned.

Visited the Free Church Christian Girls' Boarding School, under the management of Miss Stephens and Miss Strong; through their kindness I was allowed to address a few words to the girls. I wish that some of the good people at home, who have doubts as to the wisdom of a high training for these native girls, could see them as I did that morning; I feel sure they would find their doubts vanishing. The most marked thing about them was their quiet, modest, ladylike behaviour.

Dec. 1.—Visited the Monegur Choultry and Government Leper Hospital, where I met Dr. Thompson, C.I.E., who spared no pains to give me a thorough insight into the working of both these institutions. The former is a large charity hospital, built largely, I believe, by native philanthropy, and aided by Government. Its extensive buildings stand on one side of the road, with wards for general patients, also accident, infectious diseases, and lying-in wards; on the other side stands the Leper Asylum, with separate wards for males and females. The asylum is beautifully kept, both as to its external and internal arrangements. The patients looked clean and comfortable, and some were fairly cheerful; others—indeed, many of them, had that dull despairing look so characteristic of those suffering from this woeful disease. I saw children there, both boys and girls, with the disease in its incipient stages, still childlike. They smiled at us brightly, and seemed so glad to be taken notice of; yet doomed to something far worse than death. Nothing seems to touch one's heart, in connection with this sad subject, so much as the terrible case of these poor children who have contracted the disease. There were altogether 149 in the asylum, of whom 105 are men, 37 women, and 7 children. In this asylum Dr. Thompson insists on remedies being used every day, and the results are most gratifying; for while no cures have been effected, the general condition of the lepers is greatly improved. Going round from ward to ward I could not but contrast this place with the Dharmsala in Bombay.

I was pleased to hear that Lady Dufferin had visited these poor lepers when in Madras; and also to find that Christian work is being carried on here. The chaplain at North Black Town visits the Protestant Christians regularly, and holds services for them, while they have not been neglected by the missionaries. Rev. G. M. Cobban, Wesleyan Missionary Society, states that for the past ten years Christian work has been earnestly and systematically carried on under the auspices of that Society, amongst the lepers of Madras; for the past four years an agent has been specially engaged to devote his whole time to this work. In addition to the services, they are regularly visited, and no pains are spared to lead them to trust in Him who was, and is, the lepers' Friend. Mr. Cobban has baptized twenty-one Hindus from among them, and these form a little church. He gives it as his opinion that there are other places in the Madras Presidency where there are good openings for work amongst the lepers, and my own opinion quite coincides with it; indeed, there is practically no limit to the amount of deeply needed and deeply interesting work which we may carry on amongst this suffering class. STREET ARABISM.

In a letter to The Manchester Guardian, Mr. Leonard K. Shaw and Mr. Gilbert R. Kirlew, hon. secs. of the Boys' and Girls' Refuge, Strangeways, give particulars of a census of boys and girls found in the streets of Manchester one evening in the month of June. A company of thirteen workers, each taking a separate district, going out at six in the evening, found then in the streets 1174 children, of whom 800 were under fourteen years of age; again at 9.15 p.m. they found over 600, nearly 450 of these being also under fourteen years of age.

A large percentage of these, they go on to say, are far on the road to ruin, and are constantly dropping into the criminal class, their places being at once filled by others, who are allowed by thoughtless and sometimes guilty parents to engage in street hawking in the hope of augmenting the scanty income of the family. One of the saddest facts connected with the question is that prominent among the elder street arabs are many former inmates of industrial schools, workhouses, and voluntary homes. Upon their training nearly £100 a head has been expended, either by the State, or by private charity, yet, through the law allowing parents to claim what they call "their property," and to use it for their own selfish purposes, large numbers of these children drift back upon the streets, and the benefit of their previous training is lost. The necessity for an alteration in the law, which shall prevent unworthy parents from exercising the rights now given them over their children, is then strongly insisted upon.

THE SERVICE OF PRAISE.

IS ARTISTIC CHOIR-SINGING A HELP OR A HINDRANCE TO TRUE DEVOTION?

By MEREDITH BROWN.

In the present day, when every effort is made to bring choir-singing to a high degree of perfection, and one congregation vies with another which shall have the more attractive musical service, to gratify the taste of its cultured members, is there not great danger that the æsthetic may supersede the spiritual, and that artistic singing may so fill the ear of our choir members and congregations that the spirit of praise—the "melody of the heart"—may be entirely absent from the service of song? When such is the case, what blessing can be expected in our congregations? It is this that creates such a prejudice among religious people against all attempts to train our church choirs, and, in some cases, against choirs themselves. But the question is—Is this a just prejudice? Let us see.

It is beyond doubt that David aimed at superior effect in the elaborate musical services which he appointed for public worship. We read (1 Chron. xvi. 4) that he "appointed certain of the Levites...to thank and praise the Lord God of Israel," and "Chenaniah, chief of the Levites, was for song." He was choirmaster, for "he instructed about the song, because he was skilful" (1 Chron. xx. 22); showing that these singers must have been highly trained, so far as music as an art was then understood.* They were consecrated persons, too, and a special blessing seems to have rested on the musical part of the public service. Thus, in the reign of Jehoshaphat—two centuries after David—when an army of confederate kings surrounded the forces of Judah's king, and they were ready to be overwhelmed, Jehoshaphat "appointed singers unto the Lord, and that they should praise the Beauty of holiness as they went out before the army...and when they began to sing and to praise the Lord, the Lord set ambushments ('liers in wait,' Revised Version) against the children of Ammon, Moab, and Mount Seir, which were come against Judah, and they were smitten" (2 Chron. xx. 22).

One other feature of these grand musical services, all designed to make the public worship as impressive as possible, may be mentioned: the whole choir were absorbed in it. For example, at the consecration of Solomon's Temple, "it came to pass that as the trumpeters and singers were as one, to make one sound in praising and thanking the Lord, that then the house was filled with a cloud, even the house of the Lord, so that the priests could not stand to minister by reason of the cloud, for the glory of the Lord had filled the house of God" (2 Chron. v. 13, 14).

These interesting facts seem clearly to show that it is possible to combine high musical art in public worship with intense devotion; and it is difficult to see why the greater spirituality of the Church under the Gospel should make this less possible now than in earlier times. The one requisite now is that our trained and cultivated choirs should consist of those whose one object in that office shall be "to show forth the praises of Him who hath called them out of darkness into his marvellous light," and that the utmost care should be taken to select only such for that office, and to appoint them unto the Lord. In this case, might we not expect that a like honour would be put upon their service—"the glory of the Lord filling the house"?

But alas! how often do our church choirs consist largely of persons of whom it might be said, "This people draweth nigh unto Me with their mouth, and honoureth Me with their lips, but their heart is far from Me" (Matt. xv. 8); and instead of valuing their office as a special honour, they are noted for frivolity in the congregation. What a contrast to the state of the primitive Church, when the hearts of the early Christians seem to have been ready to burst into song. "Be not drunk with wine," says St. Paul, "but be filled with the Spirit, speaking to yourselves ('one to another,' R.V.) in psalms and hymns and spiritual songs, singing and making melody in your heart unto the Lord" (Eph. v. 19). And in all seasons of religious awakening a prominent feature of it has been the heartiness of the singing. The story of redeeming love to sinners contains the very essence of spiritual song. A "multitude of the heavenly host" sang it at the Saviour's birth; the children sang Hosannah at his entry into Jerusalem; and the redeemed in glory are now singing with the redeemed on earth, "Worthy is the Lamb that was slain!" In the heart of a sinner who has been brought from darkness into light, what "melody" do these words make! and on the wings of such songs as—

> Thou hast redeemed us with thy blood,
> And set the prisoners free;
> Thou mad'st us kings and priests to God,
> And we shall reign with Thee!—

his souls mounts into the very presence of God, and he is fain to say with the sweet singer of Israel, "I will praise the Lord with my whole heart in the assembly of the upright, and in the congregation" (Ps. cxi. 1); for "He has put a new song in my mouth, even praise to our God; many shall see it and fear, and trust in the Lord" (Ps. xl. 3).

Reader—choir-singer—has He redeemed your soul? Have you brought your load of guilt to the foot of his cross, and has He said to you—"Thy sins are forgiven thee"? If not, how can you join in the song of the ransomed soul? Your voice is making discord in his ear whom you profess to praise.

You are singing—

> I came to Jesus, and I drank
> Of that life-giving stream;
> My thirst was quenched; my soul revived,
> And now I live in Him,— while you have never stooped to "drink of the river of his pleasures," but are "hewing out broken cisterns that can hold no water."

There are hymns, too, expressive of contrition, which are precious to the Christian, who wants to express his deep sense of sin, and of his own vileness in God's sight: and while fully trusting and resting on Him, "who his own self bare our sins in his own body on the tree," still sees his own worthlessness, and loves to put himself among those of whom the Apostle says: "Such were some of you, but ye are washed, but ye are sanctified, but ye are justified, in the name of the Lord Jesus Christ and by the Spirit of our God." These can have no meaning for you.

Oh! reader, if you have not given your heart to the Lord, for your own sake do not sing such songs; for nothing is so hardening as continuing to sing hymns of the truth of which we have had no experience. As in prayer—led by one—we speak to God, so also do we in praise—led by the choir; and just as we cannot pray aright save in the Spirit, neither can we praise aright if we are not in communion with God. Cultivated voices in our choirs are of immense value, but we want cultivated hearts far more; trained voices are pleasant to the human ear, but trained hearts are music in the ear of God; and if only we can have the two combined—if every member of a trained choir were prepared to say—

> Take my life, and let it be > Consecrated, Lord, to Thee.
> Take my voice, and let me sing
> Always, only, for my King"-

what a power there would be in it! For just as no preacher, however eloquent, can hope to reach the conscience of his hearers unless he himself is under the power of what he preaches, so neither can any singer, however beautiful his voice, touch the heart of his audience, unless more powerfully he feels it, the more will he rivet his audience.

> What shall I sing for Thee,
> My Lord and Light?
> What shall I bring to Thee,
> Master, to-night?
> Oh for the strong desire!
> Oh for the touch of fire!
> Then shall my tuneful lyre
> Praise Thee aright.

MR. RUSKIN'S ADVICE

TO CHRISTIAN TRAVELLERS ON THE CONTINENT.

A correspondent sends to us the following extract from "The Stones of Venice," by Mr. John Ruskin, remarking that the advice it contains deserves the attention of English Christians at this time as much as when it was first written:—

There has now been peace between England and the Continental powers about thirty-five years (1851), and during that period the English have visited the Continent at the rate of many thousands a year, staying there, I suppose, on the average, each two or three months; nor these an inferior kind of English, but the kind which ought to be the best—the noblest born, the best taught, the richest in time and money, having more leisure, knowledge, and power than any other portion of the nation. These, we might suppose, beholding, as they travelled, the condition of the states in which the Papal religion is professed, and being, at the same time, the most enlightened section of a great Protestant nation, would have been animated with some desire to dissipate the Romanist errors, and to communicate to others the better knowledge which they possessed themselves. I doubt not but that He who gave peace upon the earth, and gave it by the hand of England, expected this much of her, and has watched everyone of the millions of her travellers as they crossed the sea, and kept count for him of his travelling expenses, and of their distribution, in a manner of which neither the traveller or his courier was at all informed. I doubt not, I say, but that such accounts have been literally kept for all of us, and that a day will come when they will be made clearly legible to us, and when we shall see added together, on one side of the account book, a great sum, the certain portion, whatever it may be, of this thirty-five years' spendings of the rich English, accounted for in this manner:—

To wooden spoons, nut-crackers, and jewellery, bought at Geneva and elsewhere among the Alps, so much.
To coral horns and lava brooches bought at Naples, so much.
To glass beads at Venice, and gold filigree at Genoa, so much.
To pictures and statues and ornaments everywhere, so much.
To avant-couriers and extra post-horses, for show and magnificence, so much.
To great entertainments, and good places for seeing sights, so much.
To ball-dresses and general vanities, so much.

This, I say, will be the sum on one side of the book; and on the other will be written:—

To the struggling Protestant Churches of France, Switzerland and Piedmont, so much.

Had we not better do this piece of statistics for ourselves in time?

ITALIAN AID SOCIETY.—This Society, for the special assistance of the Protestant Orphanage for girls at Florence, founded by Signor Ferretti, has issued a short account of the work. The objects of the Institution are first to provide a refuge for the orphans of Protestant Italians, and, next, to enable colporteurs and missionaries to secure a good education for their daughters on moderate terms. The Orphanage now contains thirty-seven children; eight were received during the year, and nine left. For some of these employment was found. The widow of the founder has since his death, in 1872, continued as directress, carrying on the work in the same earnest spirit in which it was commenced. Miss Reynett, 3, Cranley-place,

ELIJAH THE PROPHET.—10.

By Rev. F. B. MEYER, B.A., Leicester.

HOW THE MIGHTY FELL!

1 Kings xix.

Amid the drenching storm with which the memorable day of the convocation closed in, the king and the prophet reached Jezreel. Probably they were the first to bring tidings of what had occurred. Elijah went to some humble lodging for shelter and food, whilst Ahab repaired to the palace where Jezebel awaited him. All day long the queen had been wondering how matters were going on Mount Carmel. She cherished the feverish hope that her priests had won the day; and when she saw the rain-clouds steal over the sky, she attributed the welcome change to some great interposition of Baal, in answer to their pleadings. May not some such colloquy as this have taken place between the royal pair, when they met in the palace-interior?

"How have things gone to-day? No doubt, well; the rain has anticipated your favourable reply."

"I have nothing to tell you that will give you pleasure."

"Why! has anything happened?"

"The worst has happened."

"What do you mean? Where are my priests?"

"You will never see them again."

"Never see them again! What do you mean? Tell me quickly!"

"They are all dead; by this time their bodies are floating out to sea."

"Who has dared to do this thing? Did they not defend themselves? Did you not raise your hand? How did they die? Where's Elijah? Have the people broken into revolt?"

"Then Ahab told Jezebel all that Elijah had done, and withal how he had slain the prophets with the sword."

Jezebel's indignation knew no bounds. She was like a tigress robbed of her young. Ahab's temperament was sensual and materialistic; if only he had enough to eat and drink, and the horses and mules were cared for, he was content. He could not understand people becoming so enthusiastic about religious matters. In his judgment, there was not much to choose between God and Baal. His was the motto of the Epicurean, "Let us eat and drink, for to-morrow we die." Not so Jezebel. She was as resolute as he was indifferent. Crafty, unscrupulous, and intriguing, she moulded Ahab to her mind; and, in doing so, anticipated the symbol of the Apocalypse, in which the scarlet-clad woman rides upon the beast.

To Jezebel the crisis was one of gravest moment. Policy as well as indignation prompted her to act at once. If this national reformation were permitted to spread, it would sweep away before it all that she had been labouring at for years. She must strike, and strike at once; and where would her blow tell so well, as when aimed at the master-spirit of the day's proceedings? So that very night, amid the violence of the storm she sent a messenger to Elijah, saying, "So let the gods do to me, and more also, if I make not thy life as the life of one of them by to-morrow about this time." That message betrays the woman. She did not dare to kill him, though he was easily within her power; and so she mastered her wrath, and contented herself with threats. Her mind was set on driving him from the country, so that she might be left free to repair the havoc he had caused. In this, alas! she was only too successful.

Elijah's presence had never been so necessary as now. The work of destruction had commenced, and the people were in a mood to carry it through to the bitter end. The tide had turned, and was setting in towards God, and he was needed to direct its flow, to keep the people true to the choice which they had made, and to complete the work of reformation by a work of construction. From what we have seen of him, we message with unruffled composure, laying it before God in quiet confidence, assured that He would hide him in the secret of his pavilion from the wrath of man, and shield him from the strife of tongues. Surely he will preserve a dignified silence, or return an answer like that which Chrysostom sent on a similar occasion to the Empress Eudoxia, "Go tell her I fear nothing but sin." But, instead of this, we are told (and surely the sacred historian must have heaved a deep sigh as he wrote the words), "When he saw that, he arose, and went for his life."

"He went for his life." Accompanied by his servant, and under covert of the night, he hurried through the driving storm, across the hills of Samaria, and directed his course, with true Bedouin instinct, towards the extreme south of Judæa, where the pasture lands of Palestine fade into the drear expanse of the Arabian desert. Nor did he slacken his speed till he had left far behind him the country over which Jezebel's sceptre swayed, and had reached Beersheba, the town that clustered round the well of the oath, where, centuries before, Abraham had planted a grove, and called upon the name of the Lord. He was safe there, but even there he could not stay. His spirit seems to have become utterly demoralised and panic-stricken. He could not even brook the company of his servant; so, leaving him in Beersheba, he plunged alone into that wild desert waste that stretches southwards to Sinai.

Through the weary hours he plodded on beneath the burning sun; his feet blistered by the scorching sands; no ravens, no Cherith, no Zarephath were there; no human sympathy lent him its kindly aid; the very presence of God seemed to have withdrawn itself from his side. At last the fatigue and anguish overpowered even his sinewy strength, and he cast himself beneath the slight shadow of a small shrub of juniper, and asked to die: "'It is enough; now, O Lord, take away my life; for I am no better than my fathers.' Let me die here and now, and bury me with thine own hand, as Thou didst Moses in the valley of Bethpeor."

What might have been! If only Elijah had held his ground; dwelling in the secret place of the Most High, and hiding under the shadow of the Almighty; he might have saved his country; and there would have been no necessity for the captivity and dispersion of his people. The seven thousand secret disciples would have dared to come forth from their hiding-places, and avow themselves; and would have constituted a nucleus of loyal hearts, by whom Baal had been replaced by Jehovah. Yes, and his own character would have escaped a stain, which has resisted the obliterating erasure of the ages, and still remains, fraught with shame and sorrow. Elijah's influence in Israel never recovered from that one false step. He missed a chance, which never came again. And though God, in his mercy, treated him lovingly and royally as a child, He never again re-instated him as a servant in just the position which he so thoughtlessly flung away. It is a solemn thought for us all! If, for one moment, we are left to ourselves, we may take a step which may shatter our influence; and, for ever after, put us into a very different position to that which might have been ours, if only we had remained true. As children, we may be forgiven; as servants, we are never re-instated, or trusted quite as we were once.

It is noteworthy that the Bible saints often fail just where we should have expected them to stand. Abraham was the father of those who believe, but his faith failed him when he went down to Egypt, and lied to Pharaoh about his wife. Moses was the meekest of men, but he missed Canaan, because he spoke unadvisedly with his lips. John was the Apostle of love, yet in a moment of intolerance, he wished to call down fire out of heaven. So Elijah, who might have been supposed to be superior to all human weakness, shows himself to be indeed "a man of like passions with ourselves."

The old castle which from its hill watches over the town of Edinburgh, clustering beneath, was only captured once, in the whole history of Scotland; and its capture happened thus. Its ness of the rock made it inaccessible and impregnable; and they put no sentries there. And so, in the gray mist of the early morning, a little party crept up the precipitous slopes, and surprised the garrison into surrender.

Is there not a warning here for us all? It may be that some have been saying boastfully of certain forms of vice, "I shall never yield to that, or that. I have no inclination to such forms of sin. This is one of the points in which I am strong to resist." Beware; it may be that the great enemy of souls has a special design in producing in you a sense of false security; that he may assail and vanquish you in the very point in which you deem yourself impregnable, and so forbear to watch.

What a proof is here of the veracity of the Bible! Had it been merely a human composition, its authors would have shrunk from delineating the failure of one of its chief heroes. No artist would think of snapping a column, just as it was tapering to its coronal. Men sometimes complain against the Bible for its uncompromising portraitures. Yet, is not this its glory? It holds the mirror up to human nature, that we may learn what is in man; that we may none of us despair; and that we may infer that, if God were able to fashion his choicest ware out of such common earth, it is possible for Him to do as much again, in the most ignorant and degraded of his children. Is there not even a gleam of comfort to be had out of the woeful spectacle of Elijah's fall? If it had not been for this, we should always have thought of him, as being too far removed from us to be in any sense a model. We should have looked on him as we do at the memorials of a race of giants, with whom we have nothing in common. But now, as we see him stretched under the shade of the acacia bush asking for death, behaving himself with more pusillanimity than many amongst us would have manifested, we feel, that he was what he was, only by the grace of God, received through faith. And by a similar faith we may appropriate a similar grace to ennoble our mean lives.

Several causes account for this terrible failure.

(1) His physical strength and nervous energy were completely overtaxed.—Consider the tremendous strain which he had undergone since leaving the shelter of the quiet home at Zarephath. The long excitement of the convocation, the slaughter of the priests, the intensity of his prayer, the eighteen miles swift run in front of Ahab's chariot, followed by the rapid flight, which had hardly been relaxed for a single moment till he cast himself upon the desert sands. He was suffering keenly from a reaction, now that the extreme tension was relaxed; and this counted largely in the unutterable depression under which he was suffering.

We are fearfully and wonderfully made, and our inner life is very sensitive to our outward conditions. It has been truly said, that the most trivial causes, a heated room, a sunless day, want of exercise, or a northern aspect, will make all the difference between happiness and unhappiness, between faith and doubt, between courage and indecision. Many who send for the religious teacher would be wiser if they sent for their physician. And if any who read these lines are conscious of having lost the sunny gladness, and buoyant faith of former days; before they speak of the mysterious hidings of God's face, or lament their own backslidings, it might be well to inquire, if there may not be some physical or nervous cause. And if there be, it will attract, not the blame, but the compassionate sympathy of Him, who knoweth our frame, and remembereth that we are but dust. When we consider the speed and strain of our times, it is marvellous that there are not more amongst us suffering from the intolerable depression beneath which Elijah sank on the desert sands.

(2) He was keenly sensitive to his lonely position.—"I only am left." Some men are born to loneliness. It is the penalty of true greatness. At such a time, the human spirit is apt to falter, unless it is sustained by an heroic purpose, and by an unfaltering faith. The shadow of that Master Himself when He said, "Behold, the hour cometh, yea, is now come, that ye shall be scattered, every man to his own, and shall leave Me alone; and yet I am not alone, because the Father is with Me." If our Lord shrank in the penumbra of that great eclipse, it is not wonderful that Elijah cowered in its darksome gloom. You remind me that he might have had the company of his lad. But, remember, there is company which is not companionship. We may be more lonely in a crowd than in a desert. We need something more than human beings; we need human hearts, and sympathy, and love.

(3) He looked away from God to circumstances.—Up to that moment Elijah had been animated by a most splendid faith, because he had never lost sight of God. "He endured as seeing Him who is invisible." Faith always thrives when God occupies the whole field of vision. But when Jezebel's threats reached him, we are told most significantly, "when he saw that, he arose, and went for his life." In after years Peter walked on the water until he looked from his Master to the seething waves. "When he saw the wind boisterous he was afraid, and, beginning to sink, he cried, Lord, save me." So here, whilst Elijah set the Lord always before his face, he did not fear, though an host encamped against him. But when he looked at his peril, he thought more of his life than of God's cause, and was afraid of man that should die, and of the son of man that should be made as grass; and forgot the Lord, his Maker, which made heaven and earth. "When he saw that, he arose, and went for his life."

Let us refuse to look at circumstances, though they roll before us as a Red Sea, and howl around us like a storm. Circumstances, natural impossibilities, difficulties, are nothing in the estimation of the soul that is occupied with God. They are as the small dust that settles on a scale, and is not considered in the measurement of weight. O men of God, get you up into the high mountain, from which you may obtain a good view of the glorious Land of Promise, and refuse to have your gaze diverted by men or things below!

It is a great mistake to dictate to God. Elijah wist not what he said, when he told God that he had had enough of life, and asked to die. If God had taken him at his word, he would have died under a cloud; he would never have heard the still small voice; he would never have founded the schools of the prophets, or commissioned Elisha for his work; he would never have swept up to heaven in an equipage of flame.

What a mercy it is that God does not answer all our prayers! How gracious He is in reading their inner meaning, and answering that! This, as we shall see, is what He did for his tired and querulous servant.

How many have uttered those words, "It is enough!" The sufferer, weary of long and wearing pain. The wife tied to an inhuman husband. The Christian worker, whose efforts seem in vain. "It is enough. Let me come home. The burden is more than I can bear. The lessons are tiresome. School-life is tedious; holidays will be so welcome. I cannot see that anything will be gained by longer delay. It is enough."

O silly, silly children! little do we know how much we should miss, if God were to do as we request. To die now would be to forego immeasurable blessings which await us within forty days' journey from this; and to die like a dog, instead of sweeping, honoured and beloved, through the open gates of heaven. It is better to leave it all in the wise and tender thought of God. He wants us home, but will not let us come till we have learnt the last lesson and done the last stroke of work. And we shall yet live to thank Him that He refused to gratify our wish, when, in a moment of despondency, we cast ourselves upon the ground, and said, "Let us die. It is enough."

Y.M.C.A., BATH.—Open-air work in full swing. Five meetings are held every week. Several hundreds hear the Gospel each night. The workers are from all the evangelistic churches. Mr. Stooke, the secretary, leaves in October for North China, under the auspices of the China Inland Mission.

THE ANCHORAGE MISSION.

At the commencement of the report for 1886 Colonel Stuart-Wortley, the president of this Mission, writes:—"I feel in a position to say, humbly and reverently, that God has very unusually blessed the work that has been carried on." This is abundantly justified by the following statement:—"Of the 222 young women who have passed through the Anchorage House since its opening in 1882, more than 150 are doing well, and remain in correspondence with us." Last year forty-nine young women were received.

The definite principles on which from the first this work has been carried on have, no doubt, had much to do with the happy results attained. These principles are few, but very important. On the human side they comprise reconciliation to parents, and, where possible, the securing of a regular maintenance from the father of the child. The girl, while not relieved of her fair share of responsibility, is thus freed from the terrible burden of the entire care of the child, a burden almost too great to be borne, and staggering under the weight of which, many an unfortunate has plunged into deeper and grosser sin. But the chief point aimed at has been a distinct change of heart, so that when a young woman returns to her duties in the world she will be able to meet temptation in a strength other than her own. Many of those, it is said, who are doing best, are just those who, feeling their weakness and their great need of the Saviour's help, have put their whole trust in the Lord Jesus, and then have gone forward bravely in his strength.

The complete and thorough way in which a young woman's case is taken up by the Anchorage Mission forms one of the surest guarantees both of the reality of the help extended to her, and for the discouragement of the sin which has brought her there. NUGGETS from Dr. G. F. PENTECOST.

"Can you give me in a single sentence what your idea of conversion is?" asked a gentleman of us some time ago. "Yes, gladly; it is surrender to Jesus Christ—spirit, soul, and body." We believe this definition is as practical as it is true.

There are two ways of ascertaining whether a reputed loaf of bread is really bread, or a reputed glass of water is water. One way is by chemical analysis; the other way is by eating and drinking. Upon the whole the common and experimental test is the more satisfactory and it is quite as scientific. Some people reach Christ by long and painful argumentation and searching into all the evidences of Christianity; while others simply take God at his word and come to an experimental knowledge of the truth and saving power of the Gospel. This is by far the better way. "O, taste and see that the Lord is good."

"The most enthusiastic business men's meeting I ever attended," remarked a gentleman in the business men's daily prayer-meeting in Cleveland, "was the Stock Exchange in Chicago." We quite believe it. If Christian business men should ever get together for an hour a day and discuss the work of the Lord with the same enthusiasm as they do stocks and grain, not a city in the land but would be brought over to the Lord's side. Nobody thinks of denouncing the meetings of the business exchanges of the country as hot-beds of excitement, or the participants as being fanatics and crazy men; yet a very moderate amount of enthusiasm manifested in the cause of Christ is denounced as fanaticism, and people are warned against the undue excitement. On the day of Pentecost there was such an enthusiastic meeting of God's people, that the disciples were charged with being drunk with new wine. Would God that all the Lord's people were so filled with the Spirit.—Words and Weapons.

GOSPEL HALL for CONSTANTINOPLE.

It will be remembered that some time ago an Evangelical Association was formed in Constantinople with the view of erecting a Gospel Hall, for the spread of Divine truth among the inhabitants of that cosmopolitan city. The following considerations show the importance of winning for Christ the city where Christianity was first proclaimed to be the religion of the world.

According to the latest census Constantinople proper contains over 873,000 inhabitants, of whom about 350,000 are Moslems, and the remainder so-called "Christians" of various denominations, and Jews. Among the Christians may be enumerated Orthodox Greeks, Gregorian Armenians, Copts, Nestorians, Roman Catholics, and a feeble band of native Protestants mustering barely 700. The diversity of races and variety of languages spoken in the city may be judged from the fact that the Holy Scriptures are sold in no fewer than 36 languages.

Situated partly in Europe, partly in Asia, with only the silver thread of the Bosphorus to divide two continents, Constantinople—the capital of a great Empire—is singularly well placed for exercising a preponderating influence. From the time of Constantine to our own day, politicians have seen its strategic importance, but its value as a centre for religious work is not relatively inferior. Travellers of every race and colour visit it from Europe, Asia, and Africa, and more than 100,000 persons at a time come from its provinces to engage in work there. Returning to their homes they naturally carry with them the opinions prevalent in the capital. Hence it is of paramount importance that the seeds thus conveyed be seeds for good and not for evil. Christianity should here display its banner and proclaim the Gospel in all its purity. But, alas! this is not the case. Although still a seat of Patriarchal authority, and the centre of several ecclesiastical organisations, Constantinople—the Rome of the East—the spot whence were convened those great councils which formulated Christian belief—still lies under the cloud of mediæval darkness. The form of religion is there, and no doubt religious life exists in individual cases, but this is not sufficient to purify the churches from the incrustations of error and superstition which hide and deface the person of the Saviour, and raise stumbling-blocks in the way of the conversion of Moslems and Jews.

The object which the Evangelical Association has at heart is, not to disintegrate existing Churches by drawing converts from one denomination to another, but to bring individuals under the personal influence of the truth as it is in Jesus. The raising of the standard of religious life among nominal Christians is the fulcrum whereby Moslems and Jews are to be brought to Christ.

This fact is so fully realised by the American Board of Missions whose headquarters are in Constantinople, that in their last report they say: "Unless the Armenian and Greek field in Constantinople is vigorously worked, and for years to come, there will be little hope for the other races whether in the capital or the country."

The hall in connection with the Rest in Smyrna has succeeded in making the Gospel known within a radius of 300 miles from that city, and a small coffee-room at Stamboul and the Sailors' Rest in Galata have been greatly blessed. Indeed, referring to the subject in the report already referred too, the American missionaries say, "Coffee-rooms are the most successful device we have found for reaching the mass of people;" and they have shown their readiness to co-operate in the scheme for the hall by forming part of its executive committee. The proposed hall will include refreshment and reading rooms, besides accommodation for religious services, Bible-classes, various Christian associations, &c.

A portion of the funds necessary for this enterprise has already been collected; but Mr. J. R. Van Millingen, manager of the Imperial Ottoman Bank, Stamboul, who is one of the promoters of the scheme, is now in this country, and will be glad to receive communications at

"JOURNEYING FOR THE LORD."

The writer of the following letter is a young lady who, previous to leaving England, worked with the Salvation Army in the West of London, and also among the police in Kensal Town.

Dear Friends,—I have not been able to keep a diary, but give you recollections of the Lord's dealings with me on my journey. On Thursday, January 27, Mr. S—— saw me safely on board the Germanic. As I was on deck in the afternoon, a gentleman asked me if I was alone. I answered, "No; I have a Friend that sticketh closer than a brother." We had a long talk. He was self-righteous, but listened while I talked of Jesus. Next day sea sickness came on; I suffered little, but had to lie up, and, having no appetite, felt weak. On the Sunday I tried to get up, but had to get back again. Willing now to wait the Lord's time, I felt resigned. When wondering why I was so useless, He reminded me that Paul was a night and a day in the deep, and, if his precious time could be so apparently wasted, why should I repine? Once, when questioning why I was so ill, the answer came, "I suffered much for thee, what canst thou bear for Me?" I said, "Yes, Lord, I can bear this." Then came the sweet consciousness that underneath were the everlasting arms, and I rested on them.

On Monday the weather was better, and I was able with assistance to sit on a deck-chair. Everyone was most kind. Next day I had to lie up again; but in a few days I was able to get up and to sit on the companion-way, where the Lord enabled me to witness for Him. Where I lay, there was just room for one to sit at my feet, and the people took it in turns to come for a talk. My business was soon known all over the vessel, hence they came looking for spiritual conversation. Of course, some would just talk and make light of it, but these were very few; most were deeply serious, and opened their hearts wonderfully. We reached port in eleven days, instead of eight, after a very rough passage. Only on that one day could anyone sit on deck.

After two days' rest in New York, the doctor and purser saw me off to Colorado. Miss A.'s brother was to meet me at Denver. I felt rather uneasy, because my train was due at Denver at 7 a.m. Sunday. I had not travelled on Sunday since 1880, when I became the Lord's. About 300 miles from Denver a conversation began with an American gentleman. I soon found he was a Christian, so told him of my trouble. We found my ticket would last till Monday, so I said I would stay over Sunday, if I knew of a respectable hotel. He was getting out at the next depôt, and recommended one there. I asked, "Is there a telegraph?" He said, "Yes, and you have just time to ask the Lord about it." I did so, and felt guided to stay. Then I wrote a telegram, saying that I hoped to reach Denver at 8 p.m. Monday. When we stopped at M'Cook, in S.W. Nebraska, my friend sent the telegram, and we reached the hotel about 10 p.m.

I awoke in the morning greatly refreshed, after my three days and nights in the train. Having a choice of Wesleyan, Congregational, and Lutheran worship, I chose the first. We got there too soon for the service, but were welcomed by the superintendent of the Sunday-school. He soon brought the minister, who, learning what I was come for, asked me to take the evening service. I felt that it was the Lord's doing, that he should thus trust an entire stranger. After the morning service, I was announced to speak in the evening, and I spoke for a few minutes, explaining how I came to be among them. Several shook hands, and welcomed me warmly. Before the evening meeting, Mr. S. said, "I want you to pray in faith for me, that I may receive a great blessing. I know I am a Christian, but I want something more." We had a large congregation, and the Lord was very present. I spoke from Luke iv. 18—19. After the address, the people flocked round, begging me to repeat the visit.

How has God fulfilled his word "Them that honour Me I will honour." I had desired to given me a true friend in Mr. S., and a good rest, with many to pray for me at M'Cook. On Monday the minister and superintendent were at the station to see me off, and gave me a hearty invitation to spend at least a week whenever possible. Mr. S. came two stations on the way to Denver with me, and said, "If I should take the mountain-fever, or find that living so high up did not suit me, I was to come straight back to Nebraska and make his home mine, and his wife would take care of me." Mr. A. met me at Denver. The evening after I arrived, I was asked to take both services at the Wesleyan chapel. See how the Lord prepares the way for his messenger. Is not He to be praised for his great goodness?—Yours in Jesus,

THE GOSPEL IN FRANCE.

Dear Friend,—I have been thinking much of the conversation we had with you yesterday with regard to what seems to me a too high estimate of the progress of the Gospel in France. Thank God for every door He has opened in that country; but, to quote the language of an experienced French pastor, "when we come to know what remains to do—the darkness, the ignorance, the unbelief, the superstition, the prejudice that oppose the work—one is tempted to fold one's arms and to sit down in despair. And if our God were not the Almighty, one might well despair. It is not by exaggerating our success and underrating the mighty opposing force of the enemy, that we are going to conquer. I think sometimes, in reading or hearing anticipations of speedy triumph, of the old boast of one who did not win, "The dust of Samaria shall not suffice for handfuls for the people who follow me." I feel like repeating tenderly and sadly the warning which answered the boast, "Let not him that putteth on his armour boast himself as he that putteth it off."

Now as one who has had a look on the barrenness of one part of the land during five years, may I tell you some of the hindrances to the success of the Gospel in France? We have read The Christian carefully all this time, and, of course, its accounts of work in France always received close attention. Several times we have seen noted "Progress of Protestantism in France," followed by statistics of an increased number of pastors. I do not think it is generally known in England that a large number of Protestant pastors in France are libéraux; which, I suppose, might be translated in Scotch "Moderates," or worse. Some, of course, are less "heterodox" than others, but among the few whom I knew, I have heard one deny the resurrection of the body, another the inspiration of the Scriptures; a third denies the miracles of our Lord, and many entirely deny his resurrection. One consistory is wholly "liberal" (with, perhaps, the exception of one discouraged, worn-out member), and opposes actively the reception of any evangelical pastor, not only within its own precincts, but in neighbouring parishes. The dearth of pastors has admitted some terribly unworthy men into the pastorate. "Notre pasteur n'est pas pieux," an old man told us one day.

When we read in The Christian a sentiment like the following (I quote from memory, it was in a speech at the annual meeting of a society): "We rejoice at the recent decision of the Mission Intérieure to leave the evangelisation of each district to the Protestant community which it surrounds," we could not help wondering how and when the districts are to be evangelised, where the pastors are such as I have described; or where, as frequently is the case, there are no pastors at all; or where the pastor has too much to do in his own parish, or is worn out with many labours, and with the daily struggle to live and educate his children, as it is thought a pastor should do, on £60 or £80 a year.

I suppose some will say confidently the Salvation Army is going to do it. Mr. and Mrs. other night. We honour the devotedness of many of their workers; the whole Christian Church is the richer for every soul they win. But are they not too sanguine in their estimate of what they have been permitted to accomplish? As yet, at any rate, France is not stirred from end to end by the Army. Thousands of villages, millions of souls, are untouched. Two young men go into a town, and begin meetings, and sell fifty En Avants. The cafés are as crowded as ever; if a few Catholics are missing from mass, their absence is hardly remarked among the throng of ignorant and bigoted worshippers. It is possible that the little prayer-meeting where the few warm-hearted Christians meet, may lack some of its attendants, attracted by the zeal of the new-comers. God bless the two young preachers and multiply their converts, but God keep them from boasting. These pioneers certainly should not be left to depend for daily bread on the sale of En Avant. It seems injudicious, and I think unscriptural. It is pitiful to read in a home letter from one of the young preachers—"If we could live without eating, I would not mind." The daily bread should be ensured to every officer, even if there were fewer railway journeys and telegraphic messages among their leaders. This continual "shortness of bread" has seemed most wonderful to me, for God is not short of means to provide for his children. The constant begging does not glorify Him. It does not glorify Him to have one young officer say, "We have no money to pay our rent, we must get up a café Alleluia." The Lord's hand is not shortened, nor his ear heavy.

Very tenderly, and with, I trust, no judging spirit, I would venture to ask this question, Has not the attitude of the Army in France towards the Lord's Day something to do with its constant state of want? I do wish some of those who are endeavouring to secure the observation of the Day of Rest could prevail on those who have taken the heavy responsibility of directing so many young and inexperienced disciples of our Lord, to give out from head-quarters the order, "Remember the Sabbath Day!" Buying and selling are buying and selling, if it be the buying of a railway ticket, or the selling of En Avant, or a hymn-book, or the last publication of La Maréchale. In France, where the Day of Rest is all but forgotten by the world and by the Church, it is all important that it should be sanctified by those who are striving to advance the Lord's kingdom on earth. I know well what will be said in answer to this, that selling En Avant is "spreading salvation;" but this distinction is one which Frenchwomen and their husbands will be slow to perceive. If En Avant is sold at the door of the chapel on Sunday, why may not the newsboy sell Le Petit Lyonnais, which is to win his daily bread? A pious French schoolmaster said to me, "If God forbids to have two measures and two weights, it is not likely that He will have one measure for the world and another for the Army."

You know I am no enemy to the Salvation Army; they are doing noble work for the Master, some of them even in want of all things; but I have ventured to point out some things which hinder them having the full sympathy and co-operation which they might have from the Christian workers and from the faithful band of evangelical pastors who have toiled and prayed, and sown the seed with tears for years past, before even there was a Salvation Army.

Will you pray for them and help them? No one knows how their hearts sink within them sometimes. It is not the veteran soldiers who go carelessly to battle. It is the young conscripts who make the streets ring with their forced laughter and noisy drums. And we, who know what awful enemies are the world, the flesh, and the devil, have need indeed to watch and be sober.

Yours very sincerely,

S. R. Geldard.

"This is a capital and useful book. Mr. Moody stamps all he does with his own vigorous personality, and a description of the work carried on near his home in Northfield, Mass., is interesting as evidencing the intensely practical character of one who is certainly no mere roving evangelist."
Methodist Recorder, July 7, 1887.

"This is a book calculated to interest and help Christian workers. They will find in it many thoughts that will arrest their attention and prove helpful and practical; some that may fitly be compared to 'Gold, Silver, and Precious Stones.'"—The Friend, July, 1887.

"This is no mere biography. It is a faithful, full, and fervid picture of Mr. Moody at work in his various organizations at his own home. . . . This beautifully got up and nicely illustrated volume ought to be in the hands of all Christian workers. It will be of the highest service to them. It teems with all kinds of useful hints suggested by an almost unique experience."
Oldham Chronicle, June 25, 1887.

"A fresh and vigorous book, calculated to provoke unto love and good works. Preachers, Sunday-school teachers, and others will find many helpful thoughts here."—Footsteps of Truth, July, 1887.

CASE FOR THIS WEEK.
CASE OF BRONCHO-PHTHISIS IN CORNWALL.

This case is furnished by Mr. W. H. Reed, of the Dunheved Iron Works, Launceston, Cornwall.

Mr. Reed is an old correspondent, having written me for various cases from Saltash and St. Germans. One very peculiar case he brought under my notice, some time since, of a man named Adams. "Everything had been tried for him, by his friends, that persons in their circumstances could get. He has quite recovered, and is in full work. His mother came to me to thank me very heartily for getting her your medicine." So writes Mr. Reed, when first bringing the case of his own workman before me, eighteen months ago.

Mr. Reed's man had been laid up for some weeks with colds, which had been followed by bronchitis. The man had got into an exceedingly weak, low state. Writing me for advice, &c., Mr. Reed says:—"I have the greatest faith in your splendid medicine."

Three weeks after this Mr. Reed writes:—"I am pleased to say that your medicine is having a capital effect upon my man." His appetite had improved, hectic flushes had disappeared, cough and expectoration both were lessened. Some pains in the side were complained of, but soon removed by use of a liniment prescribed by me.

In three months he was thoroughly well, and Mr. Reed writing me recently, says:—"You will be glad to know that my man, for whom you supplied medicine last year, who, according to public opinion, could not live, has, with the blessing of God upon your treatment, recovered fully, and been in full employ."

MISS DANIELL'S SOLDIERS' HOMES.

The saloon of the Mansion House was recently thrown open for a meeting, with the object of awakening interest in the last addition which this devoted lady is making to her work among soldiers. The committee of the small Home which has hitherto been all that London, the greatest city in the world, has provided for troops, had long been desirous of placing their work on a new footing. After much pressure Miss Daniell consented to accept the trust, and to add London to her already overwhelming responsibilities. As Sir Arthur Blackwood observed at the Mansion House, he, for his part, could hardly have had the heart to make such a request; and surely nothing but the conviction that the call was not only from earth but from heaven could have induced Miss Daniell to accept so heavy a burden. She has done so, we may be assured, in simple faith that "the Lord will provide," and in the confident expectation of the help and sympathy of his people.

The speakers were the Lord Mayor, who presided, and spoke warmly of his long knowledge of Mrs. and Miss Daniell, and hearty sympathy with the proposed extension of their work, Sir R. Phayre, Rev. H. Webb-Peploe, Major Owen Hay, Mr. S. Gurney Sheppard, and Sir A. Blackwood. The subject was presented in a thoroughly sympathetic and business-like manner by so representative a band of speakers. The testimony of each, from personal experience, as to the need and value of Soldiers' Homes was given with no uncertain sound.

Sir R. Phayre and Major Hay gave the weight of their judgment, not only as Christians and philanthropists, but as officers. The former quoted the saying of the great Duke forty years ago, that in every barracks there should be a place where a man could read a chapter in his Bible, and write to his mother. He described the way in which the Homes supply not only these needs, but all that can be wanted for the leisure hours of a soldier, which are the hours of his greatest temptations. This point was earnestly insisted on by all the speakers, with special reference to the temptations of London, which made it strange indeed that whilst London is the centre of Christian work for the world, and special efforts are made for Y.M.C.A., police, railway-men, postmen, &c., the soldiers who garrison it should be the only class left out in the cold.

Sir R. Phayre dwelt much upon the influence exercised by steady and God-fearing men in the Army, both at home and abroad. He stated that in India he had almost always found that the Christian men he met owed their conversion to Soldiers' Homes, an experience corroborated by Major Hay; and both spoke very warmly as to the help which commanding officers received from such men in their efforts to raise the standard of their regiments or batteries. Sir R. Phayre added that it was a work of national importance. About 30,000 recruits annually join the colours, representing an almost equal number who, within the some period, return to civil life. Of what importance it is that these should carry with them the habits of a self-controlled and Christian life. Such a soldier is eminently calculated to make a good citizen.

A strong point was made by Major Hay, who, after adding his own warm testimony to the "continual stream of blessing" in Miss Daniell's Homes, spoke of the precariousness of a soldier's life as a great call to provide him with the means of knowing Him "whose love takes away the fear of death, and every other fear." Two of his own soldier-servants had been brought to the Lord through Homes, and he believed that in the army there were but few Christians who were not much indebted to them. Sir A. Blackwood added that this indebtedness was by no means confined to the lower ranks, but that many officers and their wives had been also blessed.

There was evidently but one opinion amongst the speakers as to the need and benefit of the Homes, and especially as to the necessity of a suitable one for London, which hitherto has been so far behind in the matter. Nor was there a moment's hesitation as to the advantage which the committee have obtained by handing over their work to Miss Daniell. "I do not think it could be entrusted to better hands," said Sir A. Blackwood; and evidently this was the general feeling, only tempered by the fear of adding too greatly to her burdens, especially in the matter of finance. Mr. Sheppard, as another of her old trustees, whilst bearing testimony to Miss Daniell's work, said frankly that this fear had made him at first opposed to the idea of her adding this branch to her five other Homes; and he appealed to the citizens of London to relieve her from anxiety as to funds. It was stated by one speaker that from £4000 to £5000 would be needed, as it is admitted on all hands that Miss Daniell must make her "new departure" in a more suitable building than the small and obscure house which has hitherto served for a Home.

FROM JEST TO EARNEST.

In reporting the Travancore Church Council, the Madras Christian Missionary Record has the following:—

Messrs. Sathiadasan and C. Chakko of Mavelikara have mentioned in their joint report an incident which is as remarkable as it is interesting. A dramatic play organised by a Rajah and other great people of Cherukol, a heathen village not far from the residence of the evangelists, was lately acted in the Cherukol temple for the first time. This drama, called "Elamathu Kaly," or the "seventh play," lasted several successive nights, being intended (like other religious performances of the Hindus) as much for amusement as to please the deity. It was proposed that there should be for one night a representation of an evangelist preaching, and a Brahmin holding a high office in the temple was elected for the purpose. Assuming the dress, tone and manners of one of our evangelists, this Brahmin appeared on the stage, announcing himself to be a Christian teacher, and invited all present to listen to him. He further challenged such as had anything to object to in his words, to come forward and state their objections. He then began to speak in praise of the Christian religion, and gave a somewhat clear and correct outline of the principal doctrines. The more intelligent members of the audience then made their objections against several points, but these he refuted one by one with such skill and ability that his opponents felt really ashamed and were silenced. After this he proceeded to attack Hinduism, and exposed the folly of idolatry in such a clever and jocose manner as to excite much merriment, and was greeted by many of the audience with loud shouts of applause.

It may appear strange how such a thing could possibly have happened. But the temple authorities in assenting to the proposal might have intended no more than to have some merriment at the expense of Christianity, while under the excitement of the moment matters unconsciously passed on from jest to earnest, and the conviction prevailing in the minds of many respecting the superiority of Christianity might have led the crowds, just for a while, to forget other considerations and applaud the pretended evangelist. Mr. Sathiadasan and his colleague had preached in the vicinity of the above temple, and warm discussions had taken place between them and the very Brahmin who acted, on the stage, the part of the Christian evangelist as above described.

A NOBLE RECORD.

Under this heading, The New York Observer, in a notice of the "History of Mount Holyoke Seminary," gives a sketch of its founder, Mary Lyon, the story of whose life does indeed deserve the name of a noble record. Nurtured in a home of rural simplicity and Christian sincerity, at fifteen she was doing a hired girl's work for a hired girl's wages, and was skilled in all the household arts of the day, her own spinning-wheel supplying both the means for a winter's training in Ashfield Academy and the clothes she wore. With very limited school advantages, she eagerly seized every chance for improvement, and at seventeen began her long career as a teacher in district schools. After ten years' labour in association with Miss Grant at Derry and Ipswich Academies, in 1834 she began to devote herself to the great work of her life, and for three years laboured to found Mount Holyoke Seminary, and thus to do a new thing in education, by giving opportunities for educating young women on the same broad and thorough principles as young men.

Having formed her plans with care, Miss Lyon laid the matter before a committee of intelligent and liberal men, and a charter having been obtained, and South Hadley, Mass., fixed upon as the location of the new Educational Institute, she herself raised the first thousand dollars in two months from friends and former pupils. In November, 1837, that is, in three years from the first meeting to consult about it, the Seminary was opened for pupils.

A word is necessary here to explain the scope of the undertaking. This was comprehensive, and included, with the most thorough intellectual training and careful religious culture, the performance of household duties, and the encouragement of the principles of self-help. The object was to show that women were not necessarily unfitted for the duties of the household and for wives and mothers by reason of intellectual training. The domestic work of the institution was done by the pupils; teachers willingly served at low salaries because of their interest in the work. Teachers and taught laboured con amore, and their zeal for the success of the seminary was almost equal to that their leader.

Eighty scholars entered the first year—four in the senior and thirty-four in the middle class, the charge for board and tuition being fixed at 64 dollars. At the close of the first year there was a balance in hand, and for the next sixteen the annual charge was 60 dollars. The teaching was as thorough and extended as in the colleges of the time, and the Bible was pre-eminently the book of the house, its precepts being in constant use. Thoroughness in preparation and progress was insisted upon, mental power was preferred to acquisition, and education was regarded as an unending process, not an attainment that could be finished in a certain number of years. Everything that would promote health of body and vigour of mind was done at Mount Holyoke from the start, and the history of the institution is the best commentary upon the methods of its founder. And those who have succeeded Miss Lyon have followed in her footsteps.

Last year there were three hundred and fifteen students from twenty-seven states and territories and from foreign lands. The charge is now, with a largely increased curriculum and greater advantages of every sort, 175 dollars. During the fifty years the seminary has been open, the total number of students has been 12 500. The graduates have been 2000, more than half the students have become teachers, and about 140 have been foreign missionaries. Truly here is the record of a noble life and noble work.

[A Life of Mary Lyon is published by Messrs. Morgan & Scott, 1s. and 1s. 6d.]

For the Young.

ORCHID.[*]

My name is Orchid. I am twenty-eight years old, and have been a Christian one year. My home is at White Pagoda, and I have lived there with my mother-in-law ever since I was two months old. My father was a farmer, and could have taken care of me; but shortly after my birth a blind fortune-teller came along and told my mother that my brother, who was two years older than I, would die unless I was removed from the family. Blind fortune-tellers are to be found everywhere. They travel about, led by a child that can see, beating a little gong to let people know they are passing. Those who wish to consult the fortune-teller call him to their door, tell him the year, month, day, and hour of their birth, and he makes a calculation of times, and tells them what is going to happen. Those who are sick, ask him when they will get well; those who have absent relatives inquire when letters or money will come from abroad; those who are going on a journey seek a lucky day for starting; and those who wish to know what is going to happen to their children, call him to predict their fates. He gives a few words of advice to the person concerned, is paid three-tenths of a halfpenny for his services, and goes on his way.

It was in this way that my parents learned that they ought to part with me. They were very sorry to have me go, but as a boy is of so much greater value than a girl, they would not risk my brother's life by keeping me. They gave me to an acquaintance at White Pagoda, who had just lost a young child, and she brought me up as the future wife of her youngest son, then five years old. As such very little girls are worth nothing, and as the bargain must be closed by money, she paid my mother one penny for me, and I became hers. She had had twelve children in all, but my husband was the only survivor. Her husband smoked opium, and spent the money his children earned, so that one of his sons had hanged himself in despair.

My mother-in-law always gave me the best she had, but that was not much. I grew strong and large, and when I was eight years old I could cook, spin, plant rice, and help to turn the pump with which the rice-field was watered. When I was fifteen, on a day chosen as lucky, I had the god of the bedstead set up in a room of my own, and lived with my husband. After some years I had two sons. My father-in-law died; and then we found that the land on which our house was built belonged to someone else. The owner tore it down and made a rich-drying place where it stood. We then mortgaged our only field for eight pounds, and with this money built two houses, which fell down soon after in a season of heavy rain.

Three years ago, a man in our village became a Christian: soon after that two Bible-women came to stop at his house. My mother-in-law and I used to take the children in the evening and go to hear them talk. My husband heard too, and we all believed at the same time. My mother-in-law went one Sunday morning five miles to Linden Chapel, and when she came back at night she went straight to the god of the bedstead, and taking it out of doors threw it away. Afterward the Bible-woman named Love came to the house, and after engaging in prayer took down the only other idol in the house, the one we had inherited from our ancestors, and put it with its fixtures in a basket, which my mother-in-law carried and threw into the river.

When my own father and mother heard that I had become a Christian, they were very much distressed; my mother cried, and my father could not eat for four days. My aunt came to tell me how displeased they were, and that they wished me to put away this new religion, but I told her to say that anything else they might ask of me I could do, but that this religion was something that could not be put away.

Last year my husband, finding the times hard, and hoping to earn something abroad, went to Manilla. Before he went, he did not call a fortune-teller to find a lucky day, and did not go to the temple to get a bag of incense ashes to wear as a charm on his breast, as he would have done had he not been a Christian; but we knelt down, with the children, and asked God to take care of us while he was gone, and bless him while away, and bring him safely back.

Last month my eldest son, eleven years old, was baptized. I did not know it beforehand, though four months' previously he had told me he wished to join the church. He did not tell me, because he was afraid the brethren would not receive him. I was surprised, and thanked God, when I saw him at the place of baptism.

My youngest son is five years old, and my mother-in-law takes care of him while I am away from home. We have a house of one room, which is mortgaged for two pounds. My husband lately sent home two pounds; but it was all used in paying my father-in-law's debts.

I have been sorrowful from my childhood up. I have never known a time when I had not reason for great anxiety. But during the past year, though my earthly circumstances remain the same, I have been almost happy. I know that there is a Saviour and a heaven, and that has taken away seven-tenths of the weight of my troubles.

"M.D.S.F."

At the meeting of the Mission to Deep Sea Fishermen, at Mildmay, Mr. E. J. Mather, the Director, told this little story, in introducing Skipper Frank Macdonald, who, after having been at sea for sixteen years, is now in the service of the Mission:—

I want to draw attention to the initials "M.D.S.F." on his guernsey. Probably you will all conclude, and rightly so, that they are the initial letters of the title of this Mission. But I heard the other day a new and very ingenious meaning attached to the letters, and the story as it reached me was this:—There was a skipper in one of the East Coast fleets who had been away from his wife and family, away from Christ, and a man who had treated his family badly. The children, especially one young girl, had often heard high words between the father and mother, and had heard the father being scolded by his wife for his selfishness, and his bad treatment of her and the children.

Through God's goodness the man was laid hold of by the Mission, and received blessing through the Mission; and when one day he appeared arrayed in a blue guernsey, with the initials "M.D.S.F.," this sharp little girl said, "I know what it means." "Why, what can it mean," said her father, "but Mission to Deep Sea Fishermen?"

"No, father, it does not; it means, Mother doesn't scold father." Although that girl's statement is amusing, it struck me as a grand testimony to the reality of the work the Mission is, by God's grace, doing. I know, as a fact, that there are scores of cottage homes on the East Coast to-day where mother doesn't scold father, because father has been laid hold of for Christ on board the Mission ship.

ALTON HOP-PICKERS' MISSION.

The hop season will soon be here, and we are willing to go among the thousands who will visit this district, as in former years. Six tents were erected last year. We have a request from the policemen if possible to put up more; but shall be unable to take the responsibility of the six unless assistance comes beforehand.

This is our Jubilee year, for when your paper was The Revival you then took note of our efforts, and the work, more or less, has been reported by you ever since. We have lived to see some of the children who at that time were with their parents (of the travelling class), grown up and become husbands and wives and have children of their own, who remember with gratitude our visits among them, and are now settled down in villages, owning a little property, and their children put to school. We give God all the praise. A friend, E. S., has sent us a pleasing surprise of a £5 note, and wishes it to be acknowledged in your columns. May this be a real Jubilee year in every sense.

Alton, Hants. S. Chinn.

HOMES FOR THE AGED BLIND.

An important addition to the Homes for Aged Blind Men and Women at Crouch-hill, which owe so much to the devotion of Rev. and Mrs. H. Bright, the founders and hon. superintendents, was inaugurated on Tuesday, July 12, by the laying of the memorial stones of a new Jubilee Hall, to be used for evangelistic purposes. This hall has become necessary by the rapid growth of the work, there being, as Mr. Bright said, no room large enough to accommodate the inmates. But the new hall will also be open to the general public, and reference was made to the good influence exercised upon the blind by visitors who will speak a kindly word to them and otherwise prove their sympathy. The building will hold 400 persons, and is to cost £800.

Mr. F. A. Bevan, who presided, briefly addressed the meeting, expressing the deep sympathy which both he and Mrs. Bevan felt in the work. He also urged the peculiar claims of the aged blind, who are cut off from so many sources of enjoyment open to others. Ten memorial stones were then laid—the first two by Mr. and Mrs. Bevan, to whom a silver trowel was presented on behalf of the blind inmates as a token of their gratitude to these benefactors.

Mr. D. G. Wilkins, treasurer, gave a short statement of the work, and said there are now in the Homes thirty-six women and seven men.

Rev. Gordon Calthrop, speaking on behalf of many clerical brethren who could not be present, expressed their sympathy with the work, and, after a few words from Rev. H. Bright and Mrs. Bevan, the interesting proceedings were brought to a close.

CATHEDRALS.

Writing with reference to a proposed cathedral in New York, The Presbyterian Messenger says:—

Cathedrals belong naturally and properly to the Romish Church, which is at once hierarchical in constitution, and uses a complicated sacerdotal ritual in its worship. The influence of cathedrals is distinctly favourable to the Romish Church. The genius of Popery hangs about those ancient walls, haunts those towered and vaulted piles. There Protestantism seems to be never quite at home. As the stately structures have been left as a legacy on our hands, we must do the best we can with them. But we must frankly say that we should not consider it a good omen for the Protestant future of America if a passion for building cathedrals seized on the people. Ecclesiastical art is one of the agencies by which the mediæval spirit is trying again to establish itself in our midst. America ought not to follow in our wake, but to use its special advantages for developing to the utmost the true spiritual and practical genius of Protestant Christianity.

WORKING WOMEN'S HOME.

The fifth report of this Westminster Home, for a class of persons for whom very little is done, shows how valuable in many cases has been the aid thus extended. A worker who had been trying in vain to find a home to which a respectable girl would be admitted without delay, recently remarked, "Had she been a refuge case, there would have been no difficulty." This home is exactly suited for respectable girls who for a time are out of employment and therefore in great need of help.

Last year seventy-one inmates were received, of whom half were under twenty years of age. Seventeen were old inmates, who are permitted when out of a situation to return to the Home, even though they have not been able meanwhile to pay back the amount previously incurred for board, which in most cases is faithfully done as far as possible. In some cases, however, the debts thus incurred can never be paid, and, therefore, the institution is much in need of outside help. Many casual cases are brought in by policemen and others. Another branch of the work is a day home or nursery, where last year over one hundred children were received, the attendances numbering nearly three thousand. There is also a work-room in which a large number of women are employed, and temperance and other work is forwarded. Communications should be addressed to Miss Cay, at the Home, 53, Horseferry-road, Westminster.

OPEN-AIR MISSION.

SUMMER FESTIVAL.

Once a year the members, i.e., the preachers of the Open-Air Mission, are fêted by some generous friend of the Society; and this festival increases in popularity each year. This year Mr. and Mrs. Henry Ford Barclay, of Monkhams, Woodford, gave the invitation, which was accepted by about 280 of the preachers, thus exceeding all preceding Festivals in the matter of numbers. Under a marquee, dinner and tea were served; cricket, lawn tennis, boating, and other exercises were indulged in; singing, with friendly chats, or more animated discussion characterised these active spirits while resting under the shade of the magnificent trees or on the hay; and a photograph of the group was taken by Mr. Eason of Dalston-lane.

During the forenoon an interesting narrative of the spread of the Gospel in Finland was given by Mr. Braxen, who, after a successful theological training for the Lutheran Church, decided to devote his life to itinerant evangelistic work. He described that country as ready and open for the spread of the Gospel.

Immediately after dinner a photograph of the previous excursion, taken at Epsom, handsomely framed and suitably inscribed, was presented to the host and hostess; and then Rev. Colmer B. Symes, of Kensington, addressed the preachers. He first congratulated them on the results of their labours, at the same time cautioning them against false ideas of results. One might forge the first link in a chain, and another the last, but the whole chain was the completed result of many workers. His next congratulation was that the preachers were sowing seeds of truth, and not only so, but it was distinctly evangelical truth. Here he discussed the theory much in vogue now that sermons should be on the lines of the Sermon on the Mount. This he dissented from, because the Sermon on the Mount was but ethical, and did not show the way of salvation. Their business was to bring men within reach of Christ, and to tell them of salvation by his atoning work. The world was desperately in need of leaders, and it was for the preachers to spring to the front, and declare the truth of God with unfaltering accents.

The day was full of summer beauty, and will long linger in the memories of these street preachers, for whose pleasure the family of the kind hosts laid themselves out with such untiring devotion.

DEEP SEA FISHERMEN.

A meeting in connection with this Mission was held at the recent Mildmay Conference, Mr. R. Scott-Moncrieff presiding.

Mr. E. J. Mather, the Director, in a few sentences, described the progress of the Mission. By God's goodness, he said, for nearly six years there has been a stirring up of sympathy in the hearts of his people on shore, which has found very practical expression towards these North Sea fishermen. There are seven Mission ships cruising in the seven fleets in the North Sea, which have driven out—I will not say are driving out, but have driven out—from those fleets with which they are stationed the devil's mission ship, that has done the devil's work for so many years. I asked a North Sea fisherman one day how many years the devil's mission-ships had been at work there, and he told me upwards of thirty years; but I met last week an old man aged seventy, who said he remembered the Dutch copers fifty-seven years ago in the North Sea. These foreign copers have wrought most terrible havoc: have ruined both the bodies and souls of the men; have greatly injured the owners, and have impoverished many families on shore.

Scores—nay, hundreds—of men have come to the vessel with wounds, and bruises, and illnesses to be attended to. When a man is suffering from a compound fracture of the leg, after his agonies have been relieved, and the skilful Mission skipper has bound up the injured limb, and put it in splints, and eased him of his suffering, then is the time—and no time better—to whisper to him of the love of Christ. No wonder that a man in the Hull fleet should exclaim as he did, when such an injury had been attended to: "God bless those kind folks on shore who send out the Mission ships!" Though we do a great deal besides preaching the Gospel, it is understood throughout the fleets that, whatever a man's motive in going on board a Mission ship, no man is allowed to leave without hearing of Christ.

Four of the Mission "skippers," or captains, then told in their own peculiarly homely and graphic way, something of their experiences of life in the North Sea, and of the great blessing the Mission had proved to the fleets. As one brief example of their touching words, we give the following:—"I will tell you of a meeting one Sunday afternoon. It was on board a little vessel, and the cabin would only hold about twenty-five comfortably; but there were thirty-five present. I did not know what to do—whether to address them, or whether to have a prayer-meeting, but the thought came to me to have an experience meeting. I took the thought, and we had an experience meeting. I read, and we sang a hymn. 'Now, brethren,' I said, 'stand up and tell us what the Lord Jesus Christ has done for you. It does my heart good if I can only see one testify as to the saving power of Christ. One man got up full of joy, and there was a friend by his side, and he put his arm round his neck, and said, 'Oh! Jack, you know what I have been. I have been a drunkard, a wife-beater—all but a murderer; but, bless the Lord, He has changed my heart,' and thus we had an experience meeting, lasting about three-quarters of an hour. It ought to gladden the heart of everyone to know that those men who have been despised have been brought to Christ, whom to know is eternal life."

The Chairman: On my own account I am able to testify, by personal experience, to the value of the work, as I spent a fortnight about a year ago on board one of the Mission vessels. One stormy day I saw them ferrying fish, and I could not help exclaiming, "How brave these men are!" Though a great deal has been done, a great deal more remains to be done. There are twelve fleets in the North Sea in the winter, and seventeen in the summer; and we have only seven Mission smacks altogether, and, I believe, there is generally one of these in port at a time. Not only are the fishermen grateful for the work of the Mission, but also the fishermen's wives and children. When I went ashore I visited eight or nine of the fishermen's wives, and it gave me great pleasure to go in and say, "Are you John So-and-so's wife?" "Yes," was the answer, with a little alarm; "have you seen my husband?" "Yes." "How was he looking?" I told her I took her address from her husband, and said I would go and see her and her children, and I told her her husband was quite well; then I was asked in, and the wife dusted the big arm-chair, and asked me to say how her husband was looking and all about the services at sea; and the Mission was blessed again and again. In five of these families the mothers called in the bairns from the door and said, "Here is a gentleman who saw father the other day," and then we had a little meeting and prayed for father, and so they gathered round, and we had a short prayer for father at sea. It was a delightful moment, and I felt it a privilege to bring five minutes' blessing to those people. I appeal to you, ladies, for there may be some who have husbands or sons at sea or far away—what would you not give to bring any comfort to your husbands or your sons? Let your hearts go out to these noble men, and pray and help them to the best of your ability as God helpeth you.

THEATRE & PANTOMIME CHILDREN.

A drawing-room meeting was held last week at Mr. Frank Morrison's residence, Cromwell House, South Kensington, to consider the question of the employment of children in theatres. A large number of ladies attended. Mrs. Fawcett, who was not able to be present, wrote:—"I feel convinced that the facts of these children's lives have only to be made known in order to procure their inclusion within the general rule of the English law—that it is the duty of parents to support their children, not of little children to support their parents. When we know that in our own country the Factory Acts and the Education Acts have forbidden the employment of young children in nearly all industrial pursuits, it is little short of a scandal that babies of four and five years of age and upwards should still be allowed to act and dance, day after day and night after night, in the theatre. One who till lately was an actress herself has told us that she is convinced that very few of the children employed in theatres remain chaste after twelve years of age.........What we ought to aim at is the extension of the principle of the Factory Acts to the theatre children—that is, the absolute prohibition of their employment under ten years old, and the regulation of their employment between ten and fourteen."

Mrs. Ormiston Chant observed that in England 10,000 children were employed in the pantomimes every year. Many of them were Board-school and Voluntary-school children, and how, she asked, could these poor little things get through their school work after the night's excitement at the theatre? Mrs. Chant gave many very sad episodes in the lives and deaths of young girls who had been employed at pantomimes. Surely, the sacrifice of 10,000 children every year ought not to be made, simply to put money into the pockets of theatrical speculators.

Miss Davenport Hill remarked that many of her colleagues on the School Board shared her feeling that they should do what they could to keep the children from being employed at the theatres. Other ladies addressed the meeting.

GIRLS' RESCUE ASSOCIATION.—The preventive and rescue work amongst women and girls, carried on by this Association, has been greatly blessed. Some taken in years ago are now living respectable Christian lives. During the past eighteen months over 130 girls have been received in the Norwood and Eastern Homes at Reading, apart from the branches; and in consequence of having continually to refuse heart-rending cases the committee have now taken more commodious premises. The girls are employed and trained in domestic service, laundry and needlework. Communications should be addressed to the Secretary, Miss F. Janvrin, Ivy House, Saint Giles' Close, Reading.

MANUEL MATAMOROS.

DEAR SIR,—You will remember the help you got us for dear Matamoros, when a prisoner at Granada, by inserting his letters in your paper, THE REVIVAL. Many hundred pounds were contributed by the publicity thus given to them. You will remember, too, probably, his glorious confession of Christ before the Judge at Barcelona, which cost him imprisonment and death. It was as follows (and is worth reprinting in semi-Papal England to-day):—

Question.—"Do you profess the Catholic Apostolic Roman faith; and, if not, what religion do you profess?"

Answer.—"My religion is that of Jesus Christ; my rule of faith is the Word of God, or Holy Bible, which, without a word altered, curtailed, or added, is the basis of my belief, and in this I am confirmed by the last few sentences of the Apocalypse and the many distinct charges of the Apostles in their Epistles. The Roman Catholic Church, not being based upon these principles, I do not believe in her dogmas, still less do I obey her in practice."

The Tribunal appeared astonished at these words, and the Judge said:—"Do you know what you are saying?" "Yes, sir. I cannot deny it. I have put my hand to the plough, and I dare not look back." The Judge was silent, and the Tribunal arose.

During the earthquake in Malaga in December, 1884, the house where Matamoros was born was terribly shaken, and a part of it has to be rebuilt by order of the Corporation, at a cost of £200. The aged mother of this truly noble man, who is still living, can only scrape together £120 towards this, but Miss Browne, of Paris, and some Dutch friends guarantee £50 more. The remaining £30 I am trying to collect in England. The building of this part leaves a "patio," or interior square enclosure for an excellent chapel, which, with four walls already existing, need only be roofed, and this the widow also desires to see done after the proposed restoration is accomplished.

I remember the wonderful self-denial and self-sacrifice of Matamoros when in prison; after receiving more than £2000 from England, he kept none for himself, but distributed it all carefully amongst the many sufferers in Granada and Malaga, who had come under the ban of the Romish priests for reading the Scriptures. And when I visited him in 1863 in his cell at Granada I found him a living skeleton, with great patches on the knees of his trousers, when he might have worn the best broadcloth, for he had liberty to buy what he liked in food and clothing. He was not a Christian of the ordinary type; he was head and shoulders above the best of us: all had been spent on others, and nothing spent on himself.

Let us go forward in Spain and not despise the day of small things in that country. Twenty-five years ago Matamoros was a prisoner of Christ in Granada; to-day there are three Protestant places of worship in Malaga, his native town. And in almost every large town the Gospel is faithfully preached and a colporteur busy. According to an estimate I have recently seen, some 12,000 persons are supposed to be in favour of the reformed faith, and a great part of these are connected with the different new churches. May the good Lord water the seed sown, and help forward his kingdom and mightily shake the bulwarks and powers of darkness in this deeply interesting and long neglected country.—Yours in Christ,

WM. GREENE.

A MISSIONARY FAREWELL.—A meeting was held in the school-rooms of All Souls', Langham-place, W., on Tuesday evening, July 12, to wish the Rev. R. H. Walker God speed on his departure for mission work in Eastern Equatorial Africa, and to present him with a testimonial. Mr. Walker is (D.V.) leaving England shortly with Rev. R. P. Ashe, of Uganda. He has been curate of All Souls' for eight years, and his loss is very much

ROYALTY IN RATCLIFF HIGHWAY.

ON Tuesday of last week, Miss Child, with her friends and sailors at the Welcome Home, Ratcliff Highway, had the honour conferred upon them of a visit from H.R.H. the Princess Mary Adelaide, Duchess of Teck, who was accompanied by the Duke of Teck and Princess Victoria. A large concourse of people were found outside the Home cheering the Royal personages as they arrived. Outside and inside the Home everything seemed to speak of this festival.

As the Royal visitors entered, the sailors and assembled friends sang, after which Miss Child conducted the visitors round the house. In one of the rooms tea was partaken of, and subsequently the inspecting of the Home was pursued, in which much interest was evinced. The Royal visitors expressed their pleasure at what they had seen, and left amidst the cheers and hurras of the immense gathering of people.

INDIAN COLPORTEUR-EVANGELISTS

A NEW line of Gospel evangelism is being opened up in India. Colporteurs have done incalculable good in spreading truth in many parts of this great land. It is now proposed to have a number of active and devoted workers to operate in the large cities and along the railway lines, selling books, and preaching the Gospel from house to house as they go. They will also hold meetings, and assist others as occasion affords. Two are already engaged, an American and a Marathi. The work will first be pressed among the English who are scattered so largely throughout the country, and a call has been issued for workers, plain, hard-working men, full of faith and of the Holy Ghost, and with special tact in personal dealing with souls.

Special care will be taken in the selection of books of a directly awakening and soul-stirring order. Books and tracts promotive of Christian experience and work, warning against current errors, evil practices, &c., will be chosen. A large supply of the best tracts and tract papers will be required for gratuitous distribution; the colporteur-evangelists will, if possible, leave something at every house, whether they are admitted or not. It is expected that this agency will be almost entirely self-supporting. The men will live among the people as they go over the country, and their earnestness of heart and successful labours will, it is believed, so commend them to the people that they will be received and fed during their short stay in each station. But help will be needed in securing a sufficiently large stock of books to begin with, and continual supplies of tracts, papers, &c., for distribution. There will also be expenses in getting the agency into operation, and for this the co-operation of Christians is earnestly asked.

This colporteur-evangelism will be union and undenominational. It will be helpful to all the evangelical missions and churches. It will draw away from none, but will labour to build up all in spiritual life and soul-saving power. It is evident that a great amount of good can be accomplished through this line of work. The prayers and sympathy of our readers are requested. Any who wish to learn more of the enterprise are invited to address the "Manager," India's Watchman, Bombay, India.

THE COLPORTAGE ASSOCIATION. — The annual excursion of the members of this Association took place last week, when about thirty proceeded to Rickmansworth. Rev. R. Shaw, rector, very kindly entertained these friends throughout the day, which was one of complete enjoyment to all. After the tea a meeting was held, and Mr. Shaw gave an address on the words, "Buy the truth," which forms the motto of the Association. Mr. R. Paton followed with a few words of encouragement, and several of the colporteurs also gave some words of cheer to their younger brethren. The office of the Association

YOUNG MEN AND SCEPTICISM.*

TRUST versus dogma may be said to be the distinctive features of these sermons. It would appear, according to Dr. Clifford's informants, that the young men of the period are being shunted on to the lines of infidelity through the ill-advised attempts of preachers who cannot preach unless they have a definite creed to enunciate. Dr. Clifford imagines that the mischief might be averted, if only personal trust in Christ were made the "be all" and "end all" of ministry to young men, and if this class were told to "watch the Master work," and to listen to "his many-coloured wisdom spoken on the slopes of Mount Hattin." We believe that Dr. Clifford's sermons are grounded on a thorough misapprehension of the whole case. It is not the dogmatist in theology who is either the cause or the occasion of youthful scepticism in these days, but the men, and their name is legion, who have found no better use for their pulpits than contemning or explaining away the clearly defined truths of inspiration.

Dr. Clifford's specific is crude and inconsistent to the last degree. It is absurd to put aside for the time being "the mystery of the Incarnation, and of the Sacrifice, and of the Resurrection" and withal imagine that personal trust in Christ can redeem the situation. Why! there is no fulcrum for the lever of trust in Christ unless the supernatural and Divine be actually present and energetic in the creed. How can trust in Christ proceed unless "the mystery of the Incarnation, and of the Sacrifice, and of the Resurrection" be embodied in the faith? Are the young men of to-day likely to put their trust in a dead man or in a fellow creature that once was, simply because a friend tells them to do so? The idea is preposterous. The dogmatic in theology as represented in evangelical ministry is a sine quâ non of personal trust in Christ, and is not to be stigmatised by anyone as "unnecessary impositions of men."

The following quotation will serve as a specimen of the author's style and theology:—

> I have known men who have for long doubted the existence of God, and denied that we could know anything of Him, resolutely set themselves to be true and pure, and unselfish; and the changed attitude has begotten a yearning for and a trust in a truth and righteousness and goodness out of and beyond themselves; and the conviction that they must dwell in a personal source has gradually grown within their aspiring spirits; and they have come to feel that it is a personal will that is at the centre of our complicated, perplexed, and mysterious life, always giving out in work and always unexhausted—a will, and not a cold, hard material "power—not of ourselves"—the personal will of a living and loving Father."

We readily accord to Dr. Clifford the credit of being well-meaning. He is an enthusiast, and would fain put matters to rights all round. But his conspicuous talents as a reformer, are, we venture to submit, in the main issue misdirected.

* THE DAWN OF MANHOOD. Twelve sermons. By Rev. JOHN CLIFFORD, D.D. The Christian Commonwealth Office.

THE EVANGELICAL ALLIANCE.—In response to a cordial invitation, signed by representatives of all evangelical denominations in Aberdeen, the next annual Conference of the Evangelical Alliance is to be held in that city on September 20 and two following days. The programme issued by the Council in London includes a number of topics of wide interest to Christendom. Among those who are to preside and give addresses are the following:—Lord Polwarth, General Sir Robert Phayre, Mr. J. Campbell, M.P., Revs. Principal Brown, Professor Charteris, Dr. Marshall Lang, Dr. Sinclair Paterson, H. G. C. Moule, Dr. Herdman, Dr. Murray Mitchell, Principal Cairns, Dr. Clemance, W. S. Swanson, W. Wyatt Gill, &c. Messrs. T. Cook & Son have prepared a circular giving details of a specially conducted tour, combining visits to many places of interest in Caledonia previous to arrival at Aberdeen. The London and North-Western Railway Company have also issued a time-table expressly for the convenience of those who may attend the Conference. Copies of the programme of proceedings and all particulars will be gladly furnished by the Secretary of

MR. MOODY'S SUMMER SCHOOL.

Our correspondent writes, with respect to the opening of this Conference at Northfield :—

There are over four hundred young men present this year. The delegates represent all nationalities and many of the colleges in the United States and Canada have sent representatives. Cambridge (Eng.) University is represented by Messrs. McGregor and Macfie. Over fifty secretaries of Y.M.C.A.'s are present, and others from all parts of the States. Among the men of note, may be mentioned Prof. Henry Drummond, from Glasgow; Rev. Dr. Broadus, Kentucky; Mr. Joseph Cook, Boston; Dr. Pierson, Philadelphia; Rev. Mr. H. Clay Trumbull, editor of The Sunday-school Times; Mr. R. C. Morse, International Secretary of Y.M.C.A.'s; Mr. R. R. McBurney, General Secretary, New York Y.M.C.A.; Mr. Hodder, from London, and a host of others.

The first meeting of the Conference was held on Thursday, June 30, at 11 a.m. After some words of welcome from Mr. Moody, he said he wanted the preliminary service to be quite informal. Many hymns were sung, and most of the time was spent in prayer. "We are met," said Mr. Moody, at the close, "that we may see God; let us remove everything that would hide his face from us. If this is the desire of those that have come up to this Conference, we will not be disappointed. But we must be terribly in earnest. Last year I received the greatest blessing I ever got, and the anointing I then had lasted all the year. I am expecting greater blessing this year."

Professor Drummond and Dr. Broadus were the speakers at the evening meeting. Mr. Drummond has made himself very popular among the students, and his addresses have been clear, pure, and chaste in their style. Many of the students are surprised to find in the Professor a young, handsome man; they expected to see an old man with grey hair. His "Natural Law in the Spiritual World" has had a sale of over 100,000 copies in the United States.

Professor Drummond's subject was "Preparation for Learning." He pointed out that almost everything depended upon the instrument that was brought to bear upon the work. Truth was the product of the whole man, and not only must the intellect be clear, but the body must be strong and free from disease. Dr. Broadus spoke on "Familiarity with the Bible." He said there was no danger of this familiarity breeding contempt. We want to know the contents of the Bible, and have much of it learned off by heart. Those who know their Bibles well, and know the human heart, are a great power in the world. This knowledge will be found invaluable in Christian work, in visiting the sick and afflicted, in dealing with the anxious, and in one's own experience in battling against temptation.

Mr. Moody closed the meeting by saying that we must take the whole Book. Life is too short to understand it all, and what we cannot know here, we will hereafter. Every time we read it we get something new.

On Friday morning Dr. Pierson gave a Bible reading on Philemon, from which he drew the following lessons:—(1) The Epistle is an illustration of the plan of redemption. (2) The sinner is the property of God, but has fled from God, wronged, and robbed him. (3) We may by sin break our relationship to God, but not our obligation. (4) Jesus converts and adopts. (5) Jesus sends us back to the Father, and with his blood promises to pay all our debt.

Dr. Broadus spoke for nearly an hour and a half on "Inter-Biblical History." He divided his subject into four periods. (1) The Persian, beginning with the return from the captivity down to B.C. 331. (2) The Greek, from B.C. 331 to B.C. 167. (3) The Maccabean, from B.C. 167 to B.C. 63. (4) The Roman, from B.C. 63 to A.D. 70. He showed the expectations of the Jews at this period in regard to "this age," and introduce "the coming age." (b) "Messiah will not be superhuman, but only a gifted king descended from David." (c) "He will have a forerunner, Elijah, some think several forerunners." (d) The Gentiles will gather to war, and the Messiah will conquer them and reign over all He does not destroy. (e) The dead will rise to a general judgment, after which the wicked shall go to Gehenna, and the righteous shall live on in this world with Messiah.

In the afternoon groups of young men gathered under trees in different parts of the grounds, and asked questions from Professor Drummond, Dr. Broadus, and Dr. Pierson.

This was "Dominion Day" to the Canadians, and at five o'clock they had a gathering in "Senior Glen," where the Union Jack was flying. Several speeches were delivered, and the meeting broke up after singing "God Save the Queen."

Every provision has been made for the comfort, happiness, and profit of those who have come to the Conference. It is no light work to provide for such a company for fourteen days. The regular sessions of the Conference are held at 10 a.m. for two and a half hours and at 8 p.m. for one and a half hours. But there are many other meetings. Every morning at six Mr. Moody gathers the early risers in a little glen for Bible study. Breakfast is served between seven and eight. At 8.30 a large company of Y.M.C.A. men meet to talk over their work, and try to enlist recruits for the general secretaryship. These talks have been very profitable, and it is hoped that some of the best men in the colleges will give themselves to this work. Dinner is served at 1 o'clock, and the afternoon is devoted to out-door exercises.

After supper there are several very interesting gatherings. On the brow of the hill (where a lovely view of the setting sun is to be had), a company of Y.M.C.A. men meet under a tree to confer about their work. In "Senior Glen" those interested in foreign missions assemble, and stir up one another in regard to the heathen world. At one of these meetings ten students gave their reasons for going abroad. At the close of this service Mr. Wilder, one of the students who was appointed at the last Conference to visit the colleges and stir the students to take an interest in mission work, gave a short account of what he had done. 160 colleges had been visited, and over 2000 students had expressed their willingness to go abroad if the way was opened up. But he found a great amount of ignorance in regard to mission work. At one college, with 300 students, it was asked how many men had read twelve books bearing on the foreign mission field. There were none. How many had read six books? None. How many four? None. How many two? None. How many one? Only one; and another student had read a book half through.

At the same hour a band of about twenty men from Yale College meet in "Bonar Glen" for special prayer that God would pour out his Spirit upon their college, and lead many of their classmates to Christ. In walking over the grounds one meets a small group of men having prayer together.

Mr. Moody presides at all the public gatherings, and puts the same life into the Conference that he has done at all his meetings. The singing is very hearty; Mr. Towner leads with great spirit, and his wife presides at the harmonium. A choir has been formed, and at times a double quartette party from Mount Hermon sing hymns very effectively. Mr. Sankey is present at most of the meetings, and usually sings a solo.

The importance of this Conference grows upon one day by day. Here are over 400 of the best young men in the United States. Everyone of them full of high hope for the future; everyone anxious to make the most of life; the majority of them godly, consecrated men, willing to serve their Master anywhere and anyhow. It is a mighty power, and one longs to see these noble young lives wholly laid upon the altar. So far the talking has appealed more to the head than to the heart; but one feels that, with so much prayer going up to God, as the days go by, some one will be raised up to fan this spark into

THE CANNING TOWN MISSION.

The Marquee Mission at Canning Town closed on Sunday evening, when the meeting was chiefly composed of those who had been influenced during the three weeks preceding. Mr. A. F. Hills presided, and spoke a few words of encouragement to those who had signed the pledge. Mr. William Noble closed the mission by giving an earnest Gospel address. There was a deep, spiritual tone in the meeting, and when Mr. Noble asked all present to bow the head in silent prayer, men and women stood up in all parts of the tent to be prayed for.

The tent has been removed, but the flooring and seats remain for open-air services during the week. Four thousand five hundred pledges have been taken, and, as a result of the mission, it is proposed to build a hall to seat 1600 persons, with baths and wash-houses attached.

SANDGATE CONVALESCENT HOME.

The extension of a Convalescent Home, and especially of one so admirably situated, and so happily conducted as that at Sandgate, is a fact of no small importance. It means the restoration of inestimably precious health, of peace and strength of mind, to many a sufferer. Said one who hailed from Hackney, and who had come here through the kind instrumentality of Christian friends after eight months of languishing on a bed of sickness: "To get such food as we do here and to be treated with such kindness means a great deal to a poor man."

It was a great pleasure, therefore, to be present on Saturday last at the dedication ceremony of an extension to the London Samaritan Society's Home at Beach Rocks, Sandgate. Here already about seventy persons find rest and recuperation at that critical time which follows an illness or a period of exhaustive labour. But so numerous have been the applications for admission to this Home that, as Mr. J. J. Jones, the director, said in the course of his few remarks, a friend who saw the urgency of the matter, kindly undertook to be responsible for the rent for a year and a half, and for the furnishing of a Home for men at 1, Devonshire-terrace. This Home shares with that at Beach Rocks the advantage of being just above the beach, and the inmates therefore get the full benefit of the sea air.

Rev. P. F. Tyndall, Vicar of Sandgate, expressed the interest he felt in the Home and in this enlargement, and in a kindly and sympathetic address, spoke of the blessing both to body and soul which may here be found.

The feelings of all the inmates seemed to find a beautiful expression in those well-known lines with which the brief dedicatory service commenced :—

> The King of love my shepherd is,
> Whose goodness faileth never.

And their gratitude to the management was further shown by the hearty words of an old man who acknowledged with deep thankfulness the kindness and good treatment which all alike experience. The kindness of the Earl of Chichester in sending fruit, honey, &c., for the inmates was also gratefully referred to.

The Society have already matured their plans for opening another Home at Brighton next season, those at Sandgate and Bournemouth having been so greatly blessed. It is difficult to imagine a better means of illustrating the beauty of Christian charity than by opening such Homes as these.

STATE REGULATION OF VICE.—A public Conference of men and women, in connection with the Ladies' National Association, will be held in the Lower Exeter Hall, Strand, W.C., Thursday, July 28, 2.30 p.m. Mrs. Josephine E. Butler will preside. Many prominent members and friends of the Association, and several Members of Parliament have promised to attend. It is earnestly hoped that those who approve the object of the Association will be present in large numbers. No

OUR PRIZE COMPETITION.

Considering that the offer was made at a season of the year somewhat unfavourable to authorship, there has been a tolerably gratifying response to our request for specimen Notes and Comments on current events. After a careful examination of the many contributions sent in, we have felt little hesitation in awarding the prizes as follow :—

First prize, One Guinea, to Rev. H. Vivian, Stoughton Vicarage, Emsworth, Sussex.

Second prize, Fifteen Shillings, to Mr. J. P. Haworth, Westbrook Lodge, Bolton-le-Sands, Carnforth.

Third prize, Ten Shillings, to Rev. A. L. Williams, Ampton Rectory, Bury St. Edmund's, Suffolk.

Fourth prize, Five Shillings, to Mr. J. L. Stanley, Evesham House, Gascony-avenue, West Hampstead, N.W.

In making the award we have kept strictly in view the considerations mentioned in our announcement :—"The importance of the subjects chosen, their suitability to our columns, the aptness of the comments, and the general excellence of the style, condensation and cogency being specially desired." A good many of the competitors have excluded themselves from the category by dealing only with local topics, by lengthened dissertations on one or, at most, two subjects, or by writing reflections, very excellent in themselves, but not touching directly on matters of fresh and current interest. Some have strayed into the region of purely party politics, of which the conductors of The Christian desire to know nothing in their official capacity.

As to literary form and style, the results are not, on the whole, such as we could have wished. It might have proved profitable to many of the competitors if they had gone carefully through their compositions a second, or even a third time, and rigorously evicted every superfluous word, phrase, or sentence. On our younger friends we would particularly urge this advice. The pen, used through the medium of the Press, is becoming more and more an instrument of power. But there are now so many writers that the weakest —that is, the most diffuse, cumbrous, and commonplace—must inevitably go to the wall for want of readers. With so much to choose from, people in this busy age will not read even good matter if it is not presented in an attractive form. All who aspire to influence their generation in this way, should therefore study, as far as possible, to acquire a crisp, vivid, and condensed method of literary expression.

A large variety of subjects will, necessarily, be found among the products of so many pens. But it has interested us to observe the currents of popular feeling, by noting those subjects most frequently alluded to. Judged by this test, the Regent-street case, and various important matters revolving around it, has by far the foremost place, for the moment, in public thought. We have already alluded to it, and do not feel it our duty, in these columns and under present circumstances, to dwell on a painful and unpleasant theme, which is being fully considered through the daily Press. If our secular contemporaries had been as eager in bygone days to intervene in the interests of purity and justice, we might often have been spared the performance of a task which brought upon us no little obloquy, but which we were constrained to undertake. Next to the Cass case come the Queen's Jubilee (which may now be said to be matter of history); the assumptions and doings of the Roman Catholic Church; and the Irish Question.

In succeeding columns we give most of the prize Notes, reserving others, as well as some that have not gained a prize, for future issues. In the exercise of our discretion we have not indicated the order of merit in the successful Notes, as that might have caused needless comparison.

One Note has reached us, to which we are impelled to give special prominence by quotation here. The writer (a lady) says :—

> We remember the time when our hearts were stirred and thrilled, as The Revival, and afterwards The Christian, came with its weekly record of God's glorious work in the salvation of souls; when it became to us as a continuation of the "Acts of the Apostles," and caused our spiritual pulses to throb with fresh life. Each week some record of real true revival work, strengthened our faith, and gave us something to tell our praying circle, to call forth fresh desires and prayers for a like blessing in our own neighbourhood. May I ask whether it is because such work is not, that we do not get the same now? Or is it that such records are crowded out by other things, good and important doubtless, but lacking the old vitality and fire which made them such a power for good? Perhaps there are others of your readers besides myself who would rejoice to get a genuine copy of The Revival once more.

We cannot be otherwise than grateful to our correspondent for her faithful and heartfelt words; with which indeed we fully sympathise. When the name of this journal was altered, more than seventeen years ago, it was inevitable that its contents should not consist so exclusively as before of reports of revival work. But we assure our friend that she is mistaken if she imagines that such accounts of the dealings of our God in his saving power in the hearts of men, are not as welcome as ever they were in the early days of The Revival. The temptation, indeed, has often come to us to widen the scope of the paper, so as to embrace, in a greater degree, matters social, literary or scientific; but we have strenuously resisted it, and hope to do so, while we have clear indications that God is blessing our "weekly record of Christian life, Christian testimony, Christian work and missionary enterprise." These indications we gratefully meet with from time to time, and we thank our readers for the encouragement they afford us in this respect.

One reason for the comparative paucity of stirring records of revival zeal, to which our correspondent refers, may be found in the fact that special evangelistic effort is now, happily, much more widespread than it was a quarter of a century ago, and those who conduct or witness it may become so familiar with its manifestations that they are not prompted to write about them. For such records we are largely dependent on our readers, and we can sincerely say that no kind of writing is more welcome in these pages than living, and, at the same time, sober-minded and reliable narratives of revival work. If, as our correspondent hints, there is a lack of the old vitality and fire, may God in his mercy send the churches to their knees to pray for a fresh breath from heaven.

Notes and Comments.

Our next portrait and sketch will be those of Dr. Murdoch, of the Christian Vernacular Education Society, India.

Mr. R. C. Morgan left England on Saturday last, per ss. Aurania, for New York, on a short visit to America, including Mr. Moody's Northfield Conference in August.

In a thoughtful paper in the current number of Longman's Magazine, Miss Edith Simcox discourses with much ability on the pressing question of "Women's work and women's wages." The instances she gives of the practical and successful application of the union plan are very interesting, and certainly serve to show that in certain conditions combinations of female workers may result in securing higher scales of wages for their class. Unsound economic conditions have much to do with the chronic starvation which prevails in so many "women's trades," but we have always urged that the public demand for cruel cheapness is not less directly responsible for the slain bodies and lost souls of the modern martyrs to competition. Miss Simcox sees this, for she quotes Mr. Besant's indictment :—

> Ladies deliberately shut their eyes; they won't take the trouble; they won't think; they like things about them to look smooth and comfortable; they will get things cheap if they can. What do they care if the cheapness is got by starving women? What is killing this girl here? Bad food and hard work. Cheapness! What do the ladies care how many working girls are killed?

Looking at the painful question from this point of view, Miss Simcox comes to the following conclusion, and we heartily commend her words to all those who are interested in the problem :—

> Trades unionism is not, any more than co-operation, a panacea for all the evils and dangers of our social system; it deals only with two out of the three great factors, as if the capitalist and the labourer could decide their quarrels without the intervention of that virtual employer of both—the consumer. The only real and effective protection that can be extended to the starving work-girl must come from a universal conspiracy of consumers, not to buy the produce of stolen or half-paid-for labour, spending, of course, the money so economised in employing at first hand a corresponding number of women at trade society wages.

We have frequently admitted that the wage question is one not capable of easy solution, except on the simple straight lines of the teachings of Christ, but there are some limited relations between labour and capital which can and ought to be regulated by the State. For instance, it has recently been stated that in the Army Clothing Factory the average of six weeks' wages paid to women amounted to only 4s. 7½d. each, per week, and, more recently still, that 10d., or at most 1s., is the sum paid by an East-end firm for the making of a postman's coat. Now these cases might effectively be dealt with by our Christian members of Parliament, for it is the nation's money which is being expended, or being intercepted by middlemen.

We direct the attention of those who have any practical acquaintance with the condition of our working women in London and other large cities, to the letter by Mr. Walter Besant in our correspondence columns. It will be helping on a most praiseworthy movement if such persons will in every possible way assist the committee in collecting the information they desire.

An International Convention for the development and encouragement of practical Christian work will be held in Broadway Tabernacle, New York city, for eight days—Sept. 21-28 inclusive. It will be composed of mission workers in cities and towns, evangelists, superintendents, and workers in city evangelisation agencies, Bible-readers, Sunday-school workers, prison missionaries, Christian temperance workers, pastors of churches, Christian business men, and others engaged or interested in practical home Christian work among the unevangelised classes who are not reached by the ordinary work of the churches.

The object of the Convention is a better acquaintance of such workers with each other and with their various operations; and consultation concerning the best methods for the advancement of missionary labours among the masses in the cities and towns of America. Arrangements have been made by which a number of the most prominent evangelists and mission workers will be present from the different sections of the country. The Convention is intended to be a union, an undenominational gathering of all Christian men and women engaged or interested in these special Christian works, and all such are invited to be present. The secretary is Rev. John C. Collins, New Haven, Connecticut.

The Lower House of Convocation of the Church of England recently discussed some proposed alterations in the Catechism of the Church. One of the suggested amended answers, defining the office and work of the Church on earth as being "to maintain and lead and teach everywhere the true faith of Christ, and to be his instrument in conveying grace to men," was, we are glad to see, branded by Archdeacon Farrar as both unscriptural and ambiguous.

These additions to the Catechism seem likely to lead to a new controversy between "High" and "Low" Churchmen, and if introduced into Government-supported schools will be the occasion of unhappy controversies. Several Episcopal journals have already uttered protests. Evangelicals do not acquiesce in the declaration that the mission of the Church is to convey grace to men, and many will be led to get beyond the often ambiguous term "church," to ask of whom it is composed. The only answer can be that it is made up of frail, tempted, fallible men, who may point others to the source of grace, but cannot convey it.

The debates in Convocation and in the Home Union Society have brought out some seasonable words. Dean Vaughan said he would be no party to any action which made it appear that the Church of England was the only church planted by God in the land, and which branded communions outside with being self-made. The Bishop of Winchester protested against time being taken up by discussions on ritual and polemical matter, while millions of fellow-countrymen were going into eternity, ignorant of the simplest doctrines of Christianity. It would be good for England if

Some of the Nonconformist Churches are troubled by the scarcity of candidates for the ministry. Applicants, moreover, are reported as not equal in quality to what they have been. Surely the remedy is more real life in the churches, and more of the Holy Ghost in colleges, so that effective preachers may go forth from them. To find a remedy in new arrangements for literary orders, is like Israel turning to Egypt, and not to God, for help.

The facts brought out by the London Chamber of Commerce as to the large employment of foreign clerks in City firms, seem very discouraging to young Englishmen. If youths are to succeed, it is more than ever necessary that they should study the French and German languages, and prepare themselves for life by something higher than amusement. "The stone," says the proverb, "that is fit for the wall is not left in the way."

Judging from an important communication in last week's Christian World, from Dr. Pressensé, France appears to be awaking to the terrible social incubus that rests upon her people through the spread of the drink traffic. He asserts that much of the evil is caused by the deleterious matter with which the manufacturers adulterate the liquor, so as to avoid revenue duty. Be that as it may, we do not see any effective way of escape from these evils except the strenuous, education of public sentiment, and full liberty given to the people to restrict or prohibit the manufacture and sale of that which works such sore havoc among them.

In reply to a question by Sir W. Lawson in the House of Commons respecting the public-houses of London being kept open (by leave of the Chief Commissioner of Police) until 2 a.m. on Jubilee night, the Home Secretary admitted that this was "an irregular mode of granting licences." Surely there are already sufficient "regular" methods of facilitating drunkenness. It is to be feared that "the Queen's health" is responsible for many a fall on the part of those struggling against temptation. To such the Jubilee celebration will have left anything but pleasant memories.

It is rather a startling fact that the poorest country in the world should be spending annually £11,000,000 upon an absolutely unproductive luxury. Yet that is the amount of the drink bill of Ireland. Mr. Mitchell Henry contended in The Times the other day that this was partially due to the excessive taxation of whisky as compared with beer, and that much of the distress in Ireland might be relieved by their equalisation. It seems, however, more than doubtful whether the cheapening of whisky would tend to decrease the amount spent on it. But, even if the reverse were not the case, as in all probability it would be, the amount of mere money credited to the remission of taxation would be more than debited by the impoverishment of strength and energy caused by the extra consumption of noxious spirit.

Reforms in Ireland must not be looked for solely in legislation. Her only hope of real regeneration is a spiritual awakening from the mists of superstition and ignorance, to the light and joy of the Gospel

We do not wonder that some of our evangelical contemporaries are complaining of the recent appointment to the living of St. Pancras. To place a young man, whose only recommendations seem to be extreme ritualism and personal popularity, over a parish long held by men eminent, not only for their evangelical piety, but for their general ability, is a proceeding utterly unworthy of so important a body as the Dean and Chapter of St. Paul's. We trust that our brethren will bear upon their hearts those true Christians connected with the Established Church in that parish who are now seeking guidance from on high as to their future course.

It was more than a happy thought which led to the opening of the children's ward of the Westminster Hospital by the Princess Margaret, the little daughter of the Duke of Connaught. The childish face going round the beds, and receiving from one small occupant, who acted for all, the little cot and doll, in remembrance of her visit, makes a pretty picture. But it will, we hope, prove only the beginning of many such like acts in later life. In Italy the name of Margaret has become a synonym for kindness, and every Italian cottager has a picture of his beloved Queen. May our little Princess, in her turn, find by experience the blessedness of devoting herself to helping fellow-creatures who are suffering.

A recent book (Ottley's "Rational Aspects of some Revealed Truths") says:—

> It is certainly one of the brightest aspects under which the ragged ranks of our English Christendom may be regarded, that, in respect of success in the great warfare with unbelief, we stand far ahead of any other European country. This is, so far as it goes, a practical proof that God's blessing is upon us and his presence in our midst."

Yes, it is such a proof. But why are we so highly favoured? What, in other words, has distinguished us from other nations? Probably two things, our observance of Sunday and the comparatively small number of Romanists in our midst. But the two go together. If Rome flourishes, the Sunday suffers, either directly by Rome's pernicious permission, if not inculcation, of amusements in the afternoon, or indirectly by the revolt of thinking men from her superstition. Let those who would maintain the primacy of England in the warfare with unbelief, beware how they let the Sunday become less honoured, or Romanists more successful.

We hope many of our readers have seen, or will see, the chart of C.M.S. missions sent home by Mr. Mackay from Uganda. It is exceedingly interesting and ingenious. He suggests the making of a similar chart "to portray the relations between the aggregate annual gain of all Christian missions on the population of the heathen world, and the annual increase of population of all the heathen nations." He had no statistics at his own disposal for this; but from estimates given in a geography published ten years ago, he calculates that "there is an increase of heathens of 10,000,000 every year," while the total number of Protestant Christian converts existing in the mission field seem to be only about two millions and a half; that is, "that at the present moment there are, perhaps, four times as many heathen yearly added to the field of missions, as there are already in it of Chris-

This, if true, is a very solemn fact. Yet it is only disheartening to those who are of little faith in Christ, or who estimate Christianity as a mechanical rather than a vital power. "There remains," as Mr. Mackay says, "the mighty transforming and sweetening influence of Christianity in the world, an influence which must grow, because the force is more vital than dynamical, organic not inorganic, and, therefore, can be estimated by no array of figures, or co-ordinates of geometrical dimensions."

"Clouds and wind without rain." How often of late the clouds have gathered, with a very threatening appearance. Many anxious eyes have been turned to them, hoping that they might be full of rain, and empty themselves on the earth. But, alas! they have dispersed, and left the earth dry and thirsty. Thus we fear it is frequently with much of the present-day ministry. There is a great appearance, a promising commencement: expectations are excited, "there is a sound of abundance of rain," but, alas! it is only the sound. The rain comes not, the heavenly word does not fall, and the hearers go away empty as they came. "Whoso boasteth himself of a false gift, is like clouds and wind without rain."

"Are there any among the vanities of the Gentiles that can cause rain?" Are there any among the scientists of modern days who can cause rain? A prolonged drought brings us face to face with serious difficulties, and emphasises the fact of our common dependence on God. The magicians of Egypt could multiply some of the plagues, but their magic did not exercise itself in removing them. Modern science seeks to drive God out of his universe, but it cannot supply his place with an adequate and ever available power. In the presence of a great need it is helpless. The old refuge is the refuge still. "He prayed again, and the heavens gave rain, and the earth brought forth her fruit." Are the people of God as earnest on this point as they should be?

Verily, "There is nothing new under the sun." The present-day custom of scattering—nay, heaping—flowers over the remains of departed friends is nearly three thousand years old. In a subterranean gallery near Thebes have lately been found several royal Egyptian mummies, dating from about 900 B.C., profusely decorated with flower-wreaths. These are described, with illustrations, by Professor Schweinfurth in the Gartenlaube, a German horticultural journal. A propos of the modern mania (for it almost amounts to this), we are tempted to ask, What is the meaning, and wherein lies the appropriateness, of the custom? The soul is immortal: but the flowers—how quickly they wither!

A Conference on the "Corporate Re-Union of Christendom" was announced to be held on July 19; amongst those who were to take part in the proceedings were "Roman Catholics, Orientals, and Anglicans." How slow some are to recognise that the only terms of "union" to which the Romish Church will agree are those of complete and unconditional surrender. Do "Anglicans" fondly suppose that she will meet them half way? Never, so long as Ecclesia Romana nunquam erravit nec errare potest is her motto. Moreover, it is not along the lines indicated in this announcement that the true unity of the Church must be sought: our Lord's ideal view of it was as

The annual meeting of the International Arbitration and Peace Association, lately held, was a timely protest against the spirit of war and unrest which is now abroad. With the Continent one vast camp, when we can almost catch the first sounds of conflict, it is well that a more peaceful note should be struck; would that it could be heard above the martial din! The movement, to be successful, must be a European one, for a single nation with a bloated armament is a standing menace to the world's peace. Upon this point the report of the Association speaks hopefully; but we must confess that, as we look around, we cannot be sanguine.

This suggests another reflection. In what infinitesimally small type are religion and religious principles printed on the national programmes! Statesmen apparently plan and plot, pluming themselves upon a treaty here, an ally there, with never a thought that they are but puppets under the control of Him who holds the fortunes of nations "in the hollow of his hand." The Bible and the Blue-book, we suppose, must not jostle one another on the same shelf. But, as Gordon said, "God is the true Governor-General."

An innovation which has been recently effected at St. Bartholomew's, Bethnal-green, might well be imitated by ministers of the Gospel in other populous places. A pulpit has been fitted to the outside of the church, overlooking the large green, which the whole population make their lounge on Sunday evenings. The pulpit is entered from the church by a small side door, and when the service inside is finished, the clergyman goes out there and endeavours to get the ear of the crowd with hymns and a sermon. Meanwhile, some of the congregation go and mix with the loungers, and persuade them at least to stay and hear the glad tidings of the wondrous love of Christ. Satan is very busy in these latter days, and we must neglect no means, however simple, if peradventure we may wrest a few erring souls from his grasp.

Count Vitzthum's recently published memoirs cast a lurid light upon the frivolity and utter heartlessness of the so-called gay world, whose sole and selfish occupation is the pursuit of mere personal pleasure. The Crimean War, he says, did not interfere in the slightest with the accustomed amusements of the London season. While at St. Petersburg gas-lighting was discontinued for want of English coal, and the hospitable houses of the Russian nobility were closed, balls and festivities were held daily in London, and it seemed to be forgotten that "far away in Turkey" the brothers and cousins of the fine ladies who were vieing in the display of their jewels and Parisian toilettes, were engaged in mortal conflict.

The imprisonment of Pastor Thummel, of Geldern, to which we referred in our issue of July 8, has excited much strong feeling in Germany, and some of the newspapers have not hesitated to speak of Prince Bismarck in anything but complimentary terms. In the Rhineland as elsewhere, Romanism is becoming impudently aggressive, emboldened by the policy of toleration with which its action imprisoned pastor concluded his pamphlet will some day become historic:—

> How can we evangelicals meet the danger which threatens our Fatherland from the advance of the Roman Catholic Church? Its power is displayed in Parliament, and everywhere else, and its practices are pervading the lower classes. We have nought but the Word of God which must be allowed to stand.

The Pope must be beginning to regret his haste in excommunicating Father McGlynn. The latter is now addressing enormous and enthusiastic meetings of Romanists in America, who applaud his warmest denunciations of the corruption and degradation of the "scarlet lady," and scoff at the harmless thunders of the Vatican. At New York he said the Papacy was "a machine, with nothing but cupidity, and lust for money and power, to work it." This sentiment was cheered by six thousand people to the echo.

It is evident that the Pope is at last realising that he is the representative of a doomed system, incompatible with the progress and enlightenment of this Gospel age. Hence his frantic efforts to secure the co-operation of some of the Protestant powers. He is merely playing a game, and his disapproval of the work of his agents in Ireland is probably a ruse to obtain the countenance of England for his schemes of temporal dominion. But if Protestant statesmen are weak enough to give in to him, they will find that the leopard has not really changed his spots, that the harvest they will reap is of dead sea fruit, which, fair and lovely to behold, crumbles at the touch to a charnel-house of dust and ashes.

The admirable "Day in the Country" movement, which for some time was largely confined to London, is under various designations extending to other cities and towns. In Dublin, as "The Open-air Society," it is proving a blessing to thousands of children who without its aid would scarcely know that the world has anything different from the city slums. Many people have little idea of what the poor have to go through in a hot season such as the present. If we were more familiar with life as it is in the courts and alleys of our large centres of population, the subscription lists for the children's flying visit to the fields and lanes would soon assume more satisfactory proportions.

The Standard, in a recent reference to the fashions, announced that "the newest French models" of children's dress are marked by greater simplicity than has of late been the case, and the announcement is one which may well give pleasure to all those who have been pained during the past few years by the elaboration and richness of the clothing of children. There are few things less pleasing than the sight of an over-dressed child, and few things better calculated to destroy that sweet and pure simplicity which ought to be characteristic of all healthy childhood, than the habit which so many thoughtless parents have of subjecting their children to the foolish vagaries of the latest fashions.

At the recent meeting of West-end tradesmen and others with regard to the sad condition of some of our London streets by night, there were some manly and Christian utterances, respecting the unhappy women who practise their degraded and miserable calling in these public took the chair, said he hoped none would fail to put to himself the question, "If these poor women are unfortunate, who made them so?" Perhaps in consequence, the general tone of the meeting, though firm in the determination for improvement, was kindly and subdued. We certainly should not wish to see our streets cleared of these temptations at the cost of the introduction of the Continental system. We believe with Mr. Charles Mitchell, that other and better remedies can be applied. If the penalties with regard to solicitation were extended to men, as they ought to be, a great and striking improvement would soon follow. We earnestly trust that the Government will be able to bring some practical common sense to bear upon the matter, and to legislate in such a way that the whole of the shame and punishment may not fall upon the women alone.

In connection with the case of Miss Cass (writes a correspondent), there are many suggestions which, if space permitted, we would like to make. Here is one:—Before the incident is closed—for the public soon forget—let there be called a meeting of women. Let the mothers tell those present some of the tales their daughters have brought home, as the result of encounters with men in the streets. Let those young women who have no mothers to fly to, tell the meeting of some of the insults they have had to endure. If any of the wives of our legislators are present (reporters, of course, could not be admitted), surely it would not be long before the law with regard to "solicitation" is altered. (See Pall Mall Gazette of Tuesday last).

Mr. John Bright has made an important speech on India. He reminded those who hold that we must keep India as we won it, by the sword, that their method would soon bring our sway to an end. "Our right to India and the rule of it at present must rest upon the service which we render to the millions of her people." What better service can we render than to demand that the Government shall at once put an end to the licensing of impurity in our great tributary? "Take away these obstacles," said Mr. Newport, of Madras, in the great Exeter Hall meeting, "and by the grace of God we will regenerate India, and win her for the glory of Christ."

Several years ago a leading Unitarian minister said, in a large Midland town, that "Unitarianism had failed to draw." Dr. Crosskey has been recently delivering an address to the Unitarian students, in which, according to The British Weekly, he told them "they must not expect large congregations, that they are not to look for cheer and stimulus, but, on the contrary, for anxiety and burden; and that they may come to say at the end, even of a faithfully spent life, 'We are so tired, my heart and I.'" What a contrast does the saying of Paul furnish:—"I have fought a good fight, I have finished my course, I have kept the faith: Henceforth there is laid up for me a crown of righteousness, which the Lord, the righteous Judge, shall give me at that day; and not to me only, but unto all them also that love his appearing." But Paul determined to know nothing among men save Jesus Christ, and Him crucified.

The multitude which once a year seeks for rest and change from the noise and migrate. The wearied mind and body long for a quiet resting-place, and seek it in the soothing and refreshing influences of Nature. But it is a mistake to imagine that an aimless, idle holiday can result in real benefit. By occasionally reading a few pages of a good book we can occupy the mind without overtaxing it. But to give less time for communion with God, to suspend family worship, to be carried away by the excitement and restlessness which are characteristic of so much holiday-keeping, is to suffer spiritual deterioration, and defeat the very design of the rest we are permitted to enjoy.

The terrible railway accident reported from Canada, by which fourteen lives were lost, and over a hundred persons were injured, brings again into prominence the danger to which life and property are exposed through the drinking habits of some railway employés. The driver of the excursion train which was wrecked through collision with a goods train had, it is said, been drinking. Two serious railway accidents that happened recently in the United States were said to be caused through the intemperance of the drivers. It would not be amiss if railway companies generally should consider whether they ought not to impose a strict habit of abstinence, at least, on all drivers, stokers, guards, and pointsmen.

INFIDELS BROUGHT BACK.*

Walking along a street in the "second city of the empire," a few days ago, I saluted a middle-aged man dressed in the semi-clerical garb of a mission preacher, and I rather surprised a friend who was with me, by telling him that he, who had just passed us, was a converted infidel. The story of his being "brought back," as I heard it from his own lips, may not be uninteresting.

Mr. B—— then was at one time an avowed atheist, a professed and prominent infidel. He possesses a fine intellect; but, alas! he devoted his talent to the wicked purpose of "proving" the non-existence of the Divine Giver thereof. One evening, a kind of mock debate was held among his atheist associates, in which Mr. B—— assumed the part of a Christian, and towards the close of the discussion, said to his opponent, in solemn tones, "Now, my young friend, when you go home, take and read your Bible for the truth of what I have stated, and pray for help and guidance!" This was considered to be a rich bit of sarcasm, and made a "great hit."

Some time after, Mr. B—— was accosted by the same young man, who, to his surprise, asked him in real earnestness, "My friend, how about your soul?"

"Oh, don't bother me with such stuff," replied Mr. B——, impatiently.

"Do you remember that debate we had?" said the young man. "Well, I took the advice you gave me then; I studied the Scriptures, I prayed over it, and I have found peace! and oh, my friend, you cannot do better than take your own advice. You gave it then to ridicule the cause you were supposed to be upholding. Now, I beg of you to think of it seriously, and it will really do you good."

Mr. B—— did take his own advice, with the result that he saw the error of his ways, embraced Christianity, and has been for years zealously preaching that doctrine which he formerly reviled.

SELF-SUPPORTING MISSIONS.

TO MISSIONARIES AND FRIENDS OF MISSIONS IN FOREIGN LANDS.

It has pleased God by his Holy Spirit to awaken largely in the minds of his people lately, in this country, the claims of their Lord for service in the foreign mission field, and to lead many to consecrate themselves to this work, both brethren as well as sisters. Some have joined the existing missionary societies; some, with a sufficient income, are giving themselves and their means to the foreign field; but a still larger number, who are not adapted to study, and without means, might be eminently useful in missionary work, and prepared to labour with their own hands whilst preaching the Gospel to those who surround them. Untrodden fields abound, and, through God's working, the labourers are coming forward to occupy them, whilst the societies are unable to support them.

It has been felt that some simple agency is called for, connecting the workers with the work, and for the purpose of furthering this, the following Christian gentlemen have united to furnish, to some extent, the missing link:—

Lord Radstock, Sir Arthur Blackwood, Revs. Hugh Price Hughes and F. B. Meyer, Messrs. R. Arthington, R. Burn, J. Cory, J. E. Mathieson, R. C. Morgan, G. Pearse, R. Radcliffe, C. S. Read, D. Spencer, and H. W. Fry, hon. sec.

The movement is entitled, "The Missionary Intelligence and Registration Office"; its office is 186, Aldersgate-street, London, E.C. It is in perfect harmony with existing missionary societies. It is felt that much assistance could be rendered to this agency by missionaries in the field and friends who sympathise with mission work. Their aid is earnestly requested for information on the following queries:—

(1) Please say whether there exists, in your estimation, any special openings for Christian work in your vicinity, and whether there are any special means by which Christian workers coming specially to take up such work could support themselves—such as carpenters, joiners, masons, photographers, shoemakers, printers, &c.

(2) Are medical men wanted, and would they find remunerative employment?

(3) Are provisions easily procured, and is living moderate? Say at what cost a single man could support himself.

(4) Is the climate suitable for the generality of Englishmen, and is there a sanatorium near?

(5) Are there Christian residents near who might be likely to employ or pecuniarily assist a self-supporting missionary? Those are willing to go forth who would be content with food and lodging.

(6) Is there opportunity for ladies to be engaged as teachers, whether in European or native families? Could a lady with medical knowledge find support?

(7) What language would have to be learnt in order to evangelise the natives?

(8) Kindly furnish us with your own views as to openings for work of this kind out of the ordinary channels. The Church is awaking to its responsibilities, and we should be glad of any suggestions from you as to any supplemental agencies for strengthening existing missions to place before our brethren.

Communications to be addressed to Mr. H. W. Fry, hon. sec., 186, Aldersgate-street, London, E.C.

MR. NED WRIGHT desires to correct an impression prevalent that his anticipated work in the Railway Mission at the Cape has caused him to give up work in this country. He will go out when the way is opened up, but he is meanwhile pursuing his evangelistic labours here.

REQUESTS FOR PRAYER.—For a mission being held in Cushendall, Co. Antrim, Ireland, from July 16 till August 2, conducted by Henry Lakim.——For services by Mr. Opie Rodway and others, at Congregational Church, Penarth, near Cardiff.——For services in a barn at Poole Kaynes, by Mr. Rodway, to commence August 4.

* This incident is taken from the July number of The Anti-Infidel, the editor of which says in a footnote, "We have been giving well-authenticated cases of converted infidels for months past, upwards of five-and-twenty of which are to be found in the volume just brought to a close. We shall be glad to receive from ministers, city missionaries, and district visitors, reports of any cases of the kind that have come under their

THE AGAPEMONE DELUSION.

In consequence of endeavours made by its devotees to spread this demoralising deceit among the young women in Aldersgate-street, a meeting for the exposure of its mischief and danger was recently held, in which Mr. F. Newth, Mr. R. C. Morgan, Mr. Cooper (who had been delivered from its meshes through Mr. Newth), and Mr. Henry Varley, took part.

Mr. Newth, hearing that his friend had been ensnared, and learning that there were in the British Museum pamphlets issued from the Agapemone thirty years ago, but subsequently suppressed, went there and made ample extracts from them. These abundantly proved the statements made by Mr. Hepworth Dixon as to the Great Manifestation in which "a maiden was wooed and won as none other had ever been except by the pagan gods." But the satanic glamour thrown over this transaction, by which a daring sin was declared to be the act of the Holy Spirit, was even more wicked than the sin itself.

Letters were read from a living clergyman, of the Church of England, once an inmate of the Agapemone, emphatically asserting the breaches of the seventh commandment.

Mr. Cooper said that when he learned from his friend, Mr. Newth, the true character of Mr. Prince's pretensions and their necessary results, he had immediately dissociated himself from the whole thing.

Mr. Henry Varley showed that the use made of Zech. iii. 15, "Thou shalt not see evil any more," was unwarrantable and disingenuous; the clause forming part of an unfulfilled Jewish prophecy.

As the same disastrous heresy has taken root in Wood Green, a similar meeting was held there last week in the Gospel Hall.

Mr. Morgan said that we could not be too thankful that so much attention had of late years been attracted to the subject of Holiness: for "without holiness no man shall see the Lord." But we must not be surprised if Satan exercised all his craft and subtlety to shunt souls from God's main line on to some side siding where progress was impossible and disaster inevitable.

Mr. Newth then at considerable length, in language quoted from their own publications, showed the effect on Mr. Prince's own character and life of the terrible snare into which he had fallen and had led others. He laid particular stress on the introduction given in Voice No. 1, "The Testimony." "The Son of Man so loved the earth that He gave his own Spirit, that whosoever believeth in Him should not die but be alive and abide the coming of the Lord." In the same pamphlet, this daring parody goes on to state, "That the Son of Man was in the Holy Ghost reconciling the flesh unto himself, not imputing its independence unto it; and hath committed unto brother Prince the word of reconciliation." Then from page 8 he read, "The Holy Ghost then in the servant of the Lord, in order to carry out that purpose which was committed to Him by Jesus Christ humbled Himself to take flesh." Page 9, Voice 1, "He chose flesh, a woman. He took it to Himself and, without reserve, declared that his purpose was to make it one with Him as a man is one with his wife. He took this flesh openly, not in secret or privately, and, moreover, He called on all to witness that what He did was a sign of God's love to flesh, and, therefore, to them as flesh." However, it was shown by further extracts that this wonderful gift was despised. Even in the abode of love, for on page 11 it declares, "Yea they abused it, and through their independence and selfishness brought on the Holy Ghost in flesh the judgment of God, the curse pronounced on Eve for her independence. 'In sorrow shalt thou bring forth children.'" Much more was read to the same effect; but enough is given to show the character of the heresy, a mixture of profanity and blasphemy, and, as Mr. Newth declared, "Every one seeking to maintain their moral character—let alone a Christian standing—would shun the place and the teaching as they would a pestilence."

Mr. Morgan said it might be asked why recall events which had happened nearly forty years ago? Because, while the persons concerned were now old men and women, younger people had revived these teachings, and were taking young men and women whom they had inoculated with this spiritual disease down to the place where it originated, and the same evil seed would inevitably produce the same corrupt fruit. As watchmen, they were responsible to warn the people; if after that they fell into the evil thing the watchmen would be clear of their blood.

It cannot be too often repeated that the foundation of this and kindred abominations is the fanatic and foolish claim of persons puffed up with pride, that they are already perfect; which is tantamount to saying that the resurrection is past; that Christ has already come and changed their bodies into the likeness of his own glorious body; that the redemption of the body for which Paul waited has become to them an accomplished fact. Every teacher who sets forth holiness as the attainment, by an act of faith, of a state in which sinful flesh has ceased to be sinful, instead of a continuous dependence on the saving intercession of the Great High Priest, and the operation of the Holy Spirit, is leading unwary listeners to the brink of this fatal precipice.

Miss Murray, of "Bethshan," said:—Very dear friends, with whom I have had precious fellowship, have been led away by this delusion; so that I thought, If these go, who can stand? If these earnest and devoted followers of Christ could go into such errors, I did not know what else they might be led into, or who would go next. Then this text came powerfully to my mind:—"The meek will He guide in judgment; the meek will He teach his way."

When we are converted, the pride and ambition of the human heart, if not prayed and watched against and restrained by the grace of God, will remain, though their object is changed. Spiritual pride takes the place of carnal or worldly pride, and such Christians seek to be prominent and distinguished for their Scriptural knowledge, or for their supposed attainments in the Divine life. But what is this but pride and ambition still, though the object be different? Let us call things by their right names, and remember that while the High and Holy One dwells with the broken and contrite heart, the proud He knoweth afar off. May God preserve in us the childlike spirit!

Yet let us, while children in evil, in understanding be men. We are tempted to reverse God's order, to be men in pride, and push for place, but children in understanding. I do not think some of God's precious children would have followed Mr. Wood, of Brighton, or the teachers of the Agapemone, if they had not yielded to the monstrous claim put forth by these men that they should forego the exercise of their understandings.

We must study the Word of God. I have been astonished that some who have come as patients to Bethshan, Wesleyan local preachers, and persons of other denominations, have been so ignorant of the text of the Word of God.

Then some say they have got a message from God which is proved false by its not according with his Word. People have said to me they don't know where to read, so they pray God that they may open it at the right place; then they pray to be guided where to place their finger, and the text on which it falls they conclude is God's message to them. Where is their common sense? What sane person would insult any author by reading his book like that? Why should we insult God, and trifle with our own souls by such folly?

Sometimes a text is taken hold of, because it catches the ear, but without the slighest reference to that which it is used to prove. For example, a friend wishing to correct us at Bethshan, said that we ought by no means to touch a person after he had been anointed for healing, and the reason given was that God had said, "Touch not mine anointed."

A passage was used, first by Mr. Prince, and afterwards by Mr. Wood, from Zeph. iii. 15: "Thou shalt not see evil any more," and misused to prove that Satan and all evil was cast out of the flesh. And so, like the ostrich, they hide their head in the sand, and think themselves safe from harm.

I have been pained again and again by hearing brethren and sisters, with whom I have had precious fellowship, say that sin is limited by our consciousness. The next logical step would be to say, Don't be conscious, and there is no sin. They utterly ignore the law of God, which shows that sins of ignorance are sin, but provides an atonement for them; while for presumptuous sins there is no provision. And if ignorance was sin then, how much more in those days of Gospel light!

Our earthly language is well adapted for our earthly uses, but for spiritual things language is insufficient, and these have to be spoken of in words derived from material things. A man wrote me very recently, asking me: "How am I to see God in my heart? Am I to expect to see Him like anyone else," or is it in a dream? And then he mentioned, with evident satisfaction, that he had had a dream, as though that were something on the way to seeing God. So again we talk of hearing God's voice, and some may think they are to hear sounds with the outward ears. When it comes to the wonderful mystery of our union with Christ, language is peculiarly liable to be misused by unspiritual minds. The teaching connected with the Church as the Bride may be travestied with a horrible grossness. I have known terrible things to happen from the endeavour to make Scripture truth go on all fours with our ideas of putting things.

I remember when our brother Mr. Carty came to our meeting, we found he held extreme views, and though he was not asked to speak, he did so when the meeting was thrown open for testimony. We were inexpressibly pained by friends once with us taking up with the wild theories of Mr. Carty, Mr. Wood, and the Agapemone.

Never on this side the grave shall we get into a condition in which we cannot fall, or when we shall be free from temptation after temptation. Christ is able to save us to the uttermost, and there is no excuse for the least vacillation; but if we cease to watch and pray and read and meditate in the Word of God, we shall surely fall.

COLPORTAGE IN VILLAGES.

Dear Sir,—If any of your readers who are interested in the outlying neglected villages would communicate with me, I should be glad to send some of our experienced colporteurs to labour in these villages for a short time during the summer and autumn. Last year, besides our regular work, we sent colporteurs to make brief visits to neglected parts, where they sold a large number of Bibles, Testaments, and Gospel books, besides having the opportunity of telling out in simple language the Gospel of Jesus Christ, as they visited from house to house.

Much blessing attended the work, and the Society is prepared to do the same thing again this year, upon receiving information as to the needs of the district.—Yours truly,

H. D. Brown, Secretary.
Christian Colportage Association for England,

CHINESE MISSION IN LONDON.—This Mission was opened in January, 1884, and the number of visits paid by Chinese and other natives has been about 5000 a year. At a recent social gathering, of the thirty persons present twelve were Chinese, four Japanese, two Africans, and two natives of Manilla. The Mission has been the means of helping numbers from the opium dens, of which there are half a dozen within a stone's throw of its door. One proof of the good done is that the men who have once been to the Mission invariably call again after returning from another voyage. Rev. George Piercy, the founder, has, as a result of his labours, baptized two Chinese and a native of Burmah. The Mission is at Birchfield-street, West India Dock-road, E.

Letters to the Editor.

SPIRIT, SOUL, AND BODY.

Sir,—I have waited to see if any of your readers would mention, in their suggestions on this subject, the natural line of thought laid down in 1 Cor. iii. 16: "Know ye not that ye are the temple of God, and that the Spirit of God dwelleth in you?"

Body, soul, and spirit in the Christian would seem to be analogous to the Court, the Holy Place, and the Most Holy Place in the Temple. The truth that God's indwelling presence is abundantly possible, as pointed out in this beautiful threefold comparison, is one calculated, I think, to yield the greatest joy to devout minds. It is very likely that the authorities you name take up this view of the matter, amongst others. B.

WEARY WORKERS.

Dear Sir,—May I suggest to some of your lady readers the pleasure and benefit they could confer on many weary workers needing change and rest, either by inviting such to their homes, or by providing holiday accommodation for them elsewhere.

When taking charge of a Y.W.C.A. Home last year, a lady asked if I knew of any needy governess, or one in a similar position, who would like to spend their holiday with her; since then, when meeting with so many tried ones, sometimes really reduced to extremities, perhaps through lack of employment, or often through illness induced by over-pressure, with scant remuneration, I have often thought: Would that other Christians might be led thus to act the part of the "Good Samaritan."—Yours faithfully, E. H.

ST. SAVIOUR'S, LITTLEHAMPTON.

Dear Sir,—Give me brief space to announce our forthcoming bazaar in aid of expenses. I have laboured here for eight years at my own charges, receiving nothing but residence, in the midst of Romanism, Ritualism, and very little of Gospel preaching.

I ask nothing for myself, but I ask evangelical visitors to come here for their holiday and lend a helping hand. The Mildmay orphans are here now enjoying the sea breezes and worshipping with us as usual. This is the seventh year I have had the pleasure of receiving them.

I shall be glad to assist any of your readers in obtaining accommodation for the seaside holidays if they will write to me, enclosing stamp.

LICENSED AND REGULATED VICE.

Sir,—The bare possibility of any measure such as that hinted at in your extract this week from The Methodist Times being brought forward to strengthen the hands of those in favour of the Contagious Diseases Acts is, indeed, enough to cause the friends of social purity to take alarm. From conversations I have had lately with friends interested in politics I am convinced that the greatest ignorance prevails regarding these Acts, and that it is only the merest fraction of our voters who know about them at all. One gentleman, who is well informed, assured me that none of his acquaintaces, so far as he knew, have the slightest idea what they really mean.

I would suggest with the view of spreading information easily and speedily on this subject:—

(1) That Christian men and women, and especially members of the White Cross Union, should inform themselves, through the medium, say, of the Extra Number of The Christian, and the Life of Mrs. Josephine Butler, what these Acts really mean.

(2) That they be untiring in their efforts to spread their knowledge amongst those who possess the right to vote, by circulating reports of the Exeter Hall meeting, especially when so many are visiting remote country districts, at this season of the year. Here is a hint to those ladies who like myself shrink from speaking on the subject. I have put a number of these reports into strong paper covers, and sent them in threes and fours to country smithies and general merchants' shops, where men are accustomed to meet. Inside the cover is written a request that the paper be lent to men who are voters. By this plan persons of very limited means can overtake large districts.

(4) Let united, unceasing, persevering prayer be made, remembering that "the kingdom of heaven suffereth violence, and the violent take it by

WORKING WOMEN.

Sir,—It is proposed, by certain persons interested in the present condition of working women, to hold a Conference towards the end of the year, at which the facts of the female labour market may be clearly and dispassionately set forth; the extent, area, and nature of the evils which undoubtedly exist, may be laid down with some precision; and, if that may also follow, remedies or alleviation may be found.

It is true that such a Conference might have been held at once, for the mere purpose of discussing methods of relief for the well-known and widely spread diseases of over-work and underpay. It is very certain that there are here in London and other large centres, thousands of women continually occupied in miserable toil for wretched wages, who never venture to hope for any cessation or relaxation of the life sentence to which they were doomed at their birth. The Conference might have proceeded on the assumption that these things have long been notorious. Yet the case for the women will be undoubtedly strengthened tenfold by the collection, the classification, and the publication of all the facts, apart from feeling, sentiment, hasty blame, and perhaps misplaced sympathy. This has never been done.

True, figures and facts have from time to time been printed in certain journals, and for certain trades; but the whole facts connected with women's industries, the hours and pay, the fluctuations of the demand, the competition of Germans and Jews, the effect of Free Trade, the freaks of fashion, the social and moral aspects of their work, have never been adequately investigated or treated. We do not aspire, of course, to collect and collate the entire facts in the brief time at command before the Conference; but we propose to attempt an indication of them, as it were, on as wide a scale and in as thorough a manner as possible.

We invite, through your columns, the assistance of all persons who have the power of collecting information, and can get access to working women. There are in every parish, and belonging to every church and chapel, ladies who spend the greater part of their lives in and among the houses of the working classes. It is more especially to these ladies, whose tact, disinterestedness, and sympathy have endeared them to the people, that we appeal for assistance. But the co-operation of men of all classes really interested in this movement is earnestly desired, and will be cordially accepted.

Your obedient servant,

Walter Besant, Hon. Treas. of the Committee of the Working Women Conference.

Adelphi Hotel, Adam-street, Strand.

Dear Sir,—As a constant reader of The Christian, I am able to note and follow from time to time the various phases of opinion and feeling on many kinds of work to which expression is given in your valuable paper. In the issue of Friday, July 8, I find the following quotation from The Pall Mall Gazette:—"The exclusion of women from any industry tends to drive them into the one employment always open to them—prostitution." In the paragraph below that, are given the various prices at which toymakers, binders, and brushmakers are said to be paid.

A sad statement truly, if the only alternative open to them be starvation at such prices, or better circumstances by unhallowed courses. As one who has been pretty intimately connected with the rescue of fallen women for the last twenty-four years, I should like to ask this question:—Why, if these trades be so badly paid, should so many girls be brought up to them, instead of to domestic service, the demand for the latter being so great and so constant. I turn to the advertising sheet of the same paper, and find there a young girl desiring a situation "As Under Housemaid, or Kitchen-Maid," for which she modestly asks a wage of "from £14 to £16" per annum, and very likely she may get it. This sum, in addition to board and lodging, without care or anxiety on her part, seems a very comfortable income for one in her position, and the toy and brush makers, &c, would do well to exchange their hard toil, for advantages of the kind, and have no need to purchase the necessaries of life by the loss of their virtue. In almost every paper one takes up there is a long list of "servants wanted," and the cry of those who have to keep them is, "Can you tell me of a good servant?" But would anyone succeed in persuading girls brought up to the trades above mentioned to leave their harrassing and ill-paid work for domestic service? I fear not. I fear that nine out of ten, rather than betake themselves to the dull routine of household work, or forego the sweet privilege of being their own mistress, would go on enduring semi-starvation, even though associated with moral degradation.

It may, however, be said that the remarks above quoted do not apply so much to young girls as to older women. Let me ask another question. Have the women alluded to ever made the least effort to fit themselves for more remunerative employment? If the experience of those who have to do with Homes, Refuges, and such places, be similar to my own, they will bear me out when I say it is difficult beyond belief to find women fit to fill posts where common sense, industry, order, and cleanliness are principal requirements. Hoping that some other individual acquainted personally and practically with the working of these questions may be induced to reply, I am, yours, &c.,

July 15. Inquirer.

A CORRECTION.

Dear Sir,—In the list of Hon. Secs. of the "Call to Union in Prayer" the address of the N.W. District is incorrectly given as Elm Lodge. Kindly correct this, as a house a short distance from this is called by that name. Address should be Elm Row, Hampstead.

Yours faithfully, Gibbard Hughes.

EVANGELISTIC NOTES.

Littlehampton-on-Sea.—Services are being conducted on the beach every morning by Mr. J. Courthope Todd, of the Theatrical Children's Mission. Other workers are to follow.

The Home Mission Committee of the Established Church of Scotland have supplied a large tent for evangelistic work among the outlying miners in the populous mining district of Lanarkshire.

Irish Evangelisation Society.—One of the tents of this excellent Society, under the charge of the evangelists, Messrs. Burrowes and Rainey, has been erected in Conway-street, Belfast, for about three weeks, and is attracting large audiences. Several local ministers have taken part in the meetings, and it is believed many persons have been led to religious decision.

Mr. E. Hurditch paid a visit to Sebastopol, N.S.W., in May last, and preached on the 15th, in the morning at the Baptist church and in the evening at the Wesleyan church. Both addresses were of a very impressive character, and the comforting assurances from Holy Writ which he put before his hearers were very gratefully received. These meetings were intended to have closed the mission in which he had been engaged, but on the following Tuesday there was a final meeting for testimony.

Bourne.—Pastor B. Dinnick and Mr. W. Greene (author of "Manuel Matamoros, the Reformer of Spain") have been conducting a united, pentecostal mission in this town. The various Nonconformist pulpits were thrown open to them on the Sunday, and during the week Bible-readings and addresses were given daily. Spiritual results were seen especially on the last evening, when a large number of inquirers remained to the after-meeting. Many Christian workers have been greatly blessed, and two ungodly men were turned to the Lord on hearing their testimony.

OBITUARY.

REV. G. M. MURPHY.

This well-known and earnest worker died suddenly on Sunday morning. There had previously been no indication of failing health. Only last Thursday he celebrated his thirty-first year's work among the masses in South London by a public meeting at his church in the Borough-road, Southwark, and on Saturday he took part in two public meetings. Mr. Murphy commenced his public work in connection with Rev. John Angell James, at Birmingham, being afterwards attached to Surrey Chapel, as the agent of the Southwark Mission.

In 1866 he became the pastor of Borough-road Congregational Church. As the founder of working men's exhibitions in London, and of the Lambeth Baths meetings for the people, as well also as a lecturer and temperance advocate, Mr. Murphy was very popular, and he delivered as many as a thousand addresses a year. He has been a member of the London School Board since 1873, and was one of the founders of the Band of Hope Union. Mr. Spurgeon and several other ministers referred on Sunday to the loss which South London has sustained by the death of Mr. Murphy, who was sixty-three years of age.

BROKEN THINGS.

The grain must be crushed ere man is fed,
Plants must be bruised to restore his health;
From a wasted barrel and empty cruse
The prophet restored the widow's wealth.
'Twas by broken pitchers that Gideon won,
On the vessel's broken pieces, Paul
And his friends were saved, and even Christ
By his broken life has ransomed all!
By the broken bodies of saints the truth
Was made to triumph, and glorious, too,
Was the broken box—Earth's broken hopes
May bring Heaven's joy and our crown in view.
And precious in God's sight appear
The broken things that grieved us here.

GERMANS IN LONDON.

In a recent interview with a representative of The Pall Mall Gazette, some interesting particulars were given of proposed mission work among Germans in London. Mr. Carl Haupt, one of the committee, said:—

"Of the 100,000 Germans now living in London no more than 20,000 are brought under the religious influence of the Mission. A few may join or habitually visit English places of worship, but the great bulk of Germans are entirely without any religious influence. Nor are they at all anxious to be brought under such influence. In Germany a great tide of ungodliness has swept over the country, the outcome of which is that, besides creating a small party of avowed atheists, a great mass of Germans have become entirely indifferent to anything connected with their spiritual welfare, and are practically as much atheists as those who openly profess to be unbelievers. In Germany the Berlin City Mission, with its thirty missionaries, has with more or less success been trying for many years to stem this tide of ungodliness and its consequent vices among nominal Christians in Germany. But that mission is too poor to do anything for the Germans whom, with pain and grief it sees drifting further and further away from the God of their fathers in England, and it is for the purpose of trying to do something for my poor countrymen in this great city, and eventually for the Germans all over England, that I have come to England.

"One great object which I have in view, and in which our committee heartily assents, is to found an institute, unpretending, but bent earnestly on its work, which shall be a harbour of refuge for German girls coming to England in search of employment. Their ignorance of this country, and too often of the language, paves the way in many cases to almost certain ruin for them. If it were only more generally known how imperatively necessary such a home is, situated near the docks, and what a world of trouble might be forestalled by it! That only those can know who hear the sad stories of ruined bodies and souls, of which the public has hardly any idea." Colonel J. T. Griffin, Oneota, Maresfield-gardens, Hampstead, N.W., is treasurer.

CHATSWORTH-ROAD TABERNACLE.—The Gospel work begun six years ago in Rushmore-road Hall with seven members, and now continued in this building, which was opened last June, has been greatly blessed. During the three years of church life, the report just issued states, about 430 have joined the church, more than half this number having been led to Christ through the preaching and teaching here carried on. About 350 of these are regular communicants. In the Sunday-school there are upwards of 350 scholars with thirty teachers, and there are also classes for senior boys and girls. A branch Sabbath-school in Homerton-road, with temperance society and Band of Hope, and Sunday evening services in the Manor Rooms, Clapton Park, after the ordinary service in the Tabernacle, are some of the many agencies employed for winning souls to Christ. The pastor is Rev J Bain, Lindholm, Goulton-road, Clapton, N.

ROYAL INDIANS and the Y.W.C.A.

An unusually interesting gathering was held on Monday evening at the rooms of the Y.W.C.A., 316, Regent-street. At the kind invitation of Lord Kinnaird, a goodly company, most of them young women, assembled to meet an Indian Prince and Princess, two of the scions of Oriental Royalty, who have lately graced our Queen's Jubilee with their presence. These dusky potentates were colloquially addressed as the Prince and Princess, but we find them designated on the card of invitation as "Their Highnesses the Kanwar Harnam Singh Ahlu-walia, and the Kanwar Rani of Kapurthala." We must leave the curious reader to discover for himself both the precise pronunciation of their mellifluous titles, and the exact location in our great Indian Empire, of this interesting pair.

That the company on Monday evening deemed them interesting there can be no doubt. After some very cordial words of welcome addressed to them by Mr. Dashwood in the name of the Y.W.C.A., the Prince responded in most admirable and well-chosen English. He said they felt much honoured at being present in a place where so much good is being done among young women, and where so many souls are brought to Christ. With a little touch of emotion in his voice he told how glad he should be if he could see such a sight as that before him, in his own country. What India requires, said the Prince, is a change in the social condition of the women. Then His Highness bore warm testimony to the amount of good that is being done in his native land by the labours of Christian missionaries, ladies as well as gentlemen. There is no doubt much to discourage them, but let them persevere, for Christianity, being based on truth and righteousness, is certain to prevail. An excellent homily addressed to the young women by Rev. E. A. Stuart, on the duties and blessing of "the King's daughters," intervened; then the Princess kindly accepted Lord Kinnaird's suggestion, and briefly addressed the meeting, that was all on the tiptoe of expectation, in the presence of such a novel proceeding. Her Highness said she had never done such a thing before, and never expected to do it, especially in the presence of so many gentlemen—a touching little hint at the badge of female inferiority that prevails among her countrywomen. In gentle and dignified words, the Princess expressed the great pleasure she felt in seeing so many young women associated for Christian objects. The Y.W.C.A., she thought, must be a great boon to young women in a city like London, and she hoped it was appreciated. When they returned to India, the memory of this meeting would long remain with them.

Lord Radstock well remarked that the occasion would be an added link in the bonds that unite this country with India, and expressed the earnest hope that some of the Christian young women present might be stirred up to give themselves to mission work in that land. Lord Kinnaird, who presided, urged greater consecration at home, as well as abroad. Various friends offered prayer, and altogether the evening was one of happy augury.

TEMPERANCE AT THE CRYSTAL PALACE.—For one day, on the occasion of the National Temperance Fête, held last week, the Crystal Palace was, as Sir Wilfrid Lawson said, a place where the drink shops were shut up. The principles of liberty, equality, and fraternity were seen in operation. They were at liberty to enjoy themselves without being exposed to dangers sanctioned by the licensing laws. No man was enriching himself by selling strong drink to others, good fellowship existed without alcoholic excitement, and it was plainly shown that they could get on without the publican. The fête was organised by the Good Templar Order, and was attended by 32,352 persons, and was in every way a great success. Rev. George M. Murphy, Rev. Canon Barker, Mr. J. H. Raper, and Mr. Handel Cossham, M.P., were among the speakers at the afternoon meeting.

SALVATION ARMY FESTIVAL.

The immense demonstration of Salvationists at the Alexandra Palace on Monday last was a grand success from an "Army" point of view. The occasion was the twenty-second anniversary of the movement since it commenced under the title of the Christian Mission.

The weather was charming, and everybody seemed exuberantly happy. Spiritual fathers and their children met; old friends embraced each other, and the air rang with "Hallelujahs." The system of changing officers from station to station causes many happy associations to be severed, and an occasion like this must be eagerly looked forward to as a time of temporary reunion. Various provincial towns were represented, each with full band, and Irish, Scotch, Welsh, and even Italian and Indian delegates were present. The Cambridge contingent wore academical gowns over their red jerseys (though not University men), and native Indians, as well as a body of men and women about to go out under "Major" Tucker, appeared in Indian costume. No intoxicants were on sale, and for the nonce the Salvation Army had the entire Palace and grounds at their disposal, though the expectations expressed at their similar gathering in 1882, that they would "not be satisfied until the borrowed ground" upon which they then stood was their own, are perhaps as far from realisation as on that occasion. Never was so immense a crowd more orderly, and certainly the police who were on duty here and there found very little need of their services.

The forenoon was occupied by Holiness meetings in the theatre and concert hall, led respectively by "General" and Miss Booth, a parade of 3000 children, and a musical festival in the nave. In the afternoon each corps held an "open-air," but these were all within so few yards of each other that to the general spectator instrumental and vocal discord and confusion reigned supreme; for, as each corps sang its own hymns, and each band played corresponding tunes, a strange medley of prayer, praise, exhortation, and testimony was the result. We hope the General will spread his forces over a wider area another time. But the Salvationists are by their training rendered indifferent to all noise and clamour outside their open-air circle, so that each individual gathering held its own quite independently of its neighbour, and some of the testimonies were splendid, especially those of some soldiers of Her Majesty's forces who had been led to Christ through their spiritual brethren.

The Slum Brigade and Rescue Staff also held meetings. These are, perhaps, the most effective and laudable agencies of the "Army." Members of the former elect to live in low slums amongst the poorest and dirtiest people to be found, and show the practical side of their Christianity by washing babies, turning mangles, &c. Mrs. Bramwell Booth stated that the Rescue Staff had been used of God for the reclamation of over 1000 girls. She appealed to Christian ladies to offer them situations, many letters in her possession testifying to the satisfaction given by those who had entered domestic service.

The great feature of the day was the assemblage of all the forces on the racecourse by the "General" and Mrs. Booth, and from the fact that it took an hour for them to march past, four deep, with banners and decorations, an idea can be formed of the magnitude of the review.

Then Mrs. Booth gave a lecture on "The Future" in the theatre, and at night the vast area of the central hall was thickly crowded with an enthusiastic throng who joined in the musical thanksgiving, led by the great organ and one thousand instruments, and if praise is synonymous with noise, the thanksgiving was complete, for certainly everybody did their best.

But whatever may be said for or against the methods of the "Army," last Monday's festival demonstrated as an incontrovertible fact that this agency has to an enormous extent taken hold of the people of this country, and their bright faces and joyful mien presented a glowing contrast to the misery they had experienced in the service of sin.

Notes on Daily Readings.

SUNDAY, JULY 24.—PROVERBS XIX.

2.—Also, that the soul be without knowledge, it is not good.—"O Lord, remove our ignorance, that we may know Thee; our idleness, that we may seek Thee; our unbelief, that we may find and enjoy Thee."—Bishop Hall.

11, 19.—The discretion of a man deferreth his anger, &c. A man of great wrath shall suffer punishment, &c.—In the Word of God multiplied reproof argues very prevalent transgression. This book says a great deal about anger: we may be sure, then, that it is an evil exceedingly great. "Its presence goes far to make this world a restless sea, and its absence will be a distinguishing feature of the rest that remaineth."—Arnot. There is a holy anger, and he who lacks power for such is poor and weak. Still, sin, rather than the sinner, is the object of such wrath. It is an anger that is free from pride, zealous for righteousness, and closely allied to mercy and tenderness. But this holy indignation is, for most of us, a high and difficult exercise. "It is like fire in the hands of children; and we, even the best of us, are like little children. Although anger be not in its own nature, and in all cases, sinful, the best practical rule in life is to repress it, as if it were." There is an anger which is righteous and helpful; but we are, for the most part, too unwise to indulge in it freely. Practically we find that the less of anger, the more of peace and fruitfulness there is in our lives.

22.—A poor man is better than a liar.—Yet, most men show more honour to the prosperous man of doubtful character, than to honest poverty. Therefore do rogues flourish. "Such is the homage paid to wealth, that any man who, with some degree of adroitness, puts on its trappings, will be followed by a crowd of worshippers. When we learn practically to honour true men, although they labour for their daily bread, and turn our back upon liars, we shall be less exposed to the depredations of unjust men, and more under the protection of a righteous God. Let it become the practice to honour the honest, however poor, and swindling will die out for want of food."—Arnot. Trade will flourish grandly as soon as our traders attain to a true and strong faith in this saying: A POOR MAN IS BETTER THAN A LIAR.

MONDAY, JULY 25.—PROVERBS XX.

1.—Wine is a mocker, &c.—"The chief agent of intoxication among us is not wine at all, but a much more potent draught, which was entirely unknown to antiquity. Even the wines we use are much more powerful as intoxicants than the wines ordinarily used of old." Therefore, "the expressions in Scripture which commend wine and strong drink are less applicable to the liquors in ordinary use among us, and the expressions which denounce them more. To quote from the English Bible a text about Judean wine in support of modern Scotch whiskey, is not right."—Arnot.

14.—It is naught, it is naught, saith the buyer: but when he is gone his way, then he boasteth.—Most of us have read this verse with a smile. It strikes straight home, is so pat, and describes so neatly just what we frequently see in ourselves or our neighbours, that we are astonished. Most people complain of the dishonesty common among sellers; few consider that the buyers themselves are largely responsible for this. Their policy of cheapening and depreciating, pursued as a policy, and not on the ground of judgment, is unchristian and dishonest, and drives many sellers to the opposite policy of asking an unfair price. We are persuaded that not a little of the wrong practised by the seller springs very much from the selfishness, hardness, and even the duplicity of his customers. As it takes two to make a bargain, so it takes two to make an honest bargain.

22.—Say not thou, I will recompense evil; but wait on the Lord, and He shall save thee.—"It costs more to revenge injuries than to bear them. Forgiveness is the best revenge. If there is anyone you particularly dislike, pray for him every time you think of him." The worst injury my

TUESDAY, JULY 26.—PROVERBS XXI.

1.—The king's heart is in the hands of the Lord, as the rivers of water: He turneth it whithersoever He will.—Turns it as the eastern farmer turns the waters of the river into the channels he has prepared, until the very desert rejoices and blossoms. So (1 Kings xviii. 10) Ahab was turned from seeking to destroy Elijah unto obeying him. So Sennacherib (Isa. x. 5, &c.) was first made the rod of God's anger, and then overthrown and turned back by God. Nebuchadnezzar's ambition was the Divine instrument for Tyre's overthrow (Ezek. xxix. 18, &c.); for Egypt's (Jer. xliii. 10—12); and for Judah's (Jer. xxxii. 28; 2 Kings xxiv. 3). Why did Nebuchadnezzar not colonise Judea as Assyria colonised Samaria? It was much to his interest to do so. This, surely, was of God, so that Scripture might be fulfilled. See Lev. xxvi. 34; Jer. xxv. 9—11; and 2 Chron. xxxvi. 21. Cyrus did God's work unconsciously when he captured Babylon, and when he showed such remarkable kindness to the Jews (Isa. xliv. 28, xlv. 1—7; and Ezra i. 1, &c.) Darius, also (Ezra vi. 22); and Artaxerxes (Ezra vii. 27, compared with Jer. xxv. 11, 12). Ahasuerus did God's will unwittingly by (1) forgetting to reward Mordecai; (2) his sleeplessness (Esther vi. 1—6); (3) by receiving Esther favourably; and (4) by his anger against Haman. The decree of Cæsar Augustus helped to fulfil Micah v. 2 (see Luke ii. 1—7). Lastly, Herod in condemning Christ brought about God's eternal purpose of salvation (Acts iv. 27, 28). See Proverbs illustrated.—B. E. Nicholls.

17.—He that loveth pleasure shall be a poor man.—"Self-indulgence is not happiness; it is a delirium, not a delight—a mere titilation of the dying nerve, not a divine thrill of our imperishable sensibilities and powers. Its music is the note of the maniac, not the strains of the seraph."—Thomas.

WEDNESDAY, JULY 27.—PROVERBS XXII.

1.—A good name is rather to be chosen than great riches, and loving favour rather than silver and gold.—"We are not good judges of value in the public market of life. We make grievous mistakes; we often throw away the kernel and carefully keep the shell. Many things are better than gold, and one of these is a good name. A good conscience, indeed, is better than both, and must be kept at all hazards. As a substitute for a good conscience, a good name is a secret torment at the time, and in the end a cheat; but as a graceful outer garment with which a good conscience is clothed, it should be highly valued and carefully preserved by the children of the kingdom. Robes rich in texture, and comely in form, would not make a wooden image gainly; but it does not follow that they are useless to the living human frame. An idol is vile, whether it be gold, or a good name; but, as articles in the inventory of our Father's gifts, gold is good and reputation better. I do not know any department of Providence in which the hand of God is more visibly displayed than in maintaining before the world the good name of those who before Himself maintain a good conscience."—Arnot. Under the term loving favour, is set forth the joy of living in the affections of others. If a good name be so precious, and if the love of one's neighbours be so desirable, how great an evil does he commit who speaks carelessly or evilly against his neighbour, to the injury of his reputation. We should be as concerned for his reputation as we are for our own.

THURSDAY, JULY 28.—PROVERBS XXIII.

23.—Buy the truth.—As the wise men did (Matt. ii.) counting no journey too difficult and no expense too great. See Parables of the Hid Treasure and the Pearl (Matt. xiii. 44—46). Peter, James, and John left all to follow Christ, and learn of Him (Luke v. 11). So Paul (Phil. iii. 7—9; Acts xx. 24). Sell it not.—Seth's descendants by choosing the ungodly daughters of Cain, sold the truth for woman's beauty (Gen. vi. 2, 3). Judas sold the truth for money (John xiv. 6, and Matt. xxvi. 15). So did (Acts v. and viii. 18, 19). Herod sold it for lust (Mark vi. 17, 18); Pilate for power and popularity (Mark xv. 15, and John xviii. 38); and Demas for this present world (2 Tim. iv. 10).

The truth is free, and yet it must be bought. Compare Prov. ii. 1—7, iv. 13, xxiii. 12; Luke xiii. 24; Jas. i. 5; Rev. iii. 11.

24.—The father of the righteous shall greatly rejoice: and he that begetteth a wise child shall have joy of him.—There is surely no nobler incentive to a generous youth than that which this word supplies. The school or college session may be long and wearing, but that lad who goes home at the close, crowned with honour with which to gladden his parents, drinks one of the purest and most satisfying cups of gladness that human life is acquainted with. It is worth any toil to win their proud, loving approval. And is not this verse applicable to the great Father? John xiv. 21 and 23 seems to teach this truth.

FRIDAY, JULY 29.—PROVERBS XXIV.

1.—Be not thou envious against evil men, &c.—"When you detect in your own heart an impatient fretting against an evil doer, consider where you would have been if the Holy One had so regarded you. The gentleness of Christ is the comeliest ornament that a Christian can wear. If a Christian, whether rich or poor, envy any man's possessions, he is forgetting his place, and his prospects."—Arnot.

10.—If thou faint in the day of adversity, thy strength is small.—John xiv.—xvii. and Heb. xii. 1—13 suggest motives against fainting in the day of adversity.

11, 12.—If thou forbear to deliver them that are drawn unto death, &c.—"The principle that God, our common Father, counts every man his brother's keeper, pervades the Scriptures as an animating spirit. The prophets before Christ's coming, and the Apostles after it, all conspired to teach, by their lips and by their lives, that a man liveth not to himself, and dieth not to himself. You who bear the Saviour's name are not your own; ye have talents to lay out, and a work to accomplish—a Master to serve, and a brother to save."—Arnot.

17.—Rejoice not when thine enemy falleth.—He that is not concerned that his brother should perish is in great danger of perishing himself.

30—34.—THE SLUGGARD'S GARDEN.—"Even the sluggard's garden brought forth fruit, but not for the sluggard's benefit. The diligent man reaped, and carried off the only harvest that it bore—a warning."—Arnot.

SATURDAY, JULY 30.—PROVERBS XXV.

2.—It is the glory of God to conceal a thing.—There is a glory in the very mysteries of God. In presence of truths such as the Trinity, or man's freedom, and God's foreordination, the devout soul finds that which satisfies his capacity for worship. God could not be God to us if we did not find in his being and attributes that which we not only cannot comprehend, but also that which we cannot even hope to comprehend. The wise and reverent have often found a wondrous rest in these acknowledged mysteries.

5.—Take away the wicked from before the king.—"We need not expect that the Supreme Ruler will support our sway in the world if we elevate the wicked to the high places of authority, and sustain them there. His law is, 'them that honour Me, I will honour.' We need not expect that God will give the world to us, if we do not make it our mission to bring the world to God."—Arnot.

21, 22.—If thine enemy be hungry, &c.—"As water, though it be actually low within the distributing channel, will rise again to the height of its source, so when the compassion that flows through a believer is the very compassion that flows into him from Christ, it is a good and sufficient power to overcome the most formidable manifestations of evil."—Arnot. And the Lord shall reward thee.—"Those who fulfil this royal law will receive from the King a royal recompense; the winner's reward is the brother whom he has won. The work is wages, and the wages is work."—Arnot.

23.—A backbiting tongue.—"Would be comparatively harmless if it should never meet with itching ears. Alone, it would be like seed

THE REGIONS BEYOND.

In a recent circular letter, dated Harley House, Bow, E., Mr. and Mrs. Guinness say:—

You will be glad to hear that we have received tidings of the safe arrival at Banana of the party of missionaries for the Congo who left us in the middle of April, including Mr. Petterson, Mrs. Clarke, and Miss Skakle. The latter has now become Mrs. Billington. We have lately sent out for the American Baptist Missionary Union an iron church, to seat six hundred people, to Banza Manteka, and also an iron house for the American ladies connected with the Mission. Mr. Frederickson with his young Norwegian bride, sailed for Banana on the 1st of this month. The remarkable work of conversion on the Congo continues to extend.

As we are nearly at the close of the present session of the Institute, we are now preparing to send forth a fresh band of missionaries into the Regions Beyond. Nearly two years ago, we sent Mr. Frank Foster to Calabar, on the West Coast of Africa. He has proved to be just the man for the sphere, and has succeeded admirably. He preaches to large numbers every week in the Efik language, and is wholly supported by the people among whom he labours. He is now desiring to extend his work in Calabar. Within a short distance of him in the interior the natives are not only heathen but cannibals. Though it seems almost incredible, we are assured by a missionary from that part now staying with us that human flesh, as for example, human arms and hands, &c., are publicly sold in the markets with fruit and vegetables. These very people not only need the Gospel of Christ, but are anxious for a preacher. Mr. Foster begs us to send out a man suited to instruct these people, and help them in every way. The natives have already given and cleared the land needed for a mission house, and will do what they can to sustain a "white teacher." One of our students, Mr. Bill, an earnest Christian with a practical knowledge of carpentry, able to build himself a house and to instruct the people in many useful arts as well as in the Gospel, has offered himself for this sphere, and is just the man we should like to send. His voyage will cost £35, and he will require an outfit, tools, &c., and support for the first year. After that the people will be able and willing in all probability to sustain him.

We have also a band of missionaries ready for China. Five of our number, Messrs. Mills, Redfern, Ririe, Wellwood, and Dorward are prepared to enter as soon as possible on missionary work in that land. Messrs. Pease, Kennedy, Brown and Guest, who have all completed their course in the Institute, are starting for Gospel work in Canada, Illinois and California. The ceaseless flow of emigration to the great Western regions of America makes it necessary to send there as many evangelists as possible. Our Russian brother, Eugene Harasimenko, is also leaving us at the close of this session to return to his own dark country. Mr. Otto Schmidt, a German brother, is going to join Mr. Rohrbach in Berlin, and help him in the work which is so rapidly growing on his hands there.

THE UNITED STATES AND GREAT BRITAIN.—For several years past the Peace Society has been making efforts to invite the attention of influential men, on both sides of the Atlantic, to the desirability of definite diplomatic concert between the Governments of the United States and Great Britain, with a view to the mutual adoption of a treaty for providing that disputes between the two nations shall be submitted to impartial arbitration for decision. During the past month, Mr. Cremer, M.P., has rendered some service in a similar direction, by obtaining the signatures of many members of the English Parliament to a Memorial to the President and Legislature of the United States in favour of this object. Mr. William Jones, Secretary of the Peace Society, also intends to visit America this autumn, for the express purpose of promoting this and

Among the Churches.

CHURCH OF ENGLAND.

Rev. Dr. Edgehill has declined the bishopric of Nova Scotia to which he was recently elected.

The Bishop of Exeter recently entertained at his palace a number of railway guards, porters, stokers, and firemen.

Rev. A. E. Barnes-Lawrence, incumbent of St. Luke's, Bold-street, has commenced a series of open-air services in the parish.

The foundation stone of the Victoria Chapel in the Rue des Bassins, Paris, to be erected as a memorial of Her Majesty's Jubilee, was laid by Lord Lyons.

Mr. J. Clements, of the Church Association, has been appointed secretary of the Church of England Working Men's Protestant Union, in place of Mr. C. J. Thynne, resigned.

In the Chapel of Ease, just opened in the parish of St. Nathaniel's, Liverpool, the services will be rendered in the Welsh language. There are eighty thousand Welsh residents in Liverpool.

A letter from Bishop Crowther to the Church Missionary Society states that he was recently shipwrecked on the coast near Cape Palmas. No lives were lost, but the natives plundered the ship and passengers, and the bishop himself lost over £200 of public moneys which he had with him.

PRESBYTERIAN.

Miss Hope, of Busby, shortly goes to Kaffraria, to superintend a boarding school for Kaffir girls.

The temperance committee of the English Presbyterian Church are purposing to visit all the congregations of the Berwick Presbytery.

In preaching his last (for the season) monthly sermon to young men, the subject being "Physical Recreation," Rev. Dr. Thain Davidson announced that he hopes to resume these special services in September.

The evangelistic committee of the Edinburgh Presbytery of the U.P. Church report that the work has been very successful during the past year. Rev. James Primrose, of Broxburn, said that, if the better class of the congregations would go out and speak a word for the Master, the churches would be better filled.

BAPTIST.

A new monthly magazine, Thought and Work, has been issued under the auspices of the Midland Baptist Association.

Dr. Clifford intends during his holiday, which will be spent in Ireland, to inspect and report upon the condition of the Baptist churches in that country.

Mr. William Tye, who has been superintendent of the Sunday-school at Grundisburgh, Suffolk, for fifty years, has during that time been absent only once.

A new Baptist chapel is now being built at Northcote-road, Wandsworth Common, and so highly does a Church of England lady, living in the neighbourhood, think of the work that she has lent £5000 at 2 per cent. to assist in the erection of the building.

Prior to leaving for his new charge at Brighton, Rev. David Davies was entertained by his old congregation at Regent's Park, at a farewell tea and public meeting. During his three years' pastorate the additions to the church have been: by baptism, 106; by letter, 111.

The late Rev. George Pearce was the last of the contemporaries of Carey, Marshman, and Ward. He took the lead in establishing the Baptist missionary press in Calcutta, and for some years conducted a training institution, in which many young men became qualified for the work of pastors, evangelists, and teachers.

METHODIST.

Rev. J. S. Balmer has been elected to the chair of the Methodist Free Church Assembly.

Rev. Mark Guy Pearse is one of the lecturers at the Chautauqua (U.S.) Assembly, which opened on the 2nd inst.

Wardour Hall, formerly a Congregational church, and at present occupied by the church of which Rev. Andrew Mearns is pastor, has, in addition to St. James's Hall, been secured for the purposes of the London Wesleyan Mission.

The second monthly "at home" given by the Old Leysians at their mission hall, 199, Whitecross-street, E.C., to the members of the Working Men's Club and others connected with the hall, was a great success. This time the men were invited to bring their wives with them.

The Evangelistic and Aggressive Union of younger ministers has held its inaugural meeting. The Union is open to all ministers of the Connexion. The principal objects are to promote earnest Scriptural Christianity, and a more frequent use of those evangelistic methods which have been so fruitful in Methodism.

The Wesleyans of Nottingham recently held a very successful camp meeting in the Forest just outside the town. This was the culminating point of active aggressive work carried on for some time past by the seven mission bands, numbering about two hundred members, connected with the principal societies in the circuit.

At the annual meeting of the children and grandchildren of ministers, at the Centenary Hall, the success attending the careers of ministers' children was a matter of general comment. Rev. H. P. Hughes referred to the number of eminent men, in and out of

SALVATION ARMY.

At a large meeting in the Town Hall, Stratford, on the occasion of a lecture by Mrs. Booth, Rev. Mr. Servanté, Vicar of Christ Church, presided, and expressed his great sympathy with the work.

One of the women who testified of the goodness of God on the occasion of a recent summer outing to Epping Forest was some time previously saved from starvation by the slum-post brigade.

A Wesleyan resident of Tyldesley, for eight years, says, "Many of the sinners who seemed furthest gone and most hopeless are now godly men and women, and it is the Army that has been God's instrument in turning them from their fearful ways."

CONGREGATIONAL.

Rev. J. Jackson Wray is lecturing to large audiences in the United States.

Dr. R. W. Dale, of Birmingham, sailed to Australia last week, and on the previous Sunday took leave for the present of his congregation at Carr's-lane.

The death of Rev. T. Roberts, of Llanrwst, who was engaged on the biography of the late Rev. Dr. W. Rees, of Liverpool, will delay the publication of his work, which is looked for with considerable interest.

The Bristol Theological Institute for the training of village pastors and evangelists has, since its formation in 1863, sent out about one hundred and sixty men, many of whom have worthily occupied good positions in the pastorate of churches in the smaller towns and in country villages.

A public farewell was given to Mr. and Mrs. Shaw at Clapton Park Church on Thursday last, prior to their return to Madagascar. Mr. Shaw will not return to Tamatave, the scene of his former labours, but is going four or five hundred miles farther south to found a new mission at Ivohipeno.

The congregation of the church at Market-street, Farnworth, of which Rev. W. Hewgill is pastor, has just distinguished itself by putting into the collecting boxes £1170 on its thirty-seventh anniversary Sunday. There has for some time been a debt of £1500, mainly due to past spiritual enterprise, and this was the result of a determined effort to wipe it out.

Dinwiddie, for a number of years minister of Camden-road Presbyterian Church.—Alderman Robert Benson, J.P., of Preston, a prominent member of the Society of Friends.—Mr. James Lister, a member of the Baptist Church at Birchcliffe, Hebden Bridge, for nearly fifty years.—Rev. TEMPERANCE NOTES.

HOME.

The Sunday Closing Bill has been withdrawn, as there was no hope of its passing this session.

In the Election Law Amendment Bill it is proposed to close all public-houses on election days.

Three years ago Glasgow Parochial Board expended on liquors £286 4s. 6d.; last year the amount was only £2 8s. 6d.

Dr. John W. Kirton, author of "Buy your own Cherries," &c., has undertaken to conduct a series of special evangelistic services and Gospel temperance meetings at St. James's Temperance Hall, Kennington Park, commencing July 24.

On Sunday last the temperance societies in the neighbourhood of Dulwich combined for a demonstration and church parade on behalf of the Barry-road Orphanage. The service was at St. Giles's Church, Camberwell, and the vicar, Rev. F. F. Kelly, in the course of his sermon, pointed out how becoming it was that those who denied themselves of intoxicants for the sake of others should so exercise themselves in Christian charity for the benefit of poor orphans.

FOREIGN.

Chevalier de Proskow-Marstorff says that in Austria intemperance is dangerously increasing.

It is stated that in America absinthe drinking is increasing largely and with distressing results.

Dr. C. H. Hughes says, "The families of intemperate parents are the recruiting grounds for asylums."

In Belgium an agitation is being conducted to secure the secluded and scientific treatment of drunkenness as a disease.

By the German Penal Code anyone who becomes so intemperate that he cannot support himself or those dependent upon him is liable to imprisonment.

Sir Frederick Roberts, the Commander-in-Chief of the Indian army, has memorialised the Indian bishops on the subject of temperance amongst the men. He urges the amalgamation of all the various temperance associations connected with the force into one organisa-

WESTWARD HO!!!

Dear Readers of The Christian,

I am hoping, by God's help, to send out to Canada in August two further parties of Children, consisting of about 180 Lads, and 50 Girls; 230 young people altogether.

To send out all these, rescued, as the great majority of them have been, from the depths of poverty and of suffering, and trained in our Homes under Christian influences, and in habits of industry, is the truest as it is the surest way of permanently relieving the chronic poverty of squalid London.

At the same time the presence of these well trained, industrious young people will confer an inestimable blessing upon Canada, waiting with its millions of untilled acres of virgin soil for vigorous accessions to its scanty population.

Whether I shall be able to complete by this means the rescue of these boys and girls, and give this boon to Canada, or not, must depend absolutely upon the state of our Funds. To emigrate one boy or girl will cost £8 10s. 0d. (for outfit, kit, railway fare, ocean journey, and a small residuum to meet expenses on the other side); and I dare not conclude my plans unless I see some hope that the money required will be forthcoming.

I would therefore most earnestly invite the Lord's stewards to consider this matter seriously and prayerfully, and not to permit our present lack of funds to frustrate these wise plans for the emigration of 230 needy little ones. The children are all ready and waiting; but, alas,

OUR PURSE IS EMPTY!

Be it remembered, too, that others are likewise waiting.

Every place in our Dormitories, and Workshops, and Cottage Homes that is left vacant by the departure of a boy or girl to Canada can be filled immediately by some little homeless wanderer, to whom we can at once extend the hand of help. And thus the blessing of those who are ready to perish can be passed on undiminished in its efficacy.

The burden of these young lives lies heavily upon my heart. It is difficult to shake it off by day or night, and I can only find relief and comfort in the thought that each company of young emigrants sent out represents so many SAVED from the VORTEX OF OUR STREETS.

We are doing what we can to rescue some, but that we dare not now proceed further unless Christian friends come speedily to our assistance.

There is so little time left if we are to avail ourselves of this last opportunity for this year, that I would urge those who feel disposed to help, to do so without delay.

Any gifts for the Emigration Fund or for the general support of the "Homes" will be gratefully received and acknowledged by the Treasurer, Mr. William Fowler, by the Chairman of our Committee, Mr. S. Gurney Sheppard, or by

Your faithful fellow-worker among perishing children,

THOS J. BARNARDO.

[As it is found that infidels and others send tracts to the persons whose names are inserted here, it is most important that all books and papers received should be carefully read before being given away.]

Appeals.

School and Home for Blind Children (Goldsmith's-place, Kilburn, N.W.).—£60 is greatly needed at once for necessary repairs to roof, bedrooms, &c. Thirty-six children received between the ages of three and eight years; nine little boys waiting for admission. Lady Supt., Miss E. F. Newbery, 127, Portsdown-road, W.

Scandinavian Temperance Home (88, Leman-street Whitechapel, E.).—Miss Hedenstrom appeals to English ladies each to furnish a room, or part of a room, in the new Home for sailors which she hopes to open in September near the West India Docks. The expense would be about £12. Two ladies have already consented to furnish a room.

Anglo-Indian Evangelisation Society.—The work of this Society is chiefly on the railways and among tea, coffee, and cinchona planters. Urgent appeals come from the secretary in India, Rev. H. G. Emeric De St. Dalmas, for extension. Evangelists are ready to enter the service when means are available. Contributions may be sent to the general secretary, Rev. John Fordyce, 33, Sutherland-place, Bayswater, London, W.

A New Temperance Hospital.—The Bethnal Green Mission Hospital, which for eleven years has proved an unspeakable blessing to thousands of sick and suffering poor in East London, does not belong to Mildmay; and being simply a warehouse, adapted as far as possible to its present uses, does not fulfil, either in capacity or general suitableness, the demands made upon us for the cure of disease and the alleviation of bodily distress. To place this mission work on an enlarged and more permanent basis has long been the earnest desire of some of our warmest friends: and through the unwearying endeavours of the Countess of Tankerville a freehold site in Shoreditch parish has been secured and paid for, on which it is proposed to erect an unpretending hospital of forty or fifty beds. The building will be commenced when the cost (probably not less than £7500, of which we have £500 in hand) is defrayed, as we do not intend to run into debt. James E. Mathieson, Mildmay Conference Hall, N

M. GEORGE BARBIER, who for many years has laboured amongst poor French in London, has visited Barnave, near Luc-en-Diois, where he was formally ordained and recognised as a pastor by seven pastors present.

THE METHODISTS are labouring hard in various districts of Saxony, and a wonderful blessing is following their efforts. Numbers of their preachers are traversing the country, and in several places large chapels are being built.

MELBOURNE.—The Thursday mid-day services for business men, which are held in Collins-street Church, are fast becoming one of the institutions of the city. We do not wonder at this, says a contemporary, for Dr. Bevan's discourses are such as meet the heart-hunger of spiritually minded men engaged in the commercial life of our busy cities. It is not advanced theology or sensational oratory which is filling Dr. Bevan's church and drawing men around him as by some magnetic power. It is the felicitous setting forth of a full-orbed Gospel of love in Jesus Christ the Saviour.

Subscriptions Received by Messrs. Morgan & Scott to Monday, July 18, 1887.

 Donations should be sent by Cheque or P.O. Orders, not by stamps.

 We would respectfully urge all our friends, when remitting to us, to make Cheques, Money Orders, or Postal Orders payable to Morgan & Scott, and to cross them "City Bank;" this will effectually prevent loss of same.

 Will donors oblige us by giving explicitly and fully the titles of the missions to which they wish their donations to be applied? Mistakes which sometimes arise will thus be obviated. Will they also bear in mind that our Donation List is made up for the Printer on Monday morning? Any amounts received afterwards will be acknowledged in the subsequent week's number.

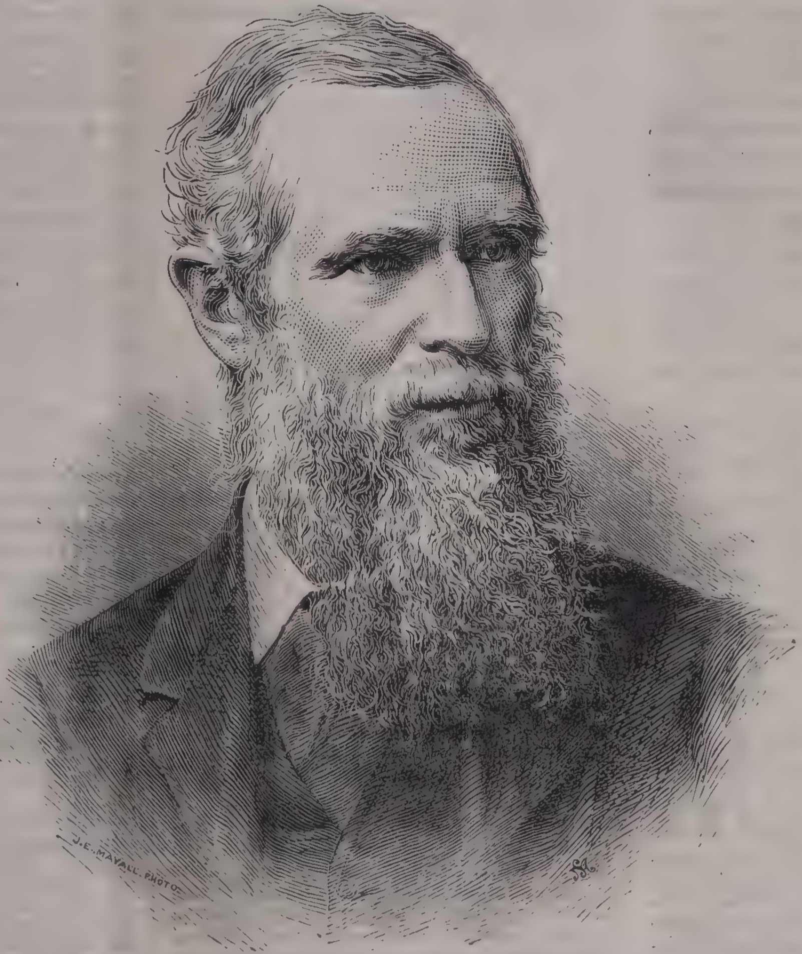
MR. JOHN MURDOCH, LL.D.

THIS week's portrait suggests a somewhat unusual but most important aspect of mission work in India. The educational and literary needs of our Eastern Empire are not often dwelt upon by speakers and writers who supply English readers with missionary information. It is seldom understood that of the population of India, which is more than one-sixth of that of the globe, nearly ninety-nine out of every hundred belong to the labouring classes, the vast majority being engaged in agriculture. Of "the common people" only about three per cent. can read; and of women, only little more than two in a thousand. Hinduism with all its superstitions seems almost untouched in enormous districts; and ordinary mission work, in some phases of its progress, seems to extend with terrible slowness.



J. E. MAYALL. PHOTO.

Of the three and a half millions of children who are at school, less than 200,000 are learning the truths of Christianity. Nearly 40,000,000 are receiving no school education of any description. It is well known that Government does not see its way to permit the teaching of the Gospel in its own schools; therefore, while the education it gives deprives the people of their own belief, it leaves them godless. While the number of readers will rapidly increase, the power to read is positively pernicious without good books to be read. If good books are not prepared in increasing numbers, the demand for something to read will be met by the production of literature of an unhealthy and sceptical nature.

The need of Christian literature in India is not, as a rule, realised by English Christians. We are so accustomed to the absolute surfeit of publications at home that are worth reading, if only we had the time to read and the money to buy, that we do not grasp the idea of the intellectual, moral, and spiritual destitution of large villages that never receive even the smallest tract or anything whatever in the way of literature.

All this darkness of ignorance has been observed by many minds with painful distinctness. The ministry at home is aided by countless ramifications of Christian influence; and Christian schools and wholesome books are ready to hand to prepare the way for, and to follow up the work of, the preacher of the Gospel. Enough has been said to place in sharp contrast the Indian missionary, who often has to be the factotum, without the auxiliary help that seems so natural to us here. The living voice should be used as largely as possible, but the printed page is also needed to deepen any impressions which have been produced, as well as to reach the scattered millions.

No one has more fully studied these matters, nor has anyone been more useful in directly or indirectly supplying the needs we have mentioned, than the subject of this brief sketch. JOHN MURDOCH was born in Glasgow in 1819. After completing the grammar school course he attended the Training Institution. Subsequently he entered Glasgow University as a student. In 1844 he went to Ceylon to take charge of the Government central and normal schools at Kandy. In 1849 he resigned his connection with Government to devote himself to the publication of Christian literature. He then laboured with his own hands, while living on the simplest native fare, in working two presses in Kandy for the printing of vernacular school-books prepared by himself. About this time his support was undertaken by the Wellington-street congregation, Glasgow, to which he belonged. In 1854 he went to India to obtain catechists to labour among the coolies on the coffee estates in Ceylon. The well-known Tamil Coolie Mission took its rise in connection with this effort. He was afterwards led to visit Madras when the South India Christian School-book Society was established. The following year he was recognised as an agent of the United Presbyterian Church of Scotland.

In 1858 he became the Indian agent of the then newly established Christian Vernacular Education Society for India (into which the School-book Society was now merged), while still retaining his official connection with his own church. In 1867, in addition to his previous duties and in connection with them, he became Indian agent of the Religious Tract Society. The honorary degree of LL.D. was conferred on him by the University of Glasgow in 1871.

Of his present life-work Mrs. Murray

Mitchell writes in her recent book, "In Southern India":—

> The Christian Vernacular Education Society does indeed a most important work in India—its master spirit being our friend Dr. Murdoch, whose indefatigable labours have mainly helped to make the Society the valuable institution it is. It was established directly after the Indian Mutiny. It trains teachers, supports primary schools, sends forth colporteurs who sell many thousand copies of the Scriptures and other publications during the year; while Dr. Murdoch scatters his admirable series of school-books broadcast over the land, and is always producing something new and fresh in other useful books.

Dr. Murdoch's beneficent scheme is designed to include all books of a healthy moral tone, possessing a Christian tendency, which treat of subjects affecting the social or moral improvement of the people, and upon which the native mind requires enlightenment.

A.L.O.E. thus described Dr. Murdoch in The Lahore Church Gazette:—"A veteran in the work of diffusing pure literature; an old man with the energy of youth, who has visited the countries of Europe most noted for their schools, and crossed the Atlantic three times to examine the founts of educational knowledge."

The labours of this self-denying missionary seem to increase as years multiply. He has, during the history of the Society whose agent he is, made the circuit of India more than two dozen times, to visit the C.V.E.S. colleges, consult with committees, examine depositories, and promote the work in every way. Last October he returned to his adopted country, at an age when most Anglo-Indians would have long since retired from active duty. An author, no longer living, mentions him as "that laborious, energetic, and wandering genius, whom to know is to respect." This is the testimony of one who did not favour his outspoken opposition to idolatry, the sentiments that were objected to having been expressed as follows:—

> Although in these days of religious indifference the worship of "Jehovah, Jove, or Lord" may be regarded with equal eye, every right-minded Christian will shudder at countenancing in the slightest degree the crime of high treason against the God of heaven. The British Government rightly puts down, with a strong hand, rebellion against itself; but while it forbids the teaching in its schools of the blessed words, "Believe on the Lord Jesus Christ, and thou shalt be saved," yet in Government school-books youths are taught to worship the gods of the Hindoo pantheon, and to believe that their foreheads are void of beauty unless they bear the mark of rebellion against their Creator.

Dr. Murdoch's opponent replied that it would be as true to say that, because in English schools we read the Metamorphoses of Ovid, we are thereby taught to believe that Proteus or Jove is the true God. He forgot, however, that Hinduism is still to millions a potent theology, which Roman and Greek mythology cannot be said to be. We believe it is largely due to the faithful exposure of the teaching contained in Government school-books that idolatrous and even indecent passages no longer disgrace them.

Among many other publications, Dr. Murdoch is the author of the "Indian Missionary Manual," the "Indian Student's Manual," "Hints on the Management of Tract Societies in India," "Theosophy Unveiled," "India's Needs," and "Papers on Indian Reform." He is the editor of Indian "Essays on the Bible," and other books which are sent, with a copy of the Scriptures, to every graduate in India.

The name of Dr. Murdoch has for years figured in the reports and magazines of many missionary societies, for he is known and valued as a helper by all. He lives for one object, which he thus describes:—"May the time soon come when 'many shall run to and fro, and knowledge shall be increased'; when India shall cast her idols to the moles and to the bats, and acknowledge Him as her Lord whose 'right it is to reign.'"

THE ROMISH QUESTION.

The Conference on the corporate re-union of Christendom, to which we alluded last week, has met; but it has not, we imagine, greatly advanced the object in hand. The representatives of the Roman Catholic system were plain enough in the expression of their views, and for this all Protestants will feel duly grateful. One of them said that the difficulties of re-union would not come from Rome; but he was sufficiently honest to add that belief in the tenets of the Romish Church, and the acknowledgment of the supremacy of the Pope, were indispensable conditions. This is exactly what we said in advance last week. The Protestant portions of Christendom are not yet so bereft of sanity and common-sense as to place their necks in this noose, with their eyes open.

> The proposal that we should resume diplomatic relations with the Pope should be stoutly resisted. It is based upon the assumption that the Pope is a temporal sovereign. Now, the temporal power has been an unmixed curse to the Church of Rome and to the whole of Christendom. Are we, of all people under heaven, to assist in reviving that unscriptural abomination, which has deluged the world with blood? If our Roman Catholic brethren have anything to say to the British Government, let them say it through Cardinal Manning, or some other recognised head of their faith in this country.

We are glad to find The Methodist Times speaking so decidedly against our resuming diplomatic relations with the Pope; though, in confining to the Temporal Power the charge of being an "unscriptural abomination, which has deluged the world with blood," we think our contemporary omits the more important factor. Surely it was because the Temporal Power gave effect to the wicked machinations of the Spiritual Power that the two-headed monster became the "abomination" that it was, and was enabled "to deluge the world with blood."

Therefore, we still further dissent from the passage which follows:—

> To encourage the Pope to mix himself up with secular politics is to strike a terrible blow at the spirituality of the Roman Church. This insane proposal should be resisted as much in the interests of the Roman Church as of any other church. Religion is too sacred and heavenly a thing to be made the tool and plaything of unscrupulous and designing politicians. May God save the Pope from Satan disguised as an angel of light!

To speak of the spirituality of the Roman Church is like speaking of the chastity of a harlot. If Protestants are right, Romanism does not constitute a Church, but an Apostasy. The "religion" of Rome is neither "sacred" nor "heavenly," but has always been "the tool and plaything of designing politicians." There have been many spiritual men and women in Romanism, but they were not really of it, and sooner or later the mother of harlots made them know this. We echo the prayer that God may "save the Pope from Satan disguised as an angel of light," but he must cease to be the Pope before the prayer can be answered.

Very different, and far more true to history and to Scripture, are the views of Rev. William Arthur as to Popery and the Pope. If Popery, without the Temporal Power, is a "spiritual and heavenly religion, the Protestant Succession Act is unjust towards God and man." Such language as that quoted above is eminently calculated to undermine the barriers which our fathers erected against this mixture of heathenism and corrupt Christianity. To Romanists, as to all others, let us afford the fullest liberty of conscience, but let us not call evil good, and put bitter for sweet, and sweet for bitter.

We are glad to see that the committee of the Protestant Alliance have made strong representations to the Government on the dalliance with Rome indicated by receiving a Papal Envoy on the occasion of the recent Jubilee, and on the general question of the Protestant succession to the throne of these realms. Papists are ceaseless in their endeavours to further the interests of their system, with the view of regaining a coveted ascendency in Great Britain. As lovers of our country, we must be as untiring in our resistance to the greatest tyranny, and the greatest imposture, that this world has ever seen.

THE RESCUE SOCIETY.

There are in different parts of London, and connected with this Society, eight Homes, conducted on the family principle. Three of them are for those who have already fallen, four for those from fourteen to eighteen who are in circumstances of danger, while that at 79, Finsbury-pavement, is for the temporary accommodation of girls. In these Homes last year five hundred and twenty-two girls received protection, comfort, and training.

From the pages of statistics we glean that of the two hundred and fifty who had fallen, no fewer than one hundred and twenty-three were under sixteen years of age. The inmates of the Homes were from all parts of the country—it might almost be said of the world, for there are eight different countries represented. As shown by their conduct in the Home, as well as by letters written sometimes after ten or twelve years of active and earnest, self-denying labour in the busy world, they have profited by the sad experience of the past. The report states that during the year there has been a steady, quiet work of grace amongst the inmates, and many have, it is believed, been truly converted to God. Some who have gone away unsatisfactorily have afterwards owned that the few months spent in the Home had been the means of stimulating them to a better life. Mr. C. Stuart Thorpe, 79, Finsbury-pavement, E.C., is the secretary.

BRIGHTON.—The Daily Prayer Meeting which for the last six months has been held in the Royal Pavilion in this town, will, on and after Wednesday August 3, be resumed in the newly constructed assembly room of the Y.M.C.A., 55, Old Steine.

LATTER-DAY DELUSIONS.

BY GEORGE C. NEEDHAM.

AN article appeared in THE CHRISTIAN of June 10, under the above title, the subject-matter of which ought to find a place in every evangelical publication. Editors should be much more bold to speak the word without fear; pastors plead that an exposé of heresy may alienate personal friends from the churches of which they are overseers. Faithful warning is, however, more golden than that silence which may encourage evil. Doctrines of demons have overflowed their banks, and are fast sweeping into the sea of social wreckage and moral death some of our fairest and most zealous fellow-Christians.

The shameful practices hinted at in the article referred to have had notable illustration in America also. For many years the varied theories of perfectionism called out doctrinal controversy. But while the false teaching was denounced from the pulpit, errorists have multiplied like the frogs in Egypt, entering even the royal bed-chamber—the Theological seminary. And so, per consequence, seed has been sown broadcast which is now bearing fruit a hundredfold. While orthodox men slept, the heterodox band scattered profusely doctrines of sinlessness, emotionalism, sexual affinities, pantheism, spiritism, and modern Buddhistic theosophy under the guise of "Christian science," and "mind-cure." And now, alas! the crop has ripened into shameless deeds. It is painful to record the villainies practised in Christ's holy name; the horrid blasphemies perpetrated under the assumption of obedience to the Spirit, the sins committed in violation of every pure instinct and contrary to every moral precept. And yet we are told that the acceptance of the above-mentioned doctrines will promote the highest development of spiritual life.

When non-Christian philosophies, and inward impressions become more authoritative than the precepts of God's Word; when the fact of present physical glorification is taught because that Christ has already come, and all millennial and eternal blessings are antedated, because prophecy has had its final fulfilment—what can be the outcome of these delusions but confusion and every evil work? To evade the Cross and escape the curse seems to be the great desideratum. Battling against sin is severe work: a sublime quiet, a blissful repose is preferable. Hence the reception given to theosophy which denies the fact of sin, and trains its devotees to charge the idea of its existence to the imagination.

The "rest of faith" is to be oblivious of all enemies; to utterly ignore the "flesh;" to deny an existence to the devil; and to cherish the world as the heaven into which we have already come, with its societies, laws, traditions, and pleasures. Nor need we pray, for prayer supposes need, and need is purely imaginary. As the creature is God, He knows no need, and prayer is, therefore, unbelief. Man's unification with Himself, and his absorption into the Deity are substitutes for atonement and salvation. A holy science is the spiritual exercise which takes the place of Bible study, prayer, and worship. A page from Emerson's transcendental sentimentalism suffices for the family worship of the household. This is the "lovely rest," which shirks responsibility, refuses the Cross, and shuns every burden of Christian work.

We have, however, lived to see this "rest and simpering vagabondism. "There was a time," said a lady in public meeting, "when I was burdened for the city, when I prayed for my family, and anxiously laboured for the spiritual good of my neighbours. But all that bondage is behind me. I have entered into perfect rest. I have no burdens now—not a care. The city belongs to God; my children are his; everything and everybody are in Him. I do nothing now but sweetly rest." This sublime quiet is pictured as the highest attainment of faith; it is one act of abandonment. No more prayers; no more tears; no more burdens. Gethsemane was superfluous; Calvary unnecessary. Abandonment! Yes, promises are abandoned, doctrines are abandoned; precepts are abandoned, and Christ is abandoned, yet the victim knows not how far-reaching and subversive of all true faith is the delusion.

What is its fruit? A professional man slyly withdraws himself from the companionship of wife and children to enjoy heavenly communion with "a dear sister" who has consecrated herself to him. He sought the sympathy of other sisters who had measured these devices of the devil, and who pertly and indignantly repelled his advances. This to him was grieving the Spirit, who prompted these overtures of love on his part. The sister who is his present affinity has obeyed the Divine voice in her soul, and is now helping him in the development of a high spiritual existence!

A lady professing entire surrender to God is arrested for stealing jewellery. Her plea was this:—The Lord told her, "all things are yours." Another of exalted spiritual life went around laying her hands on the heads of preachers to impart to them the Holy Spirit, some of whom foolishly submitted to her dictum. Having laid her hands on the property of a widow, the law laid its hands on her, and put a speedy end to her anointings. But more startling crimes have come to light, and we are scarcely recovered from one shock when we are well-nigh paralysed by another, as disclosures of moral obliquity on the part of spiritual leaders are exposed.

That such apostasy, including lawlessness and licentiousness, will abound to the end, must be expected, according to prophetic revelation. But may we not inquire what are the immediate reasons for these perversions and defections. Is not modern preaching too superficial? The warnings of Scripture; its denunciation of sin; its portrayal of sin's dread penalties, and its vivid sketches of judgment to come, are scarcely noticed. An easy liberalism has insidiously crept into our theology, and sinners win sympathy because of their horrid lives from sentimental Christian workers. The mawkish religion that will present bouquets and Cologne to a cold-blooded murderer, and bolster him up with tearful sympathy, as if he were a life-saving hero, is akin to the attitude of Christians toward the ungodly. God is love; but love is justice, truth, hatred of evil, and inflexible law. It will not treat crime as misfortune, nor guilt as mere accident.

Perhaps certain doctrines have not been sufficiently enforced because of an idea that they are already familiar. But theory is never vital. Even with the commonest doctrines there should be the constant practical application of truth to the life. Salvation from sin and from sinning, the antagonism of flesh and spirit, honesty, truthfulness, relation of husbands and wives, of parents and children, of masters and servants, national life, social life, receive due attention from preachers and teachers, from pastors and evangelists. In a word the laws of the New Testament in the Epistles, to which we are subject, need to be expounded, applied, and enforced.

'ARETHUSA' & 'CHICHESTER' BOYS

IT was a pretty sight, and withal a very suggestive one, that was presented to the numerous visitors to these famous training-ships on Tuesday, last week, on the occasion of the annual inspection and distribution of prizes. After a pleasant run down the river from Charing-cross, we came in view of the Arethusa gaily decked with flags, and her yards smartly manned. Some preliminary evolutions immediately followed, and after lunch the main deck became for a time the scene of movements which showed that the good ship is now playing a far nobler part than when in days of yore she went forth to fight against the foe.

The distribution of prizes was, doubtless, the event of the day to the boys. These prizes, of which there were about eighty, were as diverse in kind as were the objects sought to be encouraged by the generous donors. Some (value £1 1s.) to the Arethusa boys by the Earl of Jersey, and to the Chichester boys by Mr. John Macgregor, were for diligence, Bible knowledge, swimming, and general smartness; other money prizes were for practical seamanship, and there were book rewards for excellence and general attention in each branch of instruction. The chaplain gave a Bible to the two boys who had given the best account of a sermon, and there were also six prizes for proficiency in general knowledge. Perhaps the prize that carried with it the largest amount of meaning (as it certainly did of sympathy, for the boys cheered their hero lustily), was a silver watch to the best boy in the ship, selected by themselves. Another silver watch was for diligence at instructions and exemplary conduct, and yet another for the sick bay attendant.

The distribution of prizes was fitly crowned by a presentation to three young men who had passed through these training-ships, and for some two or three years had been under other captains on the wider waters of the ocean. One of these is now captain of his ship. It needs no power of imagination to trace out the contrast between what might have been, if these lads had been left to themselves, and what is, as a result of the training they have received. This work is carried on in connection with the Reformatory and Refuge Union, the honoured secretary of which (Mr. William Williams) spoke in kindly words to one and another the joy he felt in beholding some of the fruits of his labours.

The distribution over, Lady Jersey, in words marked by kindly feeling and real concern, spoke to the boys of the true meaning of life, and of the training there given. A few words from the Earl of Jersey and Mr. Macgregor, and some songs well sung by the boys, closed the more public proceedings.

OBITUARY.

REV. DR. LEWIS EDWARDS, OF BALA.

THE Welsh Calvinistic Church has suffered a great loss by the death of the founder and principal of the Welsh Methodist College at Bala. The College this year celebrates its jubilee. Dr. Edwards, father of the Principal of the University College at Aberystwith, was nearly eighty years of age. The college under his guidance rendered great service in training for the ministry in North Wales. Dr. Edwards was advanced in his political views, and a strong advocate of religious equality. He and his son are the only two known Welshmen on whom the University of Edinburgh has conferred the degree of Doctor of Divinity.

THE "DRINK BILL" of New Zealand was less by £160,000 in 1886 than the previous year, making a total

ELIJAH THE PROPHET.—11.

By Rev. F. B. MEYER, B.A., Leicester.

LOVINGKINDNESS BETTER THAN LIFE.

1 Kings xix.

The holy Apostle, whose earliest lessons of the love of God were conned, as he leant on the bosom of Christ, tells us, in words deep and simple as some translucent lake, that we have known and believed the love that God hath to us. They are wonderful words for mortal to utter. A lifetime would be well spent if, at its close, we could utter them without exaggeration. But surely none can know or believe so much of the love of God as those who have experienced its gentle kindness amid backsliding and failure, like that which marred Elijah's course.

That failure, as we have seen, was most disastrous. It inflicted lasting disgrace upon Elijah's reputation. It arrested one of the most hopeful movements that ever visited the land of Israel. It struck panic and discouragement into thousands of hearts which were beginning to gather courage from his splendid zeal. It snapped the only brake by which the headlong descent of Israel downwards to destruction could have been prevented. It brought discredit and rebuke on the cause and name of God. A choir of angels might well have gathered around the truant prophet as he lay upon the desert sands, and recited some such mournful words as those with which the sweet Psalmist lamented the death of Saul and Jonathan on Gilboa's fatal field: "How are the mighty fallen in the midst of battle! O man of God, thou hast tripped to thy fall upon thy high places; we are distressed for thee; how are the mighty fallen; and the weapons of war perished!"

If ever it were befitting for a man to reap where he had sown, and to suffer the consequences of his own misdeeds, it would have been so in the case of Elijah. But God's thoughts are not as man's. He knew all the storms of disappointment and broken hope which were sweeping across that noble spirit, as gusts of wind across an inland sea. His eye followed with tender pity every step of his servant's flight across the hills of Samaria. He did not love him less than when he stood elate with victory hard by the burning sacrifice. And his love assumed, if possible, a tenderer, gentler aspect, as He stooped over him, whilst he slept. As a shepherd tracks the wandering sheep, from the fold to the wild mountain pass, where eagles, sailing in narrowing circles, watch its faltering steps, so did the love of God come upon Elijah, as, worn in body by long fatigue, and in spirit by the fierce war of passion, he lay and slept under the juniper tree.

And God did more than love him. He sought by tender helpfulness to heal and restore his servant's soul to its former health and joy. At his command an angel, twice over, prepared a meal upon the desert sands, and touched him, and bade him eat. No upbraiding speeches; no word of reproach; no threats of dismissal; but only sleep and food, and kindly thoughtfulness of the great journey which he was bent on making to Horeb the mount of God. It makes us think of Him who, in after days, prepared in the early morning, upon the shore of the lake, a breakfast such as wet and weary fishermen would love—there was a fire and fish laid thereon, and bread; and He did this for those who, following the impulsive lead of Peter, had apparently determined to wait no more for his coming; but to return to the boats and fishing tackle, from which He had

It may be that these words will be read by those who have failed. You once avowed yourselves to be the Lord's, and lived for a little on the uplands, where the golden light ever shines upon the happy spirit; or you professed to enter the blessed life, and you did taste its joys, and experience its liberty and victory; or you have stood up to teach others, stirring them to deeds of heroic courage and daring. But all that is over now. You have fallen, as Milton's Archangel, from Heaven to Hell. We need not now discuss the cause of your failure; you were overtaken in some sudden temptation; or you neglected communion with God; or you refused to live up to your light. But the sad fact remains, that you have failed; and perhaps failed, as Elijah did, where everyone expected you to stand. And you are ashamed; you want to hide yourself from all who knew you in happier days; you have given up heart and hope, and lie dejected and dispirited on the desert sands; you account yourself forsaken by God and man. But remember, though forsaken by man, yet you are not forgotten of God. He loves you still, and pities you; and yearns over you, and waits beside you, with loving tendance and provender, in order to restore your soul, and give you back the years that the cankerworm and caterpillar have eaten. We have then, in this incident, four thoughts of the love of God which must be a comfort to us all; and especially to those who have fallen from Carmel's height to the level of the desert sands.

I. God's love in its constancy.—It is a fact which we all admit, but which we seldom realise in the moments of depression and darkness to which we are all exposed. It is not difficult to believe that God loves us, when we go with the multitude to the house of God, with the voice of joy and praise, and stand in the inner sunlit circle; but it is hard to believe that He feels as much love for us when, exiled by our sin to the land of Jordan and of the Hermonites, our soul is cast down within us, and deep calls to deep, as his waves and billows surge around. It is not difficult to believe that God loves us when, like Elijah at Cherith and on Carmel, we do his commandments, hearkening unto the voice of his word; but it is not so easy when, like Elijah in the desert, we lie stranded, or, as dismasted and rudderless vessels, roll in the trough of the waves. It is not difficult to believe in God's love when with Peter we stand on the mount of glory, and, in the rapture of joy, propose to share a tabernacle with Christ evermore; but it is well nigh impossible when, with the same Apostle, we deny our master with oaths, and are abashed by a look in which grief masters reproach.

Yet we must learn to know and believe the constancy of the love of God. We may not feel it. We may deem it shut up and gone for ever. We may imagine that we have forfeited all claim to it. We may think of it, as Arctic travellers, dying in the icy darkness, dream of the summers of early childhood, which they shall never see again. But, nevertheless, it has not altered; staunch as the affection of a friend, true as the love of a mother, the love of God abides unchangeable as Himself. Mists, born of the swamps and marshes of your own sin, obscure the light of that sun, but it is shining yet as brilliantly as ever; and will shine on till it has dispelled all shrouding veils, and bathes you again in its warm and blessed glow.

O man of God, lying amid the wrecks of what might have been, take heart; hope thou still in the love of God, trust in it, yield to it, and thou shalt yet praise Him, who is the health of thy countenance and thy God.

II. God's love manifested in special tenderness, because of special sin.—We do not read that an angel ever appeared to Elijah at Cherith or Zarephath, or awakened him with a touch that must have been as thrilling as it was tender. Ravens, and brooklets, and a widow woman had He had drunk of the water of Cherith, but never of water drawn by angel hands from the river of God, which is ever full of water. He had eaten of bread and flesh foraged for him by ravens and of meal multiplied by miracle; but never of cakes moulded by angel fingers. Why these special proofs of tenderness? Certainly it was not because God took any pleasure in his servant's sin, or condoned his grave offence; but because a special manifestation of love was needed to convince the prophet that he was still dearly loved, and to soften his spirit, and to lead him to repentance.

Where ordinary methods will not avail, God will employ extraordinary ones. There is one memorable instance of this, which has afforded comfort and hope to multitudes who have sinned as Peter did, and who will bless God for ever for the record of the Master's dealings with his truant servant. The Lord sent a general message to all his disciples to meet Him in Galilee. But He felt that Peter would hardly dare to class himself with the rest, and so He sent to him a special message, saying: "Go tell my disciples, and Peter." It is thus that Jesus is working still throughout the circles of his disciples. So eager is He to convince the fallen of his unaltered love, that He will go out of his way to show it. He will invent new and unwonted surprises. He will employ angels with their gentle touch, and bake special cakes on desert stones. He will send special messages, entwined about the backslider's name. He will take the wandering sheep on his shoulders to bring it home. He will kill the fatted calf, never given to those who had not specially transgressed.

It may be that you are sleeping the sleep of insensibility or of despair; but all the while the love of God is inventing some unique manifestation of its yearning tenderness. He hates your sin, as only infinite holiness can. He yearns over you, as only infinite love can. He wants to convince you of what He feels, to touch you, to soften you, to win you back to Himself. All the while that you are grieving Him, and wandering from Him, He is encompassing you with blessings. Be conquered. Yield to Him. Take with you words, and turn again unto the Lord. He will receive you graciously.

III. God's love in its unwearied care.—It is most likely, that, when the angel came the first time, and touched him, and bade him arise and eat, it was evening; for we are told that he went a day's journey into the wilderness, before he sat down under the juniper bush. Night was spreading her temporary veil over the scorched sands, and the sun was sinking, like a ball of fire, on the unbroken rim of the horizon. And when the angel of the Lord came the second time, it would probably be as morning was breaking over the world. And thus, through the intervening night, the angels of God kept watch and ward about the sleeping prophet.

And it would almost seem, from the significant alteration of an angel in verse 5, for "the angel of the Lord," in verse 7, as if the Lord of all angels Himself assumed the responsibility of guarding his servant's sleep. "He that keepeth thee shall not slumber. The sun shall not smite thee by day, nor the moon by night. Jehovah shall preserve thee from all evil: He shall preserve thy soul."

None of us can measure the powers of endurance in the love of God. It never tires. It fainteth not, neither is weary. It does not fail, nor is it discouraged. It bears all things, believes all things, hopes all things, endures all things. It clings about its object with a divine tenacity, until the darkness and wandering are succeeded by the blessedness of former days. It watches over us during the hours of our insensibility to its presence; touching us ever and anon; speaking to us; and summoning us to arise to a nobler, better life, more worthy of ourselves, more glorifying to Him.

IV. God's love anticipating coming need.—This always stands out as one of the most wonderful passages in the prophet's history. We can understand God giving him, instead of a long discourse, a good meal and sleep, as the best means of recruiting his spent powers. This is what we should have expected of One who and who pities us as a father pitieth his children. But it is very wonderful that God should provision his servant for the long journey that lay before him: "Arise and eat; because the journey is too great for thee."

That journey was undertaken at his own whim; it was one long flight from his post of duty; it was destined to meet with a grave remonstrance at its close: "What doest thou here, Elijah?" And yet, the Lord graciously gave him food, in the strength of which he could endure the long fatigue. The explanation must be again sought in the tender love of God. Elijah's nature was clearly overwrought. Without doubt he had stedfastly made up his mind for that tedious journey to the Mount of God. Nothing would turn him from his fixed purpose. And, therefore, as he would go, God anticipated his needs, though they were the needs of a truant servant and a rebellious child. In wrath He remembered mercy, and prevented him with the blessings of his goodness, and imparted, through a single meal, sufficient strength for a march of forty days and forty nights. Let us pause here for a moment to adore the wonderful love of God, which gives men life and breath and all things, even when He knows that they will be used for selfish ends, and in direct opposition to his revealed will.

Surely these thoughts of the love of God will arrest some from pursuing any longer the path of the backslider. You have failed, but do not be afraid of God, or think that He will never look on you again. In thinking thus of Him, you grieve Him more, and aggravate your ill-behaviour. Rather cast yourself upon his love, as a swimmer flings himself upon the buoyant waves, which immediately close around him, and bear him up, and carry him upon their sunlit bosom. Tell Him how deeply you mourn the past, ask Him to restore you, give yourself to Him again, resume the forsaken work, re-take the abandoned post, and believe that God will again use you as a chosen vessel, and pour through you his tides of blessing, as an ocean may pour its flood through one narrow strait.

And as we close this precious narrative, may we not all receive instruction concerning those meals which Heaven prepares for us, each evening and morning, during our journey across the sands of time. At night when we come home wearied with the day's toil, before we fling ourselves into deep slumbers, the angels bid us arise and partake of that living Bread and Water, on which alone can spirits become strong. And, morning by morning, their gentle touches awake us from overdue slumbers, as they whisper: Arise and eat, lest the journey be too great for thee. Their neglect to obey the heavenly summons is the true cause of so much failure in the lives of Christian people. They do not feed enough on Christ. They slumber on, heedless and insensate, till the morning sun is high, and the angels have faded, with their provisions, away. May we be amongst the happy number who never need twice calling, but who rise each morning, as the first cadence of the angel voice breaks upon their ears, to eat of that flesh, which is meat indeed, and to drink of that blood, which is drink indeed. Then shall we be able to withstand all assaults, to endure all fatigue, and to abide perpetually in the realised presence of God. "They that wait upon the Lord shall renew their strength; they shall mount up with wings as eagles; they shall run and not be weary, and they shall walk and not faint."

SEAMEN IN THE ISLE OF MAN.—For many years a good work has been done among the seamen and fishermen of Ramsey, by the Seamen's Christian Friend Society. A good Bethel has now been erected on Ramsey Quay, capable of seating 250 adults. Mr. W. Radcliffe, the missionary, assisted by several friends, will hold Gospel and temperance meetings on Sundays and during the week evenings. The place will be opened as a reading-room daily, and there will also be a Sunday-school and Band of Hope for the children of fishermen and seamen. The opening services were conducted on Sunday, July 17, by Revs. J. J. Hill and W. F. Sugden, and Mrs. Hill, of London. The money required for the fitting up and furnishing of the place has been raised locally, but a sum of £190 is still required to pay for the building.

For the Young.

SOME ITALIAN FOLKS.

I have a letter in my pocket. It is on thin paper, which means that it comes from abroad, and it is very precious to me. By whom was it written? I cannot tell, for I see twenty names at the bottom of the page. What address is given? It had been sent from no one's house, but from a mission-room.

What is the news in the letter? Has anything happened? Nay, if I show the crumpled sheet of paper, it will seem that my friends have nothing to tell.

This is all that is said (in French):—"We long to see you. We think of you. We talk of you always when we are together. We can sing all the hymns you taught us, and we want to learn new ones. 'What shall it profit a man if he gain the whole world, and lose his own soul?'"

I fancy I can see them all, just as when I first visited St. Raphaël in the Riviera, a few months ago. The old man Langier is always breaking stones during the hot hours of the day. He stands on a road which is on a level with the sea. The sparkling waters of the Mediterranean are close to his feet, and he can witness the colouring of deep blue, and the rocks on the shore, which are fiery red. On the other side of the road, at a little distance off, are the white villas of St. Raphaël, gleaming in the sunshine. The hills are covered with trees, with every shade of green, the olives being almost silvery-grey.

How brilliantly transparent is the atmosphere at noonday! How cloudless is the sky! Old Langier is accustomed to the bright scene, and he can gaze steadfastly whilst his eyes are not dazzled. The sun shines fiercely on his head, yet he continues to break stones, humming a hymn-tune sometimes. Langier is a happy old man. For, besides having work to do and being able to earn his daily bread, he is the door-keeper of the little hall where there have been nightly mission meetings. And it is his day-dream, his one perpetual prayer, that this hall may ever be full to overflowing with poor peasants who, like himself, should find forgiveness and peace and rest through believing in Jesus.

The families named Arnaud, Rougias, Caïs, Carcagne, Paille—who are they? I know where they live. Their houses are in the quaint Place de la République, in the "ancien village," just where the Salle de Conférence is situated. The children belonging to these families love to sit on the door-step of the mission-room. They look through the key-holes and chinks, trying to catch sight of the pretty new chairs where they had sat so often with their mothers. And little girls who are learning to read lisp out the words of the bright text on the wall, "The blood of Jesus Christ, his Son, cleanseth us from all sin."

Femme Rugias is knitting as usual. She has the key of her house in her pocket, and she has told her sailor-son to go straight to the mission-room, if he should return home after sunset. Does she not always keep a seat for her boy at the meeting? And though the chair has been empty until now, she has faith to believe that he will come some day.

As for the young girls of the village—Vincences, Adèle, Pauline, Nathalie—I can quite well fancy that I see them, as they pass through the Place de la République, on their way to work. They only wear coarse skirts, with nothing on their sunburnt necks, yet how graceful, how pretty, they look! Adèle refuses to listen to the neighbours who try to tempt her to go to the dance on Sunday night. She cannot promise to follow her companions. She thinks that Jesus has spoken to her heart. She does not care for dancing now.

At the close of the evening meeting I know exactly where the Italian youths are to be found. Régnier, Colombo, Lattanzio, &c., there they are, in the centre of the Place de la République, talking, whilst the stars keep watch in the silent heavens. There is no difference of opinion amongst them. Surely, they say, it is better to spend their evenings in the mission-room than to waste money and learn bad habits at the café. As long as English ladies can teach them, they will be glad and willing to listen. Besides growing rich through not drinking wine, they will become wise and happy. Oh! if they could only understand all the wonderful words in the New Testament!

The Italian youths have all some small new hymn-books in their hands. For they have beautiful voices, and delight in singing. They are very glad to know that many of the spiritual songs that are sung in England have been translated by M. Valès for the use of poor peasants at Cannes and at St. Raphaël.

These are the people who sent me the letter which is in my pocket. They still come to the mission-room, night after night. For are there not some who feel they can never visit a drinking house again, and others who do not care for the dance? Though no English ladies are with them now to read or sing or speak to them, they spend each evening in their own Salle de Conférence. They are as sheep without a shepherd during these summer months. Old Langier diligently lights the lamps and arranges the chairs in the room. It is to be hoped that next winter, some gentle ladies (who perhaps are reading this week's Christian) will feel inclined to visit St. Raphaël. Meanwhile, the people must wait with patience.

GOD IS LOVE, AND GOD LOVES ME.

'Neath the lime-tree's shadow swinging,
Eyes cast down, and book on knee,
Sat a little maiden singing,
"God is love, and God loves me."

"God is love, my little maiden,
Tell me why 'tis thus you sing?"—
Raised she then her sweet face, laden
With the charms of youth's fresh spring.

"God is love," she said, demurely,
"All around his love I see;
God loves me, I know it, surely,
For my Bible tells to me

"How He sent his Son most holy
To be mocked and crucified;
'Twas for me,"—the tears fell slowly—
"I have sinned, but Jesus died.

"Oh, I thank my loving Saviour,
That He suffered on the tree;
Can I doubt his tender favour?
Can I doubt his love to me?"

Happy maiden! Thus I, musing,
Passed adown the dewy wood:
Thine the treasure there's no losing,
Thine the truest, richest good.

Oh to know God's love unfailing,
This the secret is of rest;
Other love is unavailing,
If we miss the first and best.

And when life's dull cares are pressing,
Lest I overwhelmed should be,
Comes assurance rich with blessing,
"God is love, and God loves me."

ENGLAND AND OPIUM.

A circular has lately been issued on this subject, signed by the following well-known Christian gentlemen:—Canon Basil O. Wilberforce, Southampton, Rev. W. S. Swanson (Moderator of the Presbyterian Church of England, formerly of Amoy), Rev. J. F. B. Tinling (Author of "The Poppy Plague"), Dr. John Clifford (Vice-President of the Baptist Union), Rev. Edward Storrow (formerly of the London Mission, Calcutta), Rev. J. Hudson Taylor (Director of the China Inland Mission), Rev. Edwin J. Dukes, Northfield, Bridgwater (formerly of the London Mission, Amoy), Mr. James E. Mathieson (Mildmay), Prof. W. G. Elmslie, Mr. B. Broomhall, Mr. James Clark (Street), Mr. H. Grattan Guinness, Dr. J. A. Macfadyen, and Rev. William Booth (Salvation Army). The circular says:—

"We are much concerned that more is not being done for educating and stirring up public opinion against the opium trade, and the manufacture and monopoly, by the British Government, of the drug that is spreading desolation in China. This is, perhaps, largely due to the ratification of the Chefoo Agreement, as modified by the 'Additional Article' signed in July, 1885. In the course of the negotiations eventually initiated by the British Government for that purpose, certain proposals made by China with respect to the li-kin dues to be levied upon imported opium were accepted by Great Britain. Under the impression that, by the tardy, unwilling, and limited concession of China's wishes about these domestic dues, she has at length, in relation to the opium question, been treated by this country as a Sovereign Power having the right to fix her own import duties, many friends of the anti-opium movement have been led to consider that the cause has been virtually gained, and that, consequently, there is no need for further agitation.

"As the result of careful inquiries, some of us, however, are prepared to affirm that China has not yet been treated as a Sovereign Power, and that the freedom accorded to her in the recent negotiations was restricted to certain matters altogether outside the obligations concerning opium imposed by the Treaty of 1860—matters recognised in that Treaty as belonging exclusively to China's jurisdiction. But, without now insisting upon this point, we would very earnestly call attention to the fact that the recent agreement has not, in any way, altered the responsibilities of the British Government with respect to the production of opium in India, or raised any barrier to the inroads of the drug in China. We hold, therefore, that it is as urgent as ever that the British public should be informed respecting the facts of this destructive and disgraceful traffic, which is the shame of England, the scourge of China, and a great hindrance to the spread of the Gospel.

"For this purpose a competent travelling and lecturing agent seems to us at present to be the greatest necessity, and we have in Rev. Goodeve Mabbs, F.R.S.S., who ably served the Anti-Opium Society as its organising secretary, a man in every way equipped for such work. We therefore respectfully, but very earnestly, invite your co-operation in finding for him the means to do twelve months' work in this cause. £400 would suffice for this purpose, of which about £100 would be required for travelling, printing, postal, and other business expenses."

We may add that we will gladly receive and acknowledge in our columns any sums sent in answer to this appeal, which we hope will meet with a hearty and widespread response.

If any reader is not conversant with this subject, and the extent to which, as a nation, we are implicated in it, let them peruse the striking pamphlet, "The Truth about Opium," published by Messrs. Hodder & Stoughton, price 6d. It contains an array of reliable facts and weighty arguments that must carry conviction to every an example of the testimonies contained in the pamphlet, we give the following from a well-known and experienced pen:—

REV. J. GRIFFITH JOHN ON OPIUM.

"Opium-smoking in China, so far from being an innocent enjoyment, is an unmitigated curse to both the nation and the individual. The missionary is made to feel constantly that this pernicious trade, with its disgraceful history, speaks more eloquently and convincingly to the Chinese mind against Christianity than he does or can do for it. The trade has created a strong prejudice against the missionary and the Gospel. The Chinese cannot understand how the same people can bring to them a Gospel of salvation in one hand, and a destructive poison in the other. They do not see how it is possible for us to feel such a tremendous interest in their souls, whilst we are destroying their bodies by the million; and they have their doubts as to whether a people who could carry on such a traffic have a right to talk to them about religion, and exhort them to virtue. Though we as missionaries are free from the abomination, the Chinese cannot draw the line of demarcation. And then they will ask: 'Is this trade a legitimate fruit of Christianity?' But, granting that Christianity is not responsible for it, and that it is carried on in spite of Christ's golden rule—to to do unto others as we would have others do unto us—what is the use of Christianity if this trade is a specimen of its influence on the hearts and lives of men?

"It is useless to say that the Chinese are growing opium themselves, and that they will continue to do so, whether we import it or not. We have nothing to do with the possible or probable action of the Chinese in the matter. It is for us to wash our hands clean of the iniquity, and allow them to deal with it as they please. The trade is immoral, and a foul blot on England's escutcheon. It is not for us to perpetrate murder in order to prevent the Chinese from committing suicide. It is, however, by no means certain that the Chinese would not make an honest effort to stop the native growth, if we would only give them a fair chance to do so, by stopping the importation. I believe they would make the attempt, though I am not prepared to promise that the result would be satisfactory. I cannot close my eyes to the fact that opium-smoking in China has become so common, and that the habit has such a hold on its victim, that in my most calm and solemn moments, I can see no hope except in God. There are millions in China to whom the drug is dearer than life itself. Even if the foreign trade in the drug were given up, it is more than probable that opium-smoking, and consequently opium-growing, would go on in the provinces. Yunnan, Kwei-chau, and Si-chaun are red with the poppy every year; whilst in several of the other provinces it is extensively cultivated.

"The evil is now one of enormous magnitude, and I am inclined to think that no legislative measures on the part of the Chinese Government, however honestly adopted, will put an end to it. Be that as it may, our path as a Christian nation is plain enough. We have inflicted a terrible wrong on the people of China, and it is our solemn duty to try and undo it, by abandoning the trade at once and for ever ourselves, and by giving them every sympathy and aid in our power in their attempt to banish the curse from within their own borders. Would to God it were possible to bring the British Government to see the wicked character of the traffic, and to induce them to 'sacrifice their opium revenue on the altar of our national Christianity and China's wellbeing!'"

DAILY PRAYER UNION.—A preaching tour in connection with this Union has been taken by Rev. J. Worthington Atkin, M.A., of Rathbarry, co. Cork. The tour extended over five weeks, during which time Mr. Atkin preached on the work of the Holy Spirit in many places. God's blessing accompanied the preaching of the Gospel; many unconverted ones have been led to ask God for the gift of the Holy Ghost, while believers have been stirred up to consider the command. (c) In church life.—"If thy brother shall trespass against thee, go and tell him his fault between thee and him alone: if he shall hear thee, thou hast gained thy brother. But if he will not hear thee, then take with thee one or two more, that in the mouth of two or three witnesses every word may be established. And if he shall neglect to hear them, tell it unto the Church" (Matt. xviii. 15—17).

(5) The Beloved's voice.—"The voice of my beloved!...My beloved spake, and said unto me, Rise up, my love, my fair one, and come away" (Cant. ii. 8—13). "With admirable tact the conduct of Jacob is depicted, and the application of its lessons to present day life vividly shown."—Footsteps of Truth.

"No one can read these pages without being edified. The author's style is clear, vigorous, and interesting; and a thoroughly evangelical tone pervades the book. He gives one piece of practical advice to ministers of the Gospel, which many of our readers will be glad to see reproduced here: 'To recruit a dwindling congregation; to sustain interest in a crowded one; to awaken new devotion to the Bible; and to touch the many chords of human life—there is nothing to be compared with a reverent re-telling of the Stories of Bible Heroes and Saints.'"

WITH EIGHT FULL-PAGE ILLUSTRATIONS OF THE IMPORTANT EDUCATIONAL BUILDINGS.

Tinted Covers, 2s. Cloth Boards, 2s. 6d.

"This is a capital and useful book. Mr. Moody stamps all he does with his own vigorous personality, and a description of the work carried on near his home in Northfield, Mass., is interesting as evidencing the intensely practical character of one who is certainly no mere roving evangelist."
Methodist Recorder, July 7, 1887.

"This is a book calculated to interest and help Christian workers. They will find in it many thoughts that will arrest their attention and prove helpful and practical; some that may fitly be compared to 'Gold, Silver, and Precious Stones.'"—The Friend, July, 1887.

"This is no mere biography. It is a faithful, full, and fervid picture of Mr. Moody at work in his various organizations at his own home. . . . This beautifully got up and nicely illustrated volume ought to be in the hands of all Christian workers. It will be of the highest service to them. It teems with all kinds of useful hints suggested by an almost unique experience."
Oldham Chronicle, June 25, 1887.

"A fresh and vigorous book, calculated to provoke unto love and good works. Preachers, Sunday-school teachers, and others will find many helpful thoughts here."—Footsteps of Truth, July, 1887.

BRONCHO-PHTHISIS. CASE OF MR. HUGH HUGHES.

This patient first wrote me with statement of his case September 18, 1886. He had heard much of the results of my treatment and he argued, "if it has cured other people why not me?"

A sister had died of Consumption. About six months before writing me he had got wet through, which brought on a very hard cough, yellow expectoration, severe pains in the right lung. Also he had suffered from intense thirst and great weakness. I might mention that in the year before an abscess had formed on the leg, which was lanced three times, and discharged for a long time, weakening the constitution. He had been under medical advice with no effect, to the time above named, when he first wrote me.

In less than a month he reports:—"The incessant cough that I have had for six months is leaving me. I felt the effect after a few doses of your wonderful medicine. I shall stick closely to your regulations."

November 2nd:—"Gained three and a half pounds of flesh."

November 30th:—"I am getting better and stronger every day. I hope to attend business next week, which I have not been able to do for four months."

December 31st:—"I have been out every day for eight weeks, and not once caught any cold."

The last letter was dated February 4th, 1887.—"I must tender my very best thanks for your kind attention to my case. I was fast declining. Friends who saw me before I commenced your treatment, and who see me now, are surprised, and say 'I am altogether a new man.' I shall feel it my duty to tell every one of you.—HUGH HUGHES, 1, Mona View, Llanfairfechan, Wales."

SPECIAL EFFORT IN IRELAND.

May I ask the earnest prayers of the readers of The Christian, who have power with God, on behalf of a special effort to be made to preach the Gospel in Ireland. We propose to hold open-air meetings on a large scale, on the grounds of Fenaghy, near Ballymena (an hour from Belfast), on August 10 and 11. These meetings will be not so much in the way of conference as for the direct preaching of the Gospel, and will be similar to those held in Huntly in past years, which were so greatly blessed of God.

Preparations are being made upon an extensive scale. Special trains will be run on the lines. We expect an attendance of many thousands, with speakers from different parts of the kingdom. Above all, we expect, according to promise, the presence and power of the Holy Spirit.

It was at Ballymena the Lord was pleased to begin the mighty work of grace in 1859. Many are waiting with expectation for a gracious forth-putting of similar power now, in times of darkness and peril.

May I earnestly ask, on behalf of these meetings, the prayers of all who may read these lines. If any of your readers should have their way directed to the North of Ireland at the dates mentioned, they would be gladly welcomed.

Belfast. H. M. Williamson.

FUNDAMENTAL TRUTHS.

The Council of the Evangelical Alliance earnestly desire to be fellow-helpers with all who love the Lord Jesus Christ in sincerity, and, in the furtherance and defence of the Truth of God, are always ready to use any influence that He may have given to the organization. The suggestions, coupled with requests, that honoured brethren have recently addressed to the Council, have been thankfully received and considered. The appeal made to them to take some action at the present time in the endeavour to call forth a faithful testimony to the cardinal truths of the Gospel, meets with their cordial approval, for the Council are deeply impressed with the solemn responsibility that rests upon the people of God at the present time to witness for Him, and earnestly to contend for the faith.

It is only too evident to all who are jealous for God and his truth that on one side there is a perilous growth of superstition and sacerdotalism, and on the other of unbelief and indifference to vital religion. The substitutionary sacrifice of our blessed Lord and Saviour is lightly esteemed, and even repudiated, by some prominent teachers; the future destiny of the sinner has become in consequence a vain speculation in the thoughts of many. The plenary inspiration of the Holy Scriptures, the personality of the Holy Ghost, and his presence and power in the Church of God, with other verities of the faith of Christ, are qualified or explained away in many instances. The result of this erroneous teaching and perversion of the Gospel are painfully apparent; worldliness, sensuality, and luxury, with the desecration of the Lord's Day, abound, and Christian liberty has become licence in the walk and conversation of many professed disciples of Christ.

The Council are preparing to arrange for a series of meetings in the metropolis, believing that, with God's blessing, the testimony, by faithful men of God, possessing the confidence of the Christian public, to the fundamental truths of the Gospel, would confirm the faith and encourage the hearts of many true disciples of Christ, and might lead to a revival of true religion; such testimony should also be most useful in counteracting the erroneous teaching which so widely prevails. A meeting for the purpose of private conference on the subject will be held in September, but in the meantime the Council are endeavouring to ascertain the views of brethren who are interested in the matter.

REVIVAL IN SOUTH DEVON.

A correspondent sends an account of a good work in progress at Loddiswell, near Kingsbridge, South Devon. Mr. J. C. Rainey was invited by some of the Christians in the place, and it was found that prayer had been made by some for five years that he might take the Gospel tent here.

The tent was pitched, and the services were commenced on Sunday, July 10. Both the vicar and the minister of the Peck Trust Chapel welcomed the evangelist, and the people gave him a hearty reception, which they followed up by a constant and interested attendance at the services. The large number of working men who came surprised the local Christians, who declared they could never be got into church or chapel. How they drank in the message! One can never lose the sight of the eager, almost pained manner in which they sat night after night listening, fearful of losing the meaning of a single word. Prayer-meetings were held each night after a short address, and scarce anyone left but the children, who were sent home in good time.

For the first week there was no individual dealing, but God was doing his own work in many hearts, undermining their prejudices, and bringing true conviction of sin. Last week witnessed a widespread revival in the district, and the glad faces of the many who are now rejoicing in the Saviour are beautiful to look upon. Several were found, as one in the place expressed it, "half-saved," that is, they were unable to rejoice in God as their salvation. The joy of such is intense—from doubting to shouting, as our Cornish neighbours would say. The transition from fear to liberty is a great one.

SCIENCE AND RELIGION.

Professor Stokes, President of the Royal Society, presided last week at the annual meeting of the Victoria (Philosophical) Institute, of which he is also president. A large company of members and their friends were present. The report was read by the honorary secretary, Captain Francis Petrie, and showed that the Society's English, Colonial, and American members was now augmented to twelve hundred, and that the Institute was aided by a continually increasing number of leading students of all branches of science in its work of bringing about a truer appreciation of the results of scientific inquiry, especially when scientific discovery is improperly alleged to be subversive of religious belief.

The President delivered an address, in which he referred to the progress of scientific knowledge. The Victoria Institute, he said, fully recognised that between Science, rightly understood, and Revelation, rightly understood, there was no opposition; if an apparent discrepancy should arise, we had no right, on principle, to exclude either in favour of the other; for however firmly convinced we might be of the truth of Revelation, we must admit our liability to err as to the extent or interpretation of what is revealed; and however strong the scientific evidence in favour of a theory might be, we must admit that we are dealing with evidence which in its nature is probable only, and it is conceivable that wider scientific knowledge might lead us to alter our opinion. One thing more the Institute recognised and laid stress upon, and that was that to arrive at the truth in regard to all knowledge, its students must work in harmony, and to work in harmony there must be mutual respect and kindly feeling, unalloyed by aught that might cause pain.

REV. K. S. MACDONALD, at a recent Missionary Conference in India, presented the testimonies of about a dozen persons who represented the broadest scholarship and profoundest study of Hindu social life. These experts represented all shades of religious belief and

FOUR MONTHS IN TEXAS.

Having been asked by many friends to write a little account of the work in which I was engaged last winter, I venture to seek the medium of your paper. I crossed the Atlantic last November in company with my friends, Mr. and Mrs. Ira D. Sankey. After remaining some little time with them in Brooklyn, I left to spend the winter with my brother in a city of Southern Texas.

I was soon called upon by the Rector, who requested that I would undertake a class in his Sunday-school. He seemed disappointed that I was of the "evangelical," and not of the "ritualistic" school of thought, and appeared to be somewhat surprised when I said I should make the Bible the text-book for every lesson. I afterwards found that few of the scholars even possessed a Bible in their homes, with the exception of an occasional "family" Bible, kept mostly as a register.

I was given a class of one girl, in whom the Rector expressed an especial interest. I soon found she belonged to the educated class, and after having spoken to her unflinchingly of the truth, and unhesitatingly concerning ritualism, I discovered she was his daughter. As her interest increased, she invited one and another of her friends; and I can never forget the earnest faces and the eager way in which those girls drank in the Word of God. They said, "It is so new to be taught like this, but we see salvation so clearly now, and the Bible is very interesting."

An interest was aroused among the married ladies; they invited me to hold a weekly Bible-reading, and we met in one of the Church school-rooms. There seemed such a hungering after the Word of God, and many of us proved it true that "He filleth the hungry soul with goodness." The Rector's sister experienced much blessing, and lent all the aid possible. We began a house-to-house visitation in a low part of the city, where I also addressed the children in a mission school on Sunday afternoon. Among individual cases, God gave me much blessing. One gentleman, avowedly a Jesuit, and himself conducting a mission, became interested, and commenced to study the Bible, the result being much spiritual enlightenment, and an earnest desire to impart the new-found truth. Now eight young men meet together weekly for the study of God's Word, and I have received a letter from the secretary of the Y.M.C.A., testifying as to the genuineness of the cases which have subsequently come under his notice.

Invitations came to give Bible-readings in a neighbouring city (some 180 miles away), where the Dean asked me to conduct a ladies' meeting in his drawing-room. I also addressed one of the Sunday-schools. Rich blessing followed these efforts, the Dean with a full heart testifying as to the manifest presence of the Holy Spirit and the personal blessing he had received.

Returning to Brooklyn, I again visited Mr. and Mrs. Sankey, and also went to Northfield, Mass., where I held a Bible-reading in the Congregational church, at Mr. Moody's especial request. He had been much interested in hearing of God's work in Texas, and, as he encouraged me to overcome my natural dread of publicity, he said that mine was "pioneer work, and a clear case of God choosing his worker." He urged me strongly to return in the autumn. I have already received invitations from eight American cities. Although I do not need financial assistance, I do need your prayers. Laura M. Heyworth.

BOLIVIA, S. AMERICA.—This country is almost entirely under Roman Catholic dominion. At the present time three convents alone possess more than one hundred houses, free from all taxation. The monks live in abundance, while the people are dying from hunger. The clergy charge enormously for every religious rite. In proportion as the land and wealth pass into the hands of the clergy in that proportion the intellectual, moral and religious life of Bolivia decreases.

MR. MOODY'S SUMMER SCHOOL.

Our last week's notice embraced the leading features of the two opening days. The third day, Saturday, was a kind of off-day, but there were many points of interest in the varied proceedings. Two early meetings in The Glen enabled Rev. H. Clay Trumbull, of The Sunday School Times, to answer many questions on Bible study. In the forenoon Dr. Broadus discoursed on the life of Christ as portrayed in the four Gospels. It is necessary, he said, to study the distinctive representation of each evangel in order to get a rounded view of the Christ. Discrepancies in the Gospels were formerly the stock-in-trade of German sceptics, but now it is recognised that small discrepancies are a proof of genuine evidence. The close attention given to Dr. Broadus's outline study showed the perennial and undying attractions of the one perfect Life ever lived on this earth. Among the various Lives of Christ that have been written, he commended Hanna's as the most instructive, and Edersheim's as the most reliable, while he had a good word also to say for Geikie's, Farrar's, and Stalker's.

The afternoon was largely given up to recreation, but in the evening a number of five minutes' speeches were made at a meeting in Stone Hall. Mr. L. D. Wishard, the prime mover in these Summer Schools, packed into his five minutes many gratifying facts with respect to the spread of Y.M.C.A. work in distant lands. He told of the formation of the first two branch Associations in China—at Tung Chow and Hang Chow. Good news had also come to hand of progress in Turkey and Japan. The openings in the latter country, said Mr. Wishard, are wonderful. The colleges are calling for twenty young men in Tokio alone to teach English in the schools. Further details were given by Mr. C. K. Ober. Mr. Oatts, of Glasgow, and Mr. Hodder, of London, briefly reported on Y.M.C.A. work in these cities. Professor Drummond said a number of good things about seeking "to do the will of God" as the one great object in life. Building on this we shall be on a sure foundation. For soul food we can then say with Christ, "My meat is to do the will of Him that sent Me." For education we can pray, "Teach me to do thy will, O God." Do we need society? "Whosoever doeth the will of my Father, the same is my brother and sister and mother." Here is the source of happiness: "I delight to do thy will, O God." We have this assurance: "He that doeth the will of God abideth for ever."

FOURTH DAY—SUNDAY, JULY 3.

An early meeting was held in The Glen, when "Bible nuggets" were read out by Mr. Moody and others from their Bibles. Some serious talk followed about the responsibilities of sending out the many young men and women who have since last year offered themselves for service in the foreign missionary field. Mr. Wishard believed that God, who owns the riches of the world, would provide the means, if the Church provided the men.

There was a large attendance at the forenoon assembly, and Mr. Sankey sang a new hymn by Dr. H. Bonar, "But that is all." Dr. Broadus was the preacher, and his subject was the full consecration to God of the mental and spiritual powers. It was a strong and rousing utterance on the need of bringing all the powers of body, soul, and spirit into subjection, so that we may give ourselves, a living and acceptable sacrifice, to God. The sermon fired up Mr. Moody so much that he had to unburden his soul in some burning words of exhortation to concentration of aim and of effort. We want nowadays those who will boldly say, and tirelessly live out, Paul's "One thing I do." Where, he asked, are the Vanderbilts and the Cyrus Fields of Babylon? Gone from human ken; but that Hebrew youth who dared to be true to his God has stood out on the page of history these thousands of years, and

To a great throng gathered in a field by the riverside Mr. Moody spoke in the afternoon on the requisites for successful Christian work. Many of our readers will recollect the discourse and the requisites—faith, courage, enthusiasm, perseverance, love, and sympathy; each nail driven home by some supremely pathetic incident.

The chief speaker of Sunday evening was Professor Drummond, who addressed his fellow students on Christlikeness. He warned them against false methods of attaining this; such, for instance, as agonising struggle, or artificial endeavours to copy the life of Christ bit by bit. The secret of success he declared to be making Christ one's constant companion. "We all, with unveiled face, reflecting as in a mirror the glory of the Lord, are changed into the same image from glory to glory as by the Spirit of the Lord." "We are changed"; the trouble is that we try to change ourselves. "From glory to glory," the Professor declared, should be properly translated, "from character to character," the idea being that of a gradual upward transformation of character. Five minutes spent in the companionship of Christ every morning, if it is face to face and heart to heart, will glorify the whole day, and enable us to do things for his sake that we could not do for our own sake or the sake of any other. This companionship with Christ is the true secret of power over sin, of the growth of peace in the soul, and all the graces of the Spirit. Get immovably centred in this truth, and all the wealth of this world will be as nothing to the attainment of a life that mirrors Christ.

July 4, as every well-informed person knows, is "Independence Day" with our American cousins. Certain ardent youthful patriots, students at the Mount Hermon School, created a little diversion very early in the morning, but their effervescence speedily expended itself, and long before breakfast the hatchet was buried as effectually as if George Washington had never been born. Several meetings during the day were devoted to the discussion of Y.M.C.A. work, one of the most acceptable speakers being Mr. Oatts, secretary of the Glasgow Association. Prof. Drummond gave a talk at the morning session on the Canonical structure and history of the Bible. Dr. Broadus followed with an address on the Conversion of Paul. Referring to the early Christians, he maintained that though they were most liberal in their dealings with one another, they could not be called communists; this position he maintained against all comers. In the evening Dr. Chamberlain, of India, gave a foretaste of the good things that he imparted on a succeeding day, by pointing out the wonderful missionary openings in that land. Then came an eloquent setting forth of the inspiration of the Scriptures from the Boanerges evangelist, Dr. L. W. Munhall. In closing he said:—"If you would destroy the Bible, you will have to destroy all the copies of it; all the masterpieces in literature, painting, and music, for they derive their themes from the Bible; every church and almost every college and charitable institution; every Christian and every infidel, for the latter know something about the Bible. Then you will have left only a ruin, with a few Africans and Laplanders to inhabit it. I love thee (holding the book in his hand) because thou dost tell me of the inheritance beyond, so that here and now we get cheer and confidence and gladness. I commend this book to you, young men, with all the sublime possibilities of life, as God's gift to you. Have unquestioning faith in it; every morning, with confidence and faith unquestioning, publish it abroad through all the earth, and we shall at last be gathered to the home on high."

The main centre of attraction on Tuesday, July 5, was a new arrival, Dr. L. T. Townsend, a Professor from Boston, a man of strong views and very rapid of speech. He introduced himself to "the boys" by a strenuous and uncompromising defence of the story of Jonah and the great fish, contending that if we accept the miraculous at all, there need be no difficulty. The denial of the narrative, moreover, involves the veracity of Christ, as He cited the record as though it were an undoubted fact. "In a word," natural from the Old Testament, you have nothing left but odds and ends and shreds." Dr. Broadus gave a farewell talk on the Epistle to the Hebrews, and received very cordial thanks before he left for his Southern home.

At the evening session, Mr. Secretary Oatts, of Glasgow, gave a much appreciated Bible-reading on Nehemiah as a model Christian worker. Dr. Pierson, of Philadelphia, followed with one of his characteristic synoptical addresses on the Books of the New Testament, rapidly sketching the leading motif of each. To this he added a somewhat intricate, though in its way interesting exposition of the significance of the symbolic numbers in the Scriptures.

On Wednesday, Dr. Townsend gave another vigorous address, this time on "Troublesome Doctrines," as illustrated by the Atonement. He showed how the idea of vicarious suffering not only ran through the entire ritual of the Jewish dispensation, but is enfolded in the very constitution of the material universe. Then he asserted that faith in the vicarious atonement of Christ is the only thing that can and does satisfy human hearts burdened with a sense of sin. The students seemed to appreciate and to grasp the Professor's close-fitting argument.

An interesting sketch was given by Prof. Drummond of the origin and progress of the remarkable work of revival among students at the Edinburgh University. He traced the movement, from the visit of Messrs. Stanley Smith, and Studd, through its development to the present time, when holiday missions by the students are in full operation in different parts of the kingdom. A work stimulated by this has been that among the hospitals and infirmaries of Edinburgh. Another experiment has been tried by half a dozen, who have gone to live among the city poor, to spread the influence of the Gospel, and who have had remarkable results during the eight months since their undertaking was started. When asked as to the permanency of the conversions, Professor Drummond replied, emphatically: "Scarcely a man has gone back; the work has been the most thorough-going of any I have seen. The tone of the university is changed."

MR. JOSEPH COOK'S DEBUT.

While the meeting was in progress, Mr. Joseph Cook arrived, and that eminent champion of the orthodox belief was greeted with great eclat. Being called on to speak at the close of Professor Drummond's narrative, Mr. Cook said:—"God is great, and the consecrated thoroughly Christian young men of Europe and America are to-day especially his abode. These young men will be the rudder of the twentieth century. I venture to salute the college students here, and through Professor Drummond, those in Europe, as the Pilgrim Fathers of a new age. A very large nation rejoiced on the other side of the Atlantic on the Queen's Jubilee. You have sixty millions in this Continent, and not forty millions in the British Islands. Most of the young men before me will live to see a hundred millions between the Atlantic and Pacific, the lakes and the Gulf. But the English-speaking world is a unit; if, under the forms of representative government, which now control us all, we make Christianity the rudder of this English-speaking community, they will become the rudder of the world at large. You have nineteen million church members here. The illiteracy in the land is immense, the audacity of our unscrupulous classes in the great cities is becoming astonishing. I think we are on the eve of, perhaps, military conflict with the saloons; martyrdoms have already occurred, much like those which preceded the civil war. There is more money behind the whiskey shops to-day than there was behind slavery. I fear that the fact that the liquor traffic makes about 130 per cent. on its sales will induce the whiskey syndicate in this country to fight for what it calls its rights. I am not sure that in the conflict with the saloon in this country we may not see the land again covered with blood in riot, but I hope not in civil war. Then the labour question is rising with great prominence; we have sadly mismanaged affairs in the great towns. There

AMERICAN NOTES.

AT Aldersgate-street Noon Prayer-meeting on Thursday week, Mr. M. H. HODDER, who has recently returned from America, gave a brief account of what he had seen during his absence. In acknowledging journeying mercies, he said the greatness of these was brought forcibly to his mind when, on landing in New York, he heard of the terrible collision between two White Star steamers, which happened during a fog some distance from the city. He remembered too in the same fog hearing the return signal of another steamer close to that in which he was. Arriving on Saturday afternoon, he was very thankful to land and spend the Sunday on shore. Going to hear Dr. William Taylor he was very glad to partake of the communion with some 800 or 900 of his congregation. Unfortunately, as in so many places in America, there the singing is done for you. About £1000 a year is paid for professional music. In the afternoon there is a voluntary service of song, which is a different sort of thing altogether. In the evening at the Y.M.C.A. meeting, conducted by Mr. McBurney, he had a very happy time. Soon after he passed a Sunday at Brooklyn. Inquiring for Dr. Cuyler's, he suddenly found that the house at which he called was that in which Mr. Sankey lives. Dr. Cuyler took him to his Sunday-school in the afternoon, and he was glad to renew his connection with Sunday-school work by taking a class of young men. The school is held in a beautiful room, with a gallery around for friends.

In the evening he found Mr. Sankey in full form at the Y.M.C.A., and the Lord was present with them. This work is going on well in New York, throughout America, and in Canada. At Brooklyn they have a Gospel carriage for the workers, so that they may reach a good many places in the same day. In New York the Y.M.C.A. movement has so grown that recently they have been obliged to change their tactics. The head institution there will henceforward be only a branch, and in connection with the other branches will be worked from one centre, having one purse. In Toronto and Montreal, which were also visited, he found the work progressing. After leaving Montreal he made his way to Mr. Moody's home at Northfield, which is a most beautiful spot. There was a great deal going on to interest and make happy, and there was also the pleasure of seeing many familiar faces. Mr. Hodder gave some particulars as to the Conference of students, referred to in our last and present issues.

Mr. KENT, ex-president of the Sydney Y.M.C.A., followed with a few remarks on Y.M.C.A. work in Australia. This work amongst young men, he said, is God's work, and it is extending in every direction. To a very great extent they followed, almost too closely he thought, in English grooves. Whatever is done in London is done also at the Antipodes. Rejoicing himself at meeting so many of whom he had only heard before, he assured evangelists and others of a warm welcome whenever they went to the other side.

MR. JOHN WOOLRIDGE has again pitched his moving tent at Willesden, N.W. Much spiritual blessing is expected, as in former years.

UNDENOMINATIONAL CHRISTIAN MISSION. The ninth anniversary of this Mission was held recently at Pontymoil. Mr. T. M. Wintle, the superintendent of the Mission, reported that, in addition to the Sunday-schools at Pontymoil, Pontnewydd, the Cwmffrwdoer, a large warehouse has now been secured at Pontypool, where a Ragged-school and evangelistic services will be held. A noble work is being carried on amongst little girls and factory girls, who are taught to cut out and make their own garments. Young believers' meetings are regularly held, as well as frequent cottage services. A Bible-woman and colporteur are constantly engaged in visitation, and in the distribution of sound literature, and during the winter 20,000 free meals were given to children and parents.

TOLD IN CANADA.

HOW did I come out here, sir—come from over the seas?
I'd like to tell yer my story; it's a tale as is bound to please.
You wouldn't think that me, sir, wi' my cheeks now plump and red,
Was once but a bag o' bones like, an' a face as white as the dead!
But that's how this picter shows me. Look at me! There I stand—
That thin little chap in the corner, a holdin' his cap in his hand!
Where was my father and mother, as had let me grow up so?
They was both in Clawkinwell, sir—a prison that is, yer know.
Mother was there for a-thievin', father for knockin' down
A man as had call'd him names, sir, in at the "Rose and Crown";
An' I was ragged and homeless, cold an' as stiff as starch,
When I crept that night to sleep, sir—under a railway arch.
I was all right whiles I slept on, and dream'd of a better land,
Where the boys and gals is happy, and where round the Lord they stand,
But when I woke all shiverin', I wished as I wor dead!
It wor then as a gent com'd up, sir, and patted me on the head.
His was the first kind words, sir, I'd heerd for many a day;
It was good o' the Lord to send him—to put me in his way.
He laid his soft hand in mine there, and said I no more need roam,
But as he would take and gi' me food and clothes and a home.
"Sure?" sed I to the gent, sir, as into his face I look'd,
"Sure as for grub and a home, sir, at last I'm to be book'd?"
It seem'd so strange—his promise—as strange as if he'd ha' told
As I, wot 'adn't a copper, was the heir to a heap o' gold!
But he kep' his word, and took me to a place as I'll allers prize,
I thinks on it night and day, sir, wi' the tears o' joy in my eyes;
It aint not fur from the river—it's a'most close to the docks,
Where the hungry swarm, and the poor, sir, like maggits in bad meat flocks.
It's the Home wot Dr. Barnardo keeps open night and day,
The Home where the starvin' children are never a turn'd away.
Hundreds and thousands know it, and speak on it allers wi' pride,
'Cos they knows but for that 'ere place, sir, in the streets they might ha' died.
Arter I'd bin there a time, sir, the Doctor comes to me,
And sez, "Would you like, my laddie, a better place to see?"
"I begs yer parding, Doctor, but where can sich a place be?"
And the Doctor said with a smile, sir, "My boy, it's over the sea."
Well, to finish my story quickly, I and a lot o' lads more,
On a bright September mornin' sailed for the Canada shore.
And here I am alive, sir—alive and a doin' well;
And wherever I goes, this story I'll never forget to tell.
I wish now you'd pray with me, sir, before you say good-bye;
I allers prays for the Doctor, and means to till I die;
And I blesses the Lord wot told him in the courts and lanes to go,
And rescue the outcast children from want and sin and woe.
It's jist sich a work as Jesus likes on the earth to see;
Look at His words on the walls, sir—"Let the little ones come unto Me."

CHARLES W. BARKER.

FRUIT "OUT OF SEASON."

HAYMAKING had begun, one of the busiest seasons in the year for agricultural labourers, and yet, as they had been unable to come at any other time, our brother Cornelius Smith (converted Gipsy), and his wife commenced to hold a week's special services in a little town in the county of Suffolk. A general awakening could scarcely be expected when the bulk of the population were unable to attend, but this "out of season" work has left some fruit.

The first sign of blessing was that three young ladies, placed at a boarding school in the neighbourhood, found the Lord Jesus the first night they attended the meetings. An ex-publican, whose licence had been taken away for misconduct, drove six miles to the meeting, and went away happy in Christ; he had to go before the magistrate the following Monday, when he pleaded guilty, and told the judge he hoped to lead an altered life in future. A poor woman who had been attending the services for months, but undecided, and whose home was such as to make a Christian life very difficult, yielded herself to the Saviour; her once troubled face, became radiant with the peace of God. Yet another weary heavy laden one, whose life had been embittered with earthly sorrow, wrestled in the silence of the night for pardon, and came with that nameless light upon the careworn face, which tells its own tale of deliverance and rest.

One who in years gone by had been a professed infidel, but with whom for months past the Spirit of God had been striving, and whose life had been outwardly reformed, was brought in the meetings to such a point as to ask for private conversation. He was under deep conviction of sin, but lost his burden, and now dares to stand up and testify in the village where for years he has been a noted character, to the saving change he has experienced, adding that if "forty thousand men had told him, a man could be so changed as he now finds himself to be, he could not have believed it."

The last Sunday evening was a time of great gladness; five grown-up sons and daughters who had been converted within the last eighteen months, were rejoicing over their dear aged mother who was found, after a lifetime of respectable church-going, to be weeping at Jesus' feet, a poor sinner seeking Christ, while two husbands, both young converts themselves, were made unutterably glad by the conversion of their wives.

CAMPBELTOWN.—The mission conducted by Mr. George Clarke in this town terminated on the 17th inst., and was a most successful one. It was warmly supported by members of every Presbyterian denomination, and Mr. Clarke addressed large congregations in their various churches. The Christian Institute, where addresses were given during the week, was filled each evening, and those on which the addresses to young men and young women respectively were delivered, were especially times of searching and blessing.

CONNAUGHT.—Rev. J. S. McDade, Methodist General Missionary, and his assistant evangelists, have for fifteen days been holding tent meetings in Manorhamilton, co. Leitrim, without molestation. Not even in Ulster have they enjoyed more abundant hospitality and hearty co-operation. The entire mission was hopeful and blessed, but Friday, July 15, was the red-letter day. From morn till eve it was an holy convocation. If such days were more frequent in every part of the province, better days would dawn on this unhappy country.

Notes and Comments.

NEXT week we hope to give portrait and sketch of Mrs. Moody, Sen., mother of Mr. D. L. Moody.

A mistake was unwittingly made in the award of our prize competition last week. The winner of the first prize is not Rev. F. H. Vivian, of Stoughton Rectory, Emsworth, but his son, Mr. H. Vivian, who has recently left Cambridge University.

We much regret that Rev. H. W. Webb-Peploe, who started on Monday week to be present, by Mr. Moody's special invitation, at the Northfield Convention, was recalled from Liverpool to London by the sudden and alarming illness of his youngest son. He has since showed decided improvement, and hopes are now entertained of his recovery.

A pastor of a densely peopled London district writes:—Many ladies have large leisure, and scarcely know how to while away the time. Some pastors could secure them noble opportunities of usefulness among their people; but I find, while professing readiness to work for Christ, they are not ready to co-operate with "obscure" ministers; they are only willing for service with workers of great name. The same indeed may be said of others than ladies.

A learned commentator said, many years ago, "The time is coming when illiterate piety will do as little for the promotion of the work of God, as lettered irreligion did long ago." Our Wesleyan friends seem to feel this. The committee who examine candidates for the Wesleyan ministry in England lately met; out of fifty-two candidates they only recommended twenty-two to the Conference! Grace let us have, by all means, but we want gifts too. Pastors must be "apt to teach," as well as "gentle towards all men."

The lovely summer weather brings but little enjoyment into the lives of many young people engaged in business. There are still shops where they are refused even the one early closing day in the week. A correspondent informs us of a country town where the proprietor of the largest shop in the place, himself a wealthy man, refuses the few hours of extra rest, or recreation, to the young people of both sexes engaged in his business. While nearly all the smaller places of business close at five o'clock every Wednesday, he persists in exacting the full amount of work from his employés. This, too, from a professing Christian man.

To those pastors and mission workers who are blessed with crowded congregations in their evening services during this oppressive weather, we would commend the example of a Baptist minister in the suburbs. This enterprising preacher has had a neighbouring plot of land fitted with seats, and into the improvised auditorium he turns his flock on sultry Sabbath evenings. A light canvas hoarding surrounds the enclosure to protect the audience from idlers, and a rustic pulpit is placed at the further end. The congregation have taken very kindly to this new departure, and increased blessing has resulted. Many outsiders have also been attracted, who, under ordinary circumstances, would probably not have heard the Gospel message.

The Under Secretary of State for India said, in the House of Commons last week, in reply to Professor Stuart, that the Government of India had been addressed on the subject of the repeal of the C.D. Acts in that country. This is a hopeful fact, though we must not be prematurely sanguine, with our past experience of official lethargy. We have reason to believe that some at least of the members of the British Cabinet favour the repeal of these degrading enactments. But the inertia of interested placemen is hard to overcome, and the outside pressure will have to be constant and cumulative before the goal is reached.

There is one feature of recent growth in the religious life of Scotland which deserves some notice. We allude to the county unions for evangelistic and other religious work. The Ayrshire Christian Union has the longest record, and is in some measure the foster parent of most of the others. Only a few of the Scottish counties have yet formed such unions, but several others may be expected to follow suit when their scattered elements have been drawn together in Christian sympathy, and a suitable leader or organising secretary is found. Lanarkshire and Perthshire have both active unions, doing a large amount of evangelistic work. Clackmanan and Kinross-shire Union is very hearty and earnest, but its sphere of work is not so extensive. Wigtonshire, Renfrewshire, and Dumbartonshire have also organisations of this kind doing more or less active service in the way of spreading the Gospel.

The great "through Siberian" railway is to be commenced at last, and in five years, if all goes well, a traveller will be able to go from St. Petersburg to Vladivostock, the naval port on the Pacific, in fifteen days. The Times recently had a very interesting and instructive article on this subject, in which it says that Siberia, so far from being an inhospitable wilderness of frost and snow, is a > Huge territory abounding in every kind of potential riches. It was unknown, and practically a wilderness, because it was devoid of roads. Inquiry has demonstrated that it is a region of extraordinary fertility for a great part of its surface, and full of mineral wealth everywhere. Its climate, which was fabled to be horrible and deadly, has been proved by experience to be generally endurable, and at some points delightful.

The line is to be commenced next spring. This is another call to missionary enterprise—to some Hudson Taylor, who, trusting in Christ, and in the power of faith, will arise and take possession of this great region for our Divine Master.

How delightful it would be if Christians generally would obey the Apostle's injunction in Phil. ii. 4, with regard to the summer holidays. Much has already been done for the children of the very poor, in sending them to seaside homes, &c., but the ones and twos are apt to be overlooked in the anxiety to care for "the masses," and to benefit certain "classes" of society. Well-to-do families, purposing to spend a month or more away from the usual scene of their activities, might invite some lonely worker—a weary shop-girl, or toiling mother, or city missionary, or weakly governess—for part of the time, at least, without much inconvenience, possibly without any. Even if some sacrifice were involved, would it not be one which Christ could smile upon, and would not the joy of "doing good" more than compensate for it?

The report that reached this country last week of the death of Mr. H. M. Stanley has not been confirmed, and we trust it may prove to be altogether unfounded. Notwithstanding some errors of judgment, the cause of Christianity in the Dark Continent owes much to the labours of this intrepid explorer; and his present mission of relief is one for which all the friends of humanity must desire a successful issue.

Next week we hope to give the completion of our report of Mr. Moody's Summer School. Meantime, we may remark (especially in view of our portrait in this issue, of an Indian missionary), that the outstanding feature of the Conference seems to have been a suggested new departure towards the evangelisation of that vast country. One of the speakers at the Conference was Dr. Chamberlain, a well-known Indian missionary. At the close of a rousing speech of an hour's duration, he said, turning to the evangelist:—

> Dwight L. Moody, do you not hear Jehovah's clarion call to you to make one year's stay in India, and to teach Him to them? God rarely bestows such gifts for the work as He has upon you. In the name of the 3,000,000 young men of India who know English but who do not know God; in the name of the 250,000,000 of people who could be reached if these 3,000,000 young men were set on fire with love to God; in the name of those here in this waking vision, I call upon you to come over to India and help us.

The following day an address on Missions was given by Dr. Pierson, of Philadelphia. To him succeeded Mr. Joseph Cook, of Boston, who answered various questions, saying, among other things, that for certain classes of Indian scholars he would send out a missionary such as Professor Drummond, but for the great body of the people he would like to send such a missionary as Mr. Moody. The statement was received with tremendous cheering, and the excitement culminated with a dramatic and thrilling incident thus recorded:—

> Dr. Chamberlain, of India, rose and said that he had seen Mr. Cook, when abroad, knock the bottom out of the religion of the heathen, and that other missionaries had spoken to him, saying, "Could we only get Mr. Moody to come and put a new bottom"—the rest of the sentence was drowned in a loud cheer that went up from the audience as they rose to give expression to their feeling. At this moment Mr. Cook, drawing Mr. Moody to the centre of the platform, placed Professor Townsend, of Boston [a doughty defender of the faith], on one side and Dr. Chamberlain on the other, and cried out:—"This is an object lesson; the three are a team for India!" The effect was electric. The boys continued standing, and cheered till they were hoarse.

In one of the latest papers to hand, we see it stated that Mr. Moody is understood to be considering the matter, and "it looks as if he will go."

Many will have heard with regret of the postponement of the proposed Conference between representatives of the Congregational and Baptist denominations, with a view to the prevention of denominational overlapping in the villages. It is sincerely to be hoped that the proposal will not finally fall through, but that men of influence belonging to both sections of the Church will meet and discuss the subject in a calm and Christlike spirit. Christ's words are still true, "The harvest truly is great, but the labourers are few." While this is so, it is folly indeed for two labourers, both desirous of gathering the grain into the garner of the Lord, to waste their energies in struggling with one another for the occupation of the same spot in the harvest field. We know of one village containing only a few hundreds of people, where, beside the Established Church, there are three Nonconformist places of worship, each attended by a mere handful.

Surely this denominational overlapping can at least be prevented in the foreign mission field. We have been told by a China missionary that, desiring to leave the place where he was stationed, on account of the number of societies represented there, he consulted the senior missionary of another society, as to what place he could most advantageously occupy as a new centre of work. But he was unable to exact any promise from him that, whatever place might be selected, should be left, so far as he was concerned, to his sole occupation. The consequence is that the new centre of work chosen has already missionaries of two societies in it, while other places of equal importance have none at all; and yet both the societies referred to represent evangelical Christians.

Whilst the question of the London streets is still before the public, and the police system is under the critical gaze of a roused people, it may legitimately be asked whether the ordinary members of the police force are paid wages enough to support their families, when married, and so to be able to resist sacrificing the honour of their profession by taking monetary bribes as hush money. Would not better salaries secure a better class of constables for the most responsible of all outdoor official duties?

It will be found that many of the constables are drawn from the ranks of labourers and other workmen, and so count more for what they weigh, as examples of physical strength, than for any mental quickness of perception. Consequently the artificial moral virtues of the "force" lack that fulness of information which can do other things besides tell puzzled passengers the way to railway-stations, or "run in" a drunken costermonger. Let the police be better educated, if possible better paid, and the secret bribe of vice will less readily offer dishonourable coin to the tempted servants of justice.

"Ony Goose can Quack," is the title of a good story in Regions Beyond for July. The remark was made respecting a certain preacher and his discourse. It was a fine discourse, but one of little practical value. Is not one great want of the times more teaching? Would it not be vastly better if we had more exposition and less declamation? If this were attended to, surely God would honour his word, and more adequate result would be seen.

Truth out of proportion is error. In preaching and in practising we have need to observe well the balance of truth. A careful unprejudiced study of the Word of God will effect this. They which have believed in God should be careful to maintain good works. It is constantly happening that exclusive attention is being paid either to faith, or works; with the result in one case of a mere superficial and emotional religion, and in the other of Pharisaism and legality. A due attention to Scripture proportion would cure this mistake and many others.

A correspondent draws attention to the fact that open-air preachers too often seem to think little or no preparation is needed for such work. Judging from the feeble addresses we have frequently heard at open-air gatherings, we are disposed to believe that there is a substratum of truth in the accusation. There could be no greater mistake. Above every other kind of audience, an open-air crowd, composed of all sorts and conditions of people, requires to have the Gospel message presented in a workmanlike and striking fashion. No one can do that without due preparation, unless he is a genius or a man of long experience.

"Preaching in his view is proclaiming. It is not arguing or speculating: it is the delivery of a message." We fear that many of our younger ministers think this will not do. Yet Dr. Maclaren, of whom this is said in the July Expositor, is no mean preacher. We doubt if any sermons are more useful to read. Yet he "proclaims," and that because he has "a message." Surely this is what all Christian teachers should strive to do. There are ministers who say that their congregations are so intellectual that they must give them discussions on all the difficulties of the day. We much doubt whether the congregations really like the process. Many men do not care to hear on the Sunday what they are hearing all the week, and are disappointed at having arguments instead of a message. We entirely agree with Dr. Maclaren when he speaks of "that 'abomination which maketh desolate' called intellectual preaching." Men are asking for bread, and such preachers offer them a stone.

A company of preachers were returning one Sunday from their various labours, when some of the party commented on the stinginess of certain farmers who allowed the tired preachers to walk miles to a railway station rather than take a horse out of the stables. One shrewd brother ironically observed that he used to think the same way, but now he rather admired the men for their wisdom, for should a preacher die they could get another for nothing, but if a horse should die it would cost many pounds to replace it. Is this the policy of some of the omnibus companies in regard to their servants? The care bestowed on their cattle is far in excess of that bestowed on their men. Is it because men can be easily replaced without loss, while horses have to be bought? It is high time that the slavery which claims a man's time fifteen or sixteen hours a day, seven days in the week, should give place to some more reasonable demand.

We commend to the attention of the heads of households unblessed with children, the following paragraph from one of Miss C. Sharman's "blue books" referred to in our last issue:—

> Adoption is not yet looked upon favourably in England. The idea is, however, dawning upon some minds that to set the solitary in families, being a Divine idea, would, if carried out, work well for both the solitary and the families. I hope and believe that a time is coming when orphanages will be needless—when there shall be a holy and loving competition for the possession of any little orphan who is left friendless; when, if elections are still in use, they will be held to decide on who shall have the privilege of receiving one such little child in Christ's name, and so receiving Him; and when the very fact of a young wanderer needing shelter shall be as a voice saying to willing ears and ready heart, "To-day I must abide at thy house."

Another paragraph from the same pen may have its message to some hearts at this season of the year:—

> It is a somewhat curious fact that summer is a very trying time as to funds. It is only too clear that it is so in all branches of Christian work, but the reason is not easy to find. Can anyone explain how it is that during the months when the bounties of Providence are being showered down in rich abundance, when the glorious shining of the sun is decking the earth with flowers, ripening the fruits, and covering the land with golden harvests, filling the hearts of the people with food and gladness, the means for carrying on orphanages, missions, and other benevolent enterprises go steadily down?

We hail the movement which has been started by some members of the House of Commons in favour of national arbitration. If the old countries of Europe are inaccessible to such appeals, it is well to turn to our fellow Christians of the New World. The memorial signed by more than a hundred members of Parliament, and which advocates a union of the United States and our own in affirming that disputes, not settled otherwise, shall be referred to arbitration, is, it is reported, to be presented to the American Congress by a deputation from the Society of Friends. Their Christianity has ever been of this practical nature.

In connection with this subject, we have read with regret the discouraging words of the Prime Minister in the House of Lords on Monday evening. But we trust the friends of the movement will not abate one jot of heart or hope by reason of the difficulties in the way.

Thank God for the change that is reported of the East-end of London in its observance of Fairlop Friday. It is but a few years since we used to hear of the disgraceful doings on the road to Epping Forest on the first Friday in July. Now Mr. Richardson, the esteemed vicar of St. Benet's, Stepney, writing to The Record, tells us that the day is almost unobserved. He attributes this change especially to temperance work. The Bands of Hope which worked in past years are now represented by tens of thousands of men and women, and these have become a real power among the masses of East London.

But Mr. Richardson takes occasion to speak of another change. This is the growth of public opinion on the Sunday question. Throughout the borough of the Tower Hamlets there is a marked tone as to what the masses think of opening museums on Sundays, which has had its effect in political matters. For five of the present seven members of Parliament are pledged in favour of the Sunday closing of museums, and there is no reason to believe that the other two think differently. If these results can, with God's blessing, be achieved by steady work in so unpromising a place as the East of London, what may not be done elsewhere by the same means and blessing?

The Bishop of Lichfield in his annual Address to his clergy has spoken strongly against the growing custom of choral services in village churches. He intimates that they are not suitable for the labouring poor, and are not an act of intelligent worship. Complicated harmonies, without the melody that is loved, are now being introduced, and so far as the common people are concerned, they might as well be sung in Latin.

Letters to the Editor.

BAPTISM AND CONVERSION.

Dear Sir,—The important question asked by "A Constant Reader" in your issue of May 12, as to the necessity of conversion, if, as the Church of England is said to teach, "the Holy Spirit is received in infancy at Holy Baptism," has led to an animated correspondence in your columns. It is to be feared that the blowing of the trumpets has been anything but conducive to certainty in the minds of at least that portion of the laity who are disposed to stand by the teaching of the Anglican Church. Whom are they to follow? And how are they to find the clue to the maze amid such a tangle of contradictory opinion? What baptism represents, what it signifies or seals, and how far, if at all, the Liturgy agrees with the Articles, or, indeed, how far the teaching of either may be safely construed to be, are points on which clergymen have struck hopelessly dissimilar notes, so much so that it is hard to find any point of harmony, any ground which they occupy in common. Still the correspondence, even with these drawbacks, may not be without its advantages. Neither the Prayer Book nor the Articles constitute for the Christian the final court of appeal. It is the Inspired Word which is the pillar of cloud and of fire for all Zion's pilgrims, and, therefore, perplexity will not be an unmixed evil if it leads the perplexed to an earnest search for Divine guidance that, in the words of the Spirit, the Spirit's teaching may be found.

Some of the positions taken seem to me to fall to pieces from sheer lack of logical coherence. How, e.g., on the assumption that repentance and faith are conditions of baptism, is it possible to admit of infant baptism at all? It is no reply to say that though "infants, because of their tender years, cannot perform these conditions, they yet promise them both by their sureties, which promise when they come to age they themselves are bound to perform." The moral liability in this case is certainly not palpable to moral sense. And, besides, is it not of the very nature of a condition to be a prerequisite? Supposing the wearing of a certain Court dress be one of the conditions of introduction to the Queen, it would follow of necessity that the condition be complied with ere the introduction take place. The putting on of the Court dress the next day, or twenty years after, could never constitute it a condition of the introduction. Either, then, repentance and faith are not conditions of baptism, or infants are logically excluded from the ordinance. A creed that would unite the two is, ipso facto, condemned. Either infant baptism is wrong, or the conditions of its administration are unrelated to repentance and faith.

Another theory put forth, without, however, any attempt at Scriptural proof, is to the effect that infants may be converted through the Holy Ghost conferred in baptism, but the result is not to be viewed as constant; nor are we to emphasise so much the ordinance itself as the reason or means of the blessing, as the prayer of the godly persons by which the rite in such cases is preceded or accompanied. According to this theory, baptism is an ordinance which may, or may not, be signalised by the imparting of eternal life to the infant. The whole question in this case virtually turns on the character of the parent, or friend, to whom the infant is related. If he is godly, and exercises faith in the rite, then the presumption is that the infant comes to the font a child of nature, and leaves it a child of grace. On the contrary supposition the poor infant abides in unregeneracy still. In reply to this view we need but state that if this be the sense in which "the Church of England teaches that infants receive the Holy Spirit in baptism," then it is certainly unwarrantable to pronounce baptised infants regenerate on the mere ground of their baptism, and this every clergyman, on the authority of the Prayer Book, is constrained to do. The premise is particular, but the conclusion he is bound to draw is universal. The whole theory, then, falls to pieces from sheer lack of logical coherence.

I see a similar objection in the theory advanced by another correspondent, who strongly insists that "the Bible in no place gives us the slightest ground for believing in any opus operatum way of salvation. Each man must believe for himself. It is by each one's own faith that he becomes a member of Christ." I thoroughly agree with this finding, and consider the proofs adduced from Scripture decisive (see John i. 12). But then, if this be so, how, on any hypothesis, can the Prayer Book be justified in pronouncing the child to be regenerate, and in thanking God "that it hath pleased Thee to regenerate him by the Holy Spirit," &c.? Is not that a manifest case of an opus operatum way of salvation? Your correspondent says that "the whole (Baptismal) Service was drawn up for Christian parents," and that it is "a farce," "a mockery," for others to make use of it. But, on the hypothesis that what is said of opus operatum is true, the Service is as unbefitting in the case of the infants of Christian parents, as it is in the case of infants whose parents are of a totally different complexion. Here again we touch a theory that cannot bear the crux of logical inquiry.

Nor does it mend matters to point out, as is done by another clergyman, that "water and the Spirit are two separate and separable things"; that "the outward sign may be received in infancy, and the inward and spiritual grace signified by it in old age." A sign can only seal what is present to be sealed. Besides, how, on such a theory, is the use of the Church of England Liturgy to be justified? There is no recognition in it of the separableness of the two things.

On the whole, I feel very much with the "Ex-Candidate for Holy Orders" that there is no escape from the conclusion that in the Baptismal Service, baptismal regeneration is taught. A later correspondent seeks to evade this conclusion by a play upon the word "regeneration." He says that "after the child has been baptized the prayer is made that he may lead the rest of his life according to this beginning." "This very sentence," we are informed, "implies a danger of falling away, which could not take place if really regenerated according to the received meaning of the word." But to assert this is going much too far. Even a hyper-Calvinist might offer such a prayer in behalf of a regenerated person, for it amounts simply to a prayer for consistency. But, even granting that it were otherwise, that it involved a possible falling away from grace, it would only go to show that the Baptismal Service had an Arminian rather than a Calvinistic bias. It could not be quoted in proof of the notion that the regeneration in question was strictly no regeneration at all.

With respect to the vigorous letter of "W. F.," it is open to challenge on various grounds. According to this writer, "baptismal regeneration is an old and living question," and he further asserts it to be "in itself a grand thing, if true, and most desirable." But his own theory is not "baptismal regeneration," but "regeneration by means of prayer." He asks: "If they (infants) may be regenerate, may they not be baptized?" Howbeit, baptism on the ground of regeneration is not baptismal regeneration. And why, on this footing, does "W. F." maintain that "the evangelical clergyman should continue to say of the baptized infant, This child is regenerate"? It does seem extraordinary that an ordinance, which confessedly is no means to the end, should be accredited with being the sole means of it. "W. F." thinks the doctrine of baptismal regeneration super-excellent, and yet, withal, he formulates a theory in repugnance to it—a theory of regeneration anticipative of baptism, and by means of prayer. Could self-contradiction go farther?

An additional proof of infant baptism is sought in the blessing of little children. But the action of our Lord, in respect of the little children brought to Him, by no means warrants the deduction that infant baptism is legitimate. We are told in what Christ's action on the occasion consisted, and it is impertinent to add to the record. Surely our Lord Himself is the best judge of what is involved in his blessing of the little ones. It is the climax of inconsequence to point to our Lord's example in proof of infant baptism, as if the fact of its not being recorded that He baptized the children brought to Him is a certain evidence that He did do so.

The sooner the whole question of baptism is brought to the touchstone of Scripture, the better. Baptism, as I read Scripture, is not meant to seal, or to effect regeneration, but to express avowed discipleship. Thus "Jesus made and baptized more disciples than John; though Jesus Himself baptized not, but his disciples" (John iv. 1, 2). For this reason the conditions of baptism are "repentance toward God, and faith toward our Lord Jesus Christ." "Then they that gladly received the Word were baptized" (Acts ii. 41). The Apostolic commission does not concern infants, but relates to those to whom the Gospel may be preached, and to whom exhortations to believe are relevant. Hence as faith may not be demanded of infants, neither may baptism be imposed on them. As outside the scope of the commission, their salvation is not touched, either by faith on the one hand, or by baptism on the other.

In conclusion, your correspondents have adduced varied and irreconcilable arguments in defence of the position enforced by the Prayer Book. The only argument which they have in common is the supposed analogy between circumcision and infant baptism. But this argument is a fallacious one. Circumcision set forth the fact of natural lineage, that he was a Jew who was one outwardly. Hence the Jew outwardly was in the former dispensation a member of the Jewish nation. But John the Baptist would not receive candidates for baptism on the ground of such lineage. "Think not to say, We have Abraham for our father." Abraham could beget natural, but not spiritual, children. Howbeit, in this, the dispensation of spirit, the children of faith are the children of Abraham (Gal. iii. 7). If, then, we are to reason properly from analogy, we require for baptism not natural, but spiritual life. In other words, as the Jewish dispensation was essentially material and ours essentially spiritual, the counterpart of material children is spiritual children; that is to say, the baptism of Scripture is the baptism of those who are "born again," "the children of God by faith in Christ Jesus." "For all ye who were baptized into Christ have put on Christ" (Gal. iii. 26, 27).—Yours, &c., J. D.

[We think the inquiry of our first correspondent on this subject has been sufficiently discussed, and that this correspondence had better now be closed.—Ed.]

THE GOVERNMENT OF INDIA.

Dear Sir,—With all my heart I thank God that English Christians are so vigorously agitating the "Licensing of Sin in India and the Colonies." Your Extra Number, containing the speeches at Exeter Hall, on May 20, should be sent broadcast over India and China, in the interests of social purity and national honour. It seems to me that the Contagious Diseases Act must go, before this storm of righteous indignation, but Christians should continue in prayer and be of one accord.

Seventeen years' experience as a Bengal medical missionary, compels me to entreat British Christians to pray with equal earnestness for the suppression of another licensed sin, the present "outstill system" for increasing the revenue from the manufacture and sale of intoxicating drinks in India. A recent Calcutta newspaper brings most unwelcome news, concerning fresh efforts under the new Lieut.-Governor of Bengal, for raising the revenue, and all true Englishmen should keep in mind John Ruskin's noble words:—"The encouragement of drunkenness, for the sake of profit on the sale of drink, is certainly one of the most criminal methods of assassination for money ever adopted by the bravoes of any age or country."

The Queen of Madagascar once said to those who proposed she should receive a revenue from strong drink, "I cannot consent, as your Queen, to take revenue from that which destroys the souls and bodies of my subjects." Could this Jubilee year of Her Majesty's reign be more worthily honoured than by the abolition of the present "outstill system" of excise in Bengal, that is so inimical to public health and morals?—Yours for the right, Jas. L. Phillips, M.D.

ROMISH PROSYLETISM.

DEAR SIR,—Being in a country district for a few weeks, I am struck by the way in which the peasants, many of the older generation of whom cannot read, are the prey of those who would lead them back to the religion of the dark ages. "Why do the people send their children to the Roman Catholic day school?" I asked of a person a little above the ordinary labourer. "Oh, you know, they are so kind to them," was the reply. And what is the teaching of this day school? I asked a child of five, "Do they teach you about Jesus?" "Yes, and about Mary, and about the devil burning people up if they are not dood," she answered glibly.

It had been proposed that the children of the neighbourhood should learn a Psalm to repeat to one of our party on the Sabbath, when it was discovered that several of them were without Bibles, and even without a Bible in the home. In this large parish there is a good but aged minister who preaches at the parish church, which is at a long distance from many of the people. There are also a large Ritualistic church recently built, a chapel (the minister of which resides twelve miles off), and a room at a coffee-house, at which an evangelist from London, or elsewhere, preaches once a week. But these agencies are some two miles from the Roman Catholic Chapel, and do not counteract the errors, nor the effects of personal visitation from house to house by the monks and nuns. Is it not time for earnest Protestants to settle in country districts thus assailed, not merely for the purpose of enjoying country ease and pleasures, but for the higher joy of labouring for Christ in his harvest field, with the glorious result of "bringing in the sheaves" at the Harvest Home.—Yours truly,

H.

P.S.—I believe it might be easier for Nonconformists to battle with the errors of Ritualism, rather than our Church of England brethren. They are not so nearly connected with the churches propagating the error. Neither are they fettered by considerations connected with the etiquette which the clergyman of a parish observes towards one of another parish, if they are not united in practice.

MR. GALL AND MILLENARIANISM.

DEAR SIR,—Can you find space for a few thoughts in reply to your esteemed correspondent, Mr. Gall? It appears to me that he is unduly pressing the text he quotes from Ps. cx., and giving it an application it was never intended to bear.

(1) He refers the session of Christ at the Father's right hand to locality rather than to dignity. Christ must occupy a certain definite position, and not leave it, until his foes have been subdued. Now this is contrary to what we are told elsewhere: (a) In the parable where the King returns and calls for his enemies to be brought and slain before him; (b) In the Thessalonians, where the man of sin is to be destroyed by the brightness of his coming; (c) In Revelation, where all kindreds of the earth will mourn when the Saviour returns. (See also Matt. xxiv.). Surely seeing that God is a Spirit and omnipresent, Christ could never be locally at his "right hand." It can only mean to express in human phraseology the dignity of Him whom men reject.

(2) He excludes Christ from all part in the subjugation of his foes because the Father is said to do this. This, again, is contrary to what we learn elsewhere. (a) In Ps. xlv., where Christ is desired to gird on his sword for conquest, and his arrows are sharp in his enemies; (b) In the parable above referred to where the King directs his enemies to be slain; (c) Where the Lord of the unfaithful servant comes and cuts him asunder; (d) In Rev. xix., where Christ is represented as victorious over his foes. Other similar passages might be given. Christ is repeatedly said to do the things that are ascribed to his Father—his own resurrection, the gift of the Holy Spirit, the final Judgment—are alike ascribed to both. Why should it not be so in the Scripture under consideration?

(3) The verse does not mean that Christ is to sit at the Father's right hand only "till" his foes are subdued; any more than the verse which says, "He shall not fail nor be discouraged till He have set judgment in the earth," means that He shall be discouraged afterwards.

I understand the text simply to declare the Father's exaltation of the Son, with the certain assurance that his foes will be overthrown.

EMPLOYMENT FOR WOMEN.

SIR,—Whilst lamenting the frightfully low wages given to thousands of toiling women, and the hard struggles even of educated ladies in seeking to earn a livelihood, it is pleasing to learn that a fresh avenue of usefulness has been opened to such; I hope that very many will avail themselves of it. I refer to Lord Truro's Information Office, Southampton-street, Bloomsbury, W.C. There, and at the British Museum, numbers of busy workers may be seen daily plying their pens or searching out the questions sent from the office.

Those who have two or three languages at command are of course specially welcomed, for inquiries reach them on almost every conceivable subject from all the countries of Europe, and from India and China. Other women, less cultured, but equally industrious find employment with lower salaries. For fuller details respecting this novel enterprise see Our Own Gazette for July. L.

ANOTHER INEQUALITY.

SIR,—Now that attention is so often directed to wrongs and injustice done to women, will not some Christian men notice the unfairness of the divorce law as it now stands? If unfaithfulness on the part of a wife is sufficient reason why a husband should obtain a divorce, why must cruelty be proved in addition to unfaithfulness before a wife can regain her freedom?

The following case, well known to the writer, would surely appeal to any good man's sense of right and justice:—A young Christian girl was married to a man who deliberately deceived her as to his real character. Immediately after marriage the mask was thrown off, and he was found to be a drunkard and an immoral man. Yet the law says she must remain his wife, or if a legal separation be obtained, very probably she will lose the child who is as dear to her as her own life. What true mother could take her own freedom, and leave her child to be brought up by a godless, wicked man?

P.

SALVATION ARMY IN FRANCE.

WRITING with respect to the remarks of Miss S. R. Geldard, in our last issue, Mr. G. Railton, of the Salvation Army, says:—

From close personal intercourse, I do not believe that many of my comrades often know what "shortness of bread" is, though they have learnt, thank God, "how to suffer need." But the reproach that these noble souls are left to suffer because they are War Cry sellers unto the Lord every day they live is indeed absurd, seeing that just where we do the most War Cry selling on the Sunday, there the Lord gives us the most hearers and the most souls. As one of the leaders who use the railway and the telegraph to help others (and hope to use them ten times more frequently soon), nothing has pleased me more than to see the quantities of our publications sold on the Continent, on Sundays, to people utterly irreligious who come on their only day of partial leisure to our meetings, and who carry home and value the printed message of mercy which they have paid for, instead of lighting their cigars with it.

We have not one word to say against any of our brethren who so regard Sunday that they could not so use it unto the Lord. But we claim liberty to spend the day for Him in all such labours as He leads us to, and we are not at all ashamed to bear, with Him, the reproach of Sabbath-breaking, whilst He so visibly goes with us to save and bless the people.

What is far more important to the future of France and Germany, and other lands, is that the leaders of these young soldiers are unable, as quickly as they would, to send to the front the thousands who are eager to go and endure all this; but have to make shift, by dint of rail and telegraph, with hundreds of officers to fill gaps that call for thousands. We are far from losing sight of the terrible darkness and need which Miss Geldard emphasises, but instead of sitting down in despair we drum up, and march on shouting, "Blessed be the Lord," "All the ends of the earth have seen the salvation of our God"—even if somebody does think that an exaggerated report!

[We give Mr. Railton an opportunity of defending the practice of War Cry trading on the Sabbath, but we cannot help saying that the plea he urges is a very inconclusive and unsatisfactory one. Everything that the Christian does, is, or ought to be, done as "unto the Lord," and, according to Mr. Railton's logic, a Christian might justify the carrying on of his usual calling on the Sabbath day, by simply saying that he did it as "unto the Lord."—ED.]

HASTINGS.

SIR,—The statement of a correspondent of The St. James's Chronicle, which you recently quoted, with regard to the churches of Hastings and St. Leonard's, is not quite correct. St. Mary Magdalen is not ritualistic, and Christ Church, Blacklands, Hastings, is not mentioned amongst the evangelicals, which it decidedly deserves to be.—Yours respectfully, A READER.

EXAMINATIONS IN CHRISTIAN EVIDENCE.

SIR,—As there are many persons interested in our examinations whom we cannot reach except through the press, and as several changes have been made in our "scheme of study," will you allow us to name the books which have been set in the several subjects for April next:—

Elementary Grade.—Row's "Manual of Christian Evidences." General Evidences.—Redford's "Handbook of Christian Evidence," parts i. and iii., or Butler's "Analogy of Religion," or Row's "Christian Evidences Viewed in Relation to Modern Thought." Atheism and Antitheistic Theories.—Redford's "Handbook of Christian Evidence," part ii., and Kennedy on "Theism and Related Subjects." Miracles.—Moselv's "Lectures on Miracles," and Warington's "Can We Believe in Miracles?" Prophecy.—"Davison on Prophecy." Inspiration and Canonicity of the Holy Scriptures.—Westcott's "Bible in the Church," and Kennedy's "Divine Book."

Particulars respecting the formation of classes, the conduct of examinations, the prizes and certificates, may now be obtained of the undersigned. As many clergymen and principals of schools are probably considering how they can introduce these subjects to young people in the autumn, we invite immediate application for copies of the "scheme." Earnestly commending the matter to all who wish to guide the young aright with reference to religious truth, so that they may know the certainty of those things wherein they have been instructed.

Appeals.

MR. JOHN WOOLRIDGE's evangelistic tent is in need of repair and more effective lighting, to carry out which £20 are required. His address is 19, Grove-road, Mile End, E.

BOOKS FOR SAILORS.—Earnest appeal is made for books for a Sailors' Rest, just opened at Amlwch, Anglesea. Contributions will be gratefully acknowledged by RICHARD MORGAN.

RESCUE WORK IN POPLAR.—Funds are very much needed for this work in the East-end of London, for which Mrs. WILKES most earnestly asks aid. Clothing of any kind, new or old, will be thankfully acknowledged, and also any information given about the work. Manor Cottage, Kerbey-street, Poplar, E.

WELCOME MISSION, CAMBERWELL.—The work of this Mission is carried on in a hall which the workers built with their own hands. There is still a debt of £50 for materials, and help is earnestly asked for the liquidation of this. Christian workers will also be welcomed, to aid in carrying on the various agencies needed in this poor district. J. H. HACKELTON, superintendent, 62, New Church-road, Camberwell, S.E.

THE SALTLEY MISSION HALL is situated in the midst of a working-class population of 8000 souls, and used weekly for evangelistic services, prayer-meetings, Bible-classes, mothers' meetings, Band of Hope, and temperance work, &c.; £180 was advanced, at interest, to meet the last payment for building, fittings, &c., and an offer has been made of £30 towards the debt, if the remainder can be obtained within a few months. We ask the kind help of Christian friends. Rev. J. LONGLEY, Saltley Vicarage, Birmingham.

SEAMEN'S INSTITUTE, CAEN, NORMANDY.—This Institute was established fourteen years ago, through the exertions of the late Mrs. Foster Reynolds, who had the welfare of seamen much at heart, her friends gladly offering help and support towards this object. The Rooms are open every evening, and on Sundays the British Chaplain holds a service for seamen. From death and other causes subscriptions lessen, and fresh annual subscriptions or donations will be thankfully received by Miss REYNOLDS, hon. sec., care of Manager, London and South Western Bank, Oxford-street, W.

OPEN-AIR MISSION.—Sir DOUGLAS FOX, of Coombe Springs, near Kingston-on-Thames, appeals by circular on behalf of this Mission, which has over 1000 members, who preach out of doors in 800 different towns and villages, and who, during the year, have circulated more than one million of tracts and papers. Although the income for the last year amounted only to the sum of £1762, all expenses have been paid. In order to carry on this good work, and to supply deficiencies caused by the death or removal of its friends, the Society is in urgent need of immediate help. The secretary is Mr. G. KIRKHAM, 14, Duke-street, Adelphi, W.C.

PAS DE CALAIS.—God is blessing the preaching of his Word in some of the communes here. In one place sixteen Roman Catholics have recently professed conversion; many have had to suffer loss on account of the change. A hall has been opened in which a neighbouring pastor, or an evangelist, sets forth the Word of

OUR SHOW PEOPLE.

Dear Sir,—Miss Millington's letter in The Christian was most opportune, calling attention to the spiritual claims of show people. I read it, and saw I had work to do at once; for Wombwell's Menagerie had been exhibiting in our town that week, and was resting over Sunday. Late on Saturday night my husband called on Mrs. Bostock, the proprietress of this show, and asked her permission to hold a meeting on Sunday afternoon; she kindly consented, and offered the large marquee for our use. We got our choir to go and render some bright hymns, and our minister gave a simple Gospel address. Mrs. Bostock herself, and a good number of her men, were present, all very well behaved. At the close of the service they politely received the tracts and little books distributed. It was a most encouraging service, and God's hand was manifestly with us.

As this large show is now making a tour through England, I earnestly ask Christians to arrange for similar services where they rest over Sunday, as they will be gladly received.

Mary E. Serjeant.

KINGSDOWN ORPHAN HOMES.

A short time since we noticed the interesting little book entitled "A Retrospect," in which Mrs. Ginever gave an account of recent trials and answers to prayer in connection with this work. The report of the thirteenth year of this work amongst the orphans has also a peculiar fragrance and beauty.

In the three Homes there have been during the past year 130 orphans. The histories of these little ones are of the most touching character, and must kindle sympathy. One is that of an infant, three weeks old, deserted by an educated woman. It gives us some idea of what the inner life of the Home is like when we read that "the cripples had been longing for a baby, and had said their babies were all getting so big, they did want a very little one so much." So the helpless one was taken as a charge to be trained for eternity, to the joy of the inmates, not less than that of their kind Mother, with whom thus to minister to Christ's unsheltered lambs is the first consideration.

On one occasion, when Mrs. Hudson Taylor favoured the children and their friends with an interesting account of the work in China, the meeting was so crowded that some of the children had to go into another room, under the care of a young lady. After a little talk to them she began to read an interesting book, when one of the cripples suggested they should pray for a blessing on the service in the adjoining room. "We often hold prayer-meetings," said they, to reassure this lady, the one adult in the room. It was a time never to be forgotten that was thus occupied by these little ones in sending up their petitions to their heavenly Father, and their faith was rewarded. Mrs. Ginever's address is 3, Manor-road, Holloway, N.

FROM THE SLUMS TO THE SEA.—To give the poor little lasses and lads of our great brick-bound Babylon a bright bracing week at the seaside is surely a most excellent and Christ-like work. Mr. H. J. Allen, of the Folkestone Y.M.C.A., not content with his already heavy and extensive work, has taken a large house, and, with the generous help of Christian friends, has had it suitably and comfortably furnished as a seaside home. Several children have already been accommodated, and quite a large number could be received at once, if sufficient help could be obtained. The cost is very trifling, and out of all proportion to the priceless blessings bestowed on the tired, feeble bairns, who come down eager to see the vast, rolling, restless sea. They are often very thin, pale and sickly, but the fresh breezes, the change of scene, the good food, and the genial surroundings of a Christian home, soon fill them with new life and energy. Mr. Allen's address is, The Young Men's Christian EDUCATION IN INDIA.

Rev. B. H. Badley, of Lucknow, writes:—In connection with the Queen's Jubilee the friends of the Centennial High School at Lucknow are endeavouring to secure 3000 rupees with which to endow three scholarships of 1000 rupees each in this school, to be known as the "Queen's Scholarships"; one for a Hindoo, another for a Mahommedan, and the third for a native Christian student. The project is meeting with favour; about 900 rupees have been secured. It is hoped that the entire amount may be received before the year closes.

This school is doing a good work, and is one of the most flourishing mission-schools in North India. It is a boarding and day-school for young men and boys, of all castes and religions. Four hundred students have been in attendance during the past year, of which number about a hundred are Christians. The institution is proving a success not only as a literary institution, but also as an evangelising agency. The Bible is faithfully taught, religious instruction is imparted in all the classes, Sunday-school and lectures are held, and the students are encouraged to seek "first the kingdom of God." Many encouraging incidents might be mentioned in connection with it.

Scholarships to help new converts and others are urgently needed; and it is with this object in view that we are trying to raise this fund. Those wishing to help may communicate with General Gowan, Wimbledon.

TUMKUR ORPHANAGE, INDIA.

Dear Sir,—After the terrible famine of 1877 we took between three and four hundred children into an Orphanage at Tumkur, Mysore; about one hundred and fifty now remain. Most of them are very fine lads, and amongst them are some of the truest Christians I have ever met. Every branch of our work has benefited through the Orphanage, and, just before leaving India in March, I sent two of the young men, as a first instalment, to be trained for the native ministry.

Many of them are now out earning their own living; but, in order to start them fairly we need to give them a little land, a cottage, a pair of bullocks, &c., which cost about £25; whilst to those who have passed through our workshops, and learned a trade, we need to give implements and tools which cost about the same amount. We have established two villages where we have chapels and healthy little churches, but when I left India our funds were exhausted. My wife and I have given to this work ten of the best years of our life, and we hope to go back shortly to complete it, but in order to carry it on to completion £2000 are necessary. Our villages are centres of Christian light and influence, and wherever they go our young people make known the truth as it is in Jesus. I shall be glad to answer all inquiries about the work. Letters sent to me at 2, Park-villas, Highgate, N., will be immediately acknowledged.—Yours very sincerely,

George W. Sawday.

RICHMOND.—A correspondent states that the Gospel services under Mr. A. H. Head, at the Y.M.C. Institute, have borne much fruit. Many have been brought to Jesus.

MR. WILLIAM GROVE is conducting a very successful mission in a large tent in Axe-street, Barking. Every night hundreds of working people have eagerly listened to his earnest addresses, and many, it is believed, have decided for Christ. Large numbers of the navvies in the town have come nightly, and seem much interested in the meetings.

MR. J. B. WOOKEY purposes shortly to visit Gibraltar and Malta with the view of preaching the Gospel, and seeking to unite Christians in these places in rescue work among fallen men and women. He will be glad to hear from any friends who can aid this movement in any way, or offer suggestions for its accomplishment. His address

Mission Reports.

GLOUCESTER HOME OF HOPE.

In this Home for the destitute, friendless, and fallen there were during the past year thirty-one inmates, and many applications for admission had unfortunately to be refused through want of room and funds. Great care is taken in the instruction of the girls both in domestic work and in needlework. Besides the Sunday services and week-day class a Scripture reader attends regularly and instructs in singing; other forms of Christian effort are Bands of Hope and Mercy. Miss Watkins is the head matron.

GOSPEL WORK AT STRATFORD.

The work of the Maryland Point Schools and Mission, which has now been carried on for thirty years, has been the means of relieving many poor and afflicted ones. There is a regular and continued visitation of the dwellings in the neighbourhood, and religious services are held on the Lord's day, besides Gospel temperance and other meetings in the week. At these there has been an increased attendance, while the power of the Holy Spirit has been manifested. The hon. sec. is Mr. John Stabb, 6, Norcott-road, Stoke Newington, N.

WATERCRESS AND FLOWER GIRLS.

For the thousands of girls engaged in selling flowers in the streets, classes, clubs, meetings and other means are organised to help them to earn a living in the winter. The sick, aged, and destitute are also helped in various ways. The young are removed from the streets, placed in homes, and trained for domestic service. This work is carried on by missionaries and Bible-women, aided by about fifty voluntary workers. Many very sad cases of want come continually before the visitors, and are relieved in various ways. The hon. superintendent is Mr. J. A. Groom, 11 and 12, Clerkenwell-close, E.C.

DUBLIN Y.M.C A.

The thirty-seventh annual report of this work acknowledges with thankfulness that at the various meetings God has been glorified in the salvation of souls, and that "He has used the Association as a field for training numbers of young men for his service." The Bible-class on Sunday afternoons has been well attended, and increasing interest has also been manifest in that held on Friday evenings. There has been a good deal of outside evangelistic work, and an important addition to that within the Institute is the formation of a junior branch, which, it is hoped, will prove a valuable auxiliary. Mr. George Atkinson is the secretary, the office being at Christian Union Buildings, Lower Abbey-street, Dublin.

DUBLIN SOLDIERS' HOME.

The total number of daily visits by soldiers to this Institute during the past year has been nearly 35,000; the opening of the new wing in October last greatly increased the night accommodation at the disposal of the committee. This is of the greatest importance to the soldiers, their wives, and children continually passing through Dublin as well as to those stationed in that city. The attendance at the various religious meetings in the Institute has considerably increased, and the weekly Temperance meeting is also popular with them. Evidence of the reality of the spiritua work carried on, and of much blessing to individuals, is continually manifest. The Home is at Conyngham-road, Phœnix Park-gate, Dublin.

PURE LITERATURE SOCIETY.

From the report of this Society, it is eviden that good progress is being made in what onc appeared almost a hopeless task—that of inducin the habit of reading healthy instead of perniciou books amongst our young people and the poore classes generally. Very many of the ministers o our land are co-operating by forming magazin associations, and the reports of the readiness wit which the books recommended by the Society ar received, and of distinct benefit in the variou localities, are very encouraging. At Fulham ther is a very vigorous and flourishing associatio which last year sold 24,000 periodicals, value ove £150. The list of selected books, carefully ex amined and approved, now numbers 4300.

A valuable part of the Society's work consists i providing libraries at half-price, and over seve thousand libraries in various parts of the kingdo have in this way been supplied with about sixt thousand pounds' worth of books. The Societ has also placed libraries on board many ships an steamers, and in these various ways a large amoun of good is done. Mr. Richard Turner, 11, Bucking

Notes on Daily Readings.

SUNDAY, JULY 31.—PROVERBS XXVI.

1, 8.—As snow in summer, and as rain in harvest, so honour is not seemly for a fool.—God has so made us that we abhor that which is morally bad, feeling that there is a detestable incongruity between honour and folly, or moral badness. In our heart of hearts we honour men only for their moral worth. Hence our better self is shocked when worthless men are made honourable. It is "as snow in summer." Yet against this law which weds honour to righteousness, and shame to sin, society is ever at war. In nothing is the real ungodliness of society more marked than in its habit of inverting God's order, and making such things as personal appearance, ability, power, wealth, or birth, the chief ground of honour, while true moral worth, as such, is only distantly acknowledged. That sturdy, godly manliness which, honouring real goodness, wherever found, abhors the exaltation of fools, is far too rare a virtue. It should be found in everyone who believes in a righteous God. But is it? To what extent mere worldly considerations guide his conduct in society, let each ask his own heart. As he that bindeth a stone in a sling, so is he that giveth honour to a fool.—Better—as he that putteth a precious stone into a heap of stones, so, &c. (margin). Honour given to one morally bad—a fool—is as a jewel among rubbish, a diamond in a dust heap.

4, 5.—Answer not a fool according to his folly, &c.—We are not to descend to his level of spirit, or imitate his speech and temper. "Never reprove pride with pride, nor check passion with passion, nor speak against bitterness of spirit with a bitter spirit." Answer a fool according to his folly.—The prohibition (ver. 4) looked only to the speaker, and the keeping of his spirit. But now, having conquered the strong, sudden temptation to answer back taunt for taunt, biting word for biting word, speak wisely and strongly for the fool's own sake, as his folly deserves.

MONDAY, AUGUST 1.—PROV. XXVII.

1.—Boast not thyself of to-morrow; for, &c.—"To count on to-morrow so as to neglect the duty of to-day is in many respects the greatest practical error among men. 'To-morrow' is the devil's greatest ally—the very Goliath in whom he trusts for victory: 'now' is the stripling sent forth against him. A great significance lies in that little word; it marks the spot on which life's battle turns. Men do not often join issue against God on the Person of Christ, or the ministry of the Spirit, on the ground of acceptance, or the necessity of faith; on all these grounds and many others the carnal mind readily acquiesces in the doctrine of Scripture, like willows bending to the breeze, but resists Christ's claim to be admitted now, as a rocky shore resists the onset of the waves. The worldly will freely agree to be Christians to-morrow, if Christ will permit them to be worldly to-day."—Arnot.

2.—Let another man praise thee, and not thine own mouth; a stranger, and not thine own lips.—This refers to indirect, as well as direct, self-commendation, and we stand in danger of the former a thousand times more than we do of the latter. Direct praise of self is far too gross a folly for most men of sense or education; but praising one's self by frequent reference to what one has done or said, or by skilful contrasts, not spoken even, but implied—this is often a great temptation. It will help us to remember that all attempts at self-exaltation are foolish. As Bishop Butler says:—"Scarce any show themselves to advantage who are over-solicitous of doing so."

TUESDAY, AUGUST 2.—PROVERBS XXVIII.

1.—The wicked flee when no man pursueth.—"No man." There is no human enemy. His own conscience is enough. There is that undefined fear, born of conscious antagonism to God, which is the exact opposite to that holy confidence which makes the righteous "bold as a lion."

11.—The rich man is wise in his own conceit

tion, conceit, and pride of wealth! Why? Because to "trust in uncertain riches," to set one's heart upon them, to grow wise and great in our own eyes because of our success and skill and purpose in gathering them, and of the power they bring us, is most natural. Being so natural, the insolence of wealth has come to be proverbial. For that reason, too, a rich man who carries his wealth in humility, gentleness, and godly humanity, holding it ever for the Giver, is a rare and lovely spectacle.

13.—He that covereth his sins shall not prosper: but whoso confesseth and forsaketh them shall have mercy.—"Covereth"—from whom? (1) From himself. Multitudes struggle ceaselessly to flee from the memory of their past. They try to forget their sin, or to excuse, or to ignore it—to bury it somehow, or anyhow. They act as though sin forgotten meant sin annihilated—as though it would cease to exist when they ceased to feel it; (2) From God. Whoso confesseth and forsaketh.—"Confession is false, unless the confessed sin be also forsaken; and actual amendment is unsound at heart, unless the forsaken sin be also confessed. Neither can stand alone. Confession must be made to God, for all sin is against Him."—Arnot.

WEDNESDAY, AUG. 3.—PROVERBS XXIX.

25.—The fear of man bringeth a snare: but whoso putteth his trust in the Lord shall be safe.—A most heartening word, truly! The temptation to fear of man is common to all: to many, it is simply tremendous. Here is their refuge: "Whoso putteth his trust in the Lord shall be safe." No assurance could be clearer or stronger—he "shall be safe." The character of the Bible as the veritable Word of God is staked on the safety of the troubled but trusting one. If his refuge fails, this promise fails, and, with it, the whole character of Scripture—"Whoso putteth his trust in the Lord," &c. Anxious reader, will you be that one? And will you be so now?

Observe the opposition between fear of man and godly trust. It is real and everlasting. These two exist in eternal and necessary antagonism. Perfect trust in God casts out all fear: perfect fear argues no trust. Further, if we would escape the ensnaring fear, we must look up unto Jesus. Not by fighting fear directly, but by ceasing from man entirely, and resting in the promise of the faithful One, do we enter into freedom and rest. This text contrasts the degrading tendency of an ungodly life with the splendid independence natural to deep and consistent godliness. We see the one trammelled by a debasing fear, the other ennobled by an energising confidence that makes him independent as a prince.

Would that all who have charge of young children would remember that "the fear of man bringeth a snare!" So many tender little hearts are wrought upon by fear, and terrified into falsehood. Foolish threats of dreadful punishment have driven numberless children, from that confession of their fault which would have brought health and safety, into deceit and still deeper sin.

THURSDAY, AUGUST 4.—PROVERBS XXX.

1—9.—The words of Agur, &c.—The last two chapters of Proverbs form a sort of appendix. Whoever Agur was, he was endowed with the gift of prophecy. It is supposed that Ithiel and Ucal were two of his scholars. The subject of discourse is an inquirer's search after God. He is a devout truth seeker. Surely I am more brutish than any man, and have not the understanding of a man, &c.—"It is truly spoken, thou ancient seer; this attitude becomes thee well! This man has already worshipped oft within truth's awful dome, and hence the sweet humility that clothes him."—Arnot. Who hath ascended up into heaven?—"This question explains how a philosopher counts himself ignorant, a saint counts himself unclean. It is a precious, practical rule to look towards heaven while we measure ourselves. To keep the eye, not on the little which a neighbour knows, but on the much of which ourselves are ignorant, is the surest way of cherishing humility... There is power and the subsequent request: Feed me with food convenient, &c. He intends afterwards to ask 'daily bread,' and therefore he begins with 'Our Father, who art in heaven.'" But nature cannot satisfy his yearning. "By a series of seven consecutive questions without a single answer, he shows that the evolutions of nature are not a sufficiently articulate revelation of God. Against that disappointment, as a dark ground to set off their beauty, lean the short and simple lines of light, Every word of God is pure. Then, having found God to be a Father, he exercises the right of a child." He prays: Two things have I required, &c.

FRIDAY, AUGUST 5.—PROVERBS XXXI.

1, &c.—The words of King Lemuel.—Lemuel is historically unknown. It may be that he was king of some neighbouring country, and that his mother was a daughter of Israel. Anyway, she was one on whom rested the spirit of inspiration. Two remarkable things are here: (1) A noble mother's wise and holy teaching; and (2) that teaching published and acknowledged in later life by her royal son. With filial affection Lemuel collects and reproduces the lessons of his mother.

10—31.—Who can find a virtuous woman? &c.—"The last page of the Proverbs displays the full-length portrait of a heroine. Look at some of its leading features. Industry. Her hands are full of useful occupation. Yet these are not the qualifications of a menial servant, but the accomplishments of a noble matron. A numerous class of females practically count uselessness an essential constituent of ladyhood. Activity. She is an early riser. Early hours appointed, and appointed hours punctually kept, cause the economic arrangements to run softly and easily. Benevolence. She stretcheth out her hand to the poor. Industry and activity would only make a female character more harsh and repulsive if it wanted this. When material acquisitions are great, and benevolent efforts small, the moral health cannot be maintained. Forethought. Miserable is that family whose female head is destitute of forethought. Elegance. Her clothing is silk and purple. She deserves and becomes it. Discretion and kindness. She openeth her mouth. Ah, this is the sorest strain. The law of kindness is on her lips. A grand constituent of woman's worth. Moral discipline. She looketh well to the ways of her household. A watchful superintendence of children and servants is a cardinal point in the character of a mother and mistress. Godly fear (ver. 30) the root of all.

SATURDAY, AUGUST 6.—ECCLESIASTES I.

"The argument (against the Solomonic authorship of this book) derived from the use of words supposed to be of post-exilic origin is unsatisfactory, whilst the internal evidence that it was the production of the learned, peaceful king of Jerusalem, seems overwhelming. The more the book is studied, the more the conclusion is strengthened that it was written by one of just the culture and experience of King Solomon."

The AIM of the Book—"It was not really to find out the highest good, but to ascertain if satisfaction could be found in this world. Solomon must have known that God was the chief good. The research was into what the world could really give. The voyage is not undertaken to find the golden sunlit isles, with their happy fruits; it is one of adventure into the arctic regions of life and thought. As from polar expeditions the voyager comes back, thankful to escape being frozen to death, glad to return home, having gained nothing but additional evidence that there is no safe passage through to sunlit seas beyond; just such is the end of him who seeks happiness in the ice-bound region of the promises of this world."—J. Hunt Cooke. If Solomon, with his wealth and power, honour, genius, and refinement found that the world was vain, there is small hope of others faring better. He was the prince of pleasure-seekers: yet, all is vanity.

What profit hath a man of all his labour?—In itself labour is good, a true blessing from God. "In all labour there is profit." It is profitless

Among the Churches.

CHURCH OF ENGLAND.

Westminster Abbey will be reopened for Divine service on Sunday next.

Dean Vaughan, Master of the Temple, is busy compiling the memoirs of his late brother-in-law, Dean Stanley.

Rev. D. Wheeler, Association Secretary of the Church Pastoral Aid Society in N.E. District, was accidentally killed last week on the Morteratsch glacier in the Engadine.

The British Weekly says that Mr. Champion, one of the ablest assistants of Mr. Hyndman in the Socialist propaganda, has been asked to speak at the Wolverhampton Church Congress.

It is in contemplation to start a Dulwich College Mission in some poor South London parish. It will be on somewhat different lines from the other public school missions, and will not improbably take the form of a Working Boys' Home.

Encouraging reports come to the Church Missionary Society from the Punjab. Sikhs, Mohammedans, Faqueers and Brahmins are among the converts. Mr. Perkins speaks of sixty-three baptisms that have lately taken place, and Dr. H. M. Clark mentions corresponding conversions in connection with his hospital work.

CONGREGATIONAL.

A special committee of the Congregational Union is preparing a scheme for the formation of Guilds in connection with Congregational churches of the country, for promoting purity of life.

BAPTIST.

The Baptist Church at Berlin has celebrated its jubilee. Seven persons formed the church fifty years ago, one of these, an artist and engraver named G. W. Lehmann, being the first pastor.

METHODIST.

Rev. Mark Guy Pearse has completed a most successful preaching and lecturing tour in Canada, and is now on his way to England.

A correspondent of The Methodist Times, writing on the subject of "pew rents," suggests that the seats should be free for the evening service, "then if we make that service a little more homely and less formal, we shall greatly improve our congregations in large towns."

SALVATION ARMY.

New barracks at Wimbledon will, it is expected, be opened early in August.

At Regent Hall over forty persons have professed to find salvation here on two Sundays in this month.

At Kingsdown, in the Bristol Division, meetings are held for converted hawkers, domestic servants, and trade unionists, who, marching through the streets in their working clothes, attract a good deal of attention.

SOCIETY OF FRIENDS.

Friends' work spreads on Mount Lebanon. They now meet for worship at Brumana, and at Bát Mary. The new meeting-house was opened about 1st inst.

There is some prospect of women Friends, in all the American yearly meetings, taking concerted action in foreign missionary work. They do nobly already. The coming Conference, it is hoped, will help.

Bristol and Somerset quarterly meeting was held at Street, and was a time of blessing. Jos. Storrs, Fry, and James Clark and wife, were commended to the Divine care, during their visit to the American Conference.

The Yearly Meeting of Canada has liberated John T. Dorland, Jun., and Samuel Rogers to visit within Dublin and London Yearly Meetings; and New England Yearly Meeting has released William Thompson and wife to visit England, the continent of Europe, and Syria.

A CALL TO PRAYER AND PRAISE.

Through the unspeakable mercy and goodness of God,

NINETEEN NEW HOUSES

(the gifts of as many generous donors) have been completed at THE VILLAGE HOME FOR ORPHAN, NEGLECTED, AND DESTITUTE GIRLS, ILFORD, ESSEX, and it has been decided to mark the occasion by inviting CHRISTIAN FRIENDS EVERYWHERE, who have taken for years a deep interest in the progress of this work, to meet at the Village on to solemnly Dedicate all these New Houses to the service of the Lord among His Little Ones, and to inspect the whole work thoroughly.

The New Cottages to be opened are Joicey, Pussy, Syndal, St. Helena, Oxford, Cairns House, Ivy, Mayflower, Cyril, Sir James Tyler, Ilex, Hope, Peace, Clement, The Burwell Park, Curling, Mickleham, Sweet Briar, Pink Clover.

The NEAR APPROACHING DEPARTURE of Dr. Barnardo for Canada makes Saturday, August 6, the only available date; and the Committee and Trustees earnestly hope, therefore, that notwithstanding the lateness of the season, the friends of Christ's work among the Children will rally to this Call, and gather in large numbers at the Village Home on the occasion.

The Programme for the day will include—
Inspection of the Cottages;
Promenade of the Village Grounds;
Dedication of Nineteen New Cottages;
Addresses from several well-known friends of Christ's work;
Some sweet Singing by the Girls;
A Procession of Little Ones to take possession; and Tea in the Cottages.

Fuller announcements of the Programme will be made in a few days; but meanwhile this is sent out as a first notification.

CALL TO PRAYER AND PRAISE

Trains will leave Liverpool Street Station (G.E.R.) at short intervals between 12 o'clock noon and 3 p.m. on the 6th August, and will be met at Ilford by carriages to convey Visitors to the Village.

The Proceedings will begin at 3.15 p.m., and will probably last two hours, so that Visitors could leave the Village between 5.30 and 7 p.m.

The Return Trains will be arranged for at short intervals to suit the convenience of Visitors; but it is important that those who propose to attend should order their tickets as soon as possible. Return Tickets for the Railway, including Coach Hire, will be supplied from the Office, as below, up to Thursday evening, August 4, at the following rates:

First Class Return, and Coach Hire, 3s. 6d. Second Class Return, and Coach Hire, 2s. 9d.

A nominal charge of Sixpence for admission to the Village will be made, to prevent the Grounds being overrun by mere holiday-seekers, who probably would take but little interest in the proceedings.

A cold Collation will be provided for Visitors in a Marquee on the grounds at 2/6 per head; also Tea in the Cottages at 1/.

Refreshment Tickets should be ordered at the same time as the Railway Tickets.

All communications to be addressed to

Dr. T. J. BARNARDO.

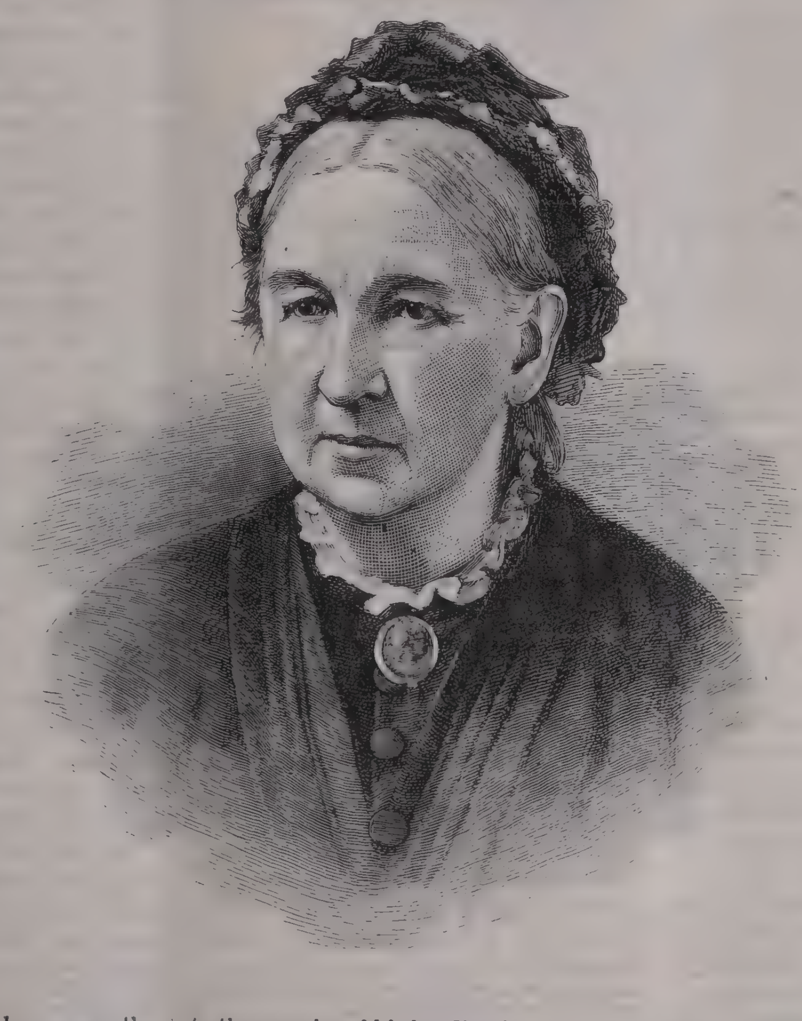
MRS. BETSEY MOODY.

ON the last day of the recent Summer School at Northfield, Mr. D. L. Moody took occasion to remark, to a little crowd of young students, that the best thing in the world for a man is to have a good mother and a good wife. The reference was primarily a personal one; and those who are acquainted with the evangelist's family will endorse his testimony. We have thought that our readers, who are interested, we believe, in all that concerns Mr. Moody, would be glad to see the portrait of his venerable mother, and to have a few facts relating to her life.

Almost every visitor to Northfield makes a pilgrimage to the house where the world-wide evangelist was born, and where his mother now spends her declining days. It is a plain and substantial frame house, about a gunshot up the hill, to the eastward, from the evangelist's own home. It is well represented in the engraving on page 3. On a seat which surrounds the stately tree in front, Mr. Moody was wont to sit, in an earlier part of his public career, and think out some of the stirring sermons, the echoes of which have gone around the world and which have led so many souls into peace and liberty.



BETSEY HOLTON was born when the century was in the early part of its fifth year. The old homestead of her youth is situated not far from the Mount Hermon Schools, across the Connecticut; so that the eighty-two odd years of her life have been spent almost within sight of her native home. The Holton family figures prominently in the early records of the district, and its members have ever been much esteemed by their neighbours for industry and rectitude of character. Miss Holton was married, at the age of twenty-three, to Mr. Edwin Moody, who had come across the hills and settled in Northfield. Dwight Lyman (the evangelist) was the sixth child of Mr. and Mrs. Moody. The husband and father died in 1841, leaving his widow with seven young children; and twins were born to her a month after his death. The farm which the husband cultivated, in addition to the exercise of his handicraft as a brick-mason, was encumbered with a mortage, and the widow was left in very straitened circumstances. But her trust was in God, and she addressed herself to the task of providing for her little ones. One who knows her well says: "Her life was a simple, plain mother's life in a country place, marked principally by the struggle in her widowhood to maintain her nine children. And she did it nobly." Her brothers helped her to retain the farm. The family were kept together until they were able to support themselves.

Many of those who heard Mr. D. L. Moody preach, on his first mission to this country, will recollect the pathetic references he was wont to make to the home-life. They will not forget the touching story of the elder son who was for a time a "wandering boy," and how the younger ones were frequently sent by the widowed mother to the post office to see if any letter had come from him. Then there was the return, the recognition, the forgiveness, and the welcome. One would like to have from her own lips some of the many reminiscences, which her memory must retain, of the youthful escapades and experiences of her sixth child; for in his case, as in that of others, we may be sure "the child was father of the man." One circumstance we heard her recall, when paying her a visit last year, which had in it a hint of coming days. She used to hear the youthful Dwight in the retirement of his own room, busily employed in "holding forth." What the topics of his discourse were she did not say, but we can scarcely imagine that even the fond mother's heart could then have anticipated whereunto this gift of utterance would grow.

Though now living these many years "on borrowed time," to use her son's expressive phrase, "Mother Moody," as the lady students familiarly call her, is wonderfully hale and well-preserved. As she sits in her arm chair, receiving her visitors, with the snows of age upon her head, and scattered around the apartment the photographs of her relatives and friends, she makes a goodly picture. Our visit to her last autumn, when attending the Convention at Northfield, was paid in the company of a brother journalist, Mr. T. J. Shanks, of The New York Witness, who says in his interesting volume, "Mr. D. L. Moody at Home" (Morgan & Scott. 2s. 6d.) :—

> Though in her eighty-second year her activity, mental and physical, is hardly abated. She does most of her own housework, and cannot be persuaded to relinquish her daily tasks. "If I give up work," she says, "I might as well lie down and die." It is evident that from her much of the untiring energy of the evangelist is derived, though she told me once in conversation that while her husband lived, he was just as hard a worker as she was. She is a great reader, and by means of several newspapers regularly taken, is at all times thoroughly informed upon the events of the day. She is now a devout member of the Congregational Church, having, with her whole family, abandoned the Unitarian for the orthodox faith. Proud as she must be of her honoured son, that son is, if possible, even more proud of his venerated mother. At the celebration of her eightieth birthday, loving friends arranged conspicuously the motto: "Her children arise up and call her blessed."

The words we quoted at the beginning of this brief sketch were spoken by her son, when the band of students passed her house on the way up the mountain for a Bible-reading, at the close of the Summer School, as stated in the report elsewhere. We may here quote what the reporter says of the occasion :—

> Mr. Moody took the crowd of nearly 300 young men around to the little house in which his mother lives. Mrs. Moody sat in the door-way, but was unable to rise on account of a sprained ankle; and indeed she has been much disappointed at not being able to attend the sessions of the Conference. Mr. Moody pointed out the room where he was born, and asked the boys to sing for his mother. They sang a college song, and "Jesus, lover of my soul." Mr. Humphrey, of Chicago, offered prayer, in which he made special mention of Mrs. Moody, and asked that her declining years might be made peaceful and useful. Mr. Moody said: "The best thing in the world for a man is to have a good mother and a good wife, and I propose three cheers for my mother." It is needless to say that the cheers were given with a will. Some of "the boys" went forward and kissed her hand.

And so we leave her, enjoying the love and esteem, not of her own kin only, but of the many who are drawn to her quiet New England country retreat, by the name and fame of her illustrious son. Our readers will pray that she may be long spared to see the continued growth of his wonderful institutions at Northfield and Mount Hermon, ere she goes to rejoin "the loved ones gone before."

CURRENT RELIGIOUS PERILS.

AN AMERICAN SYMPOSIUM.

Mr. Joseph Cook's Boston Monday Lectures are now to be valued not only for what they are in themselves, but also in part for the series of Supplements which follow in their train. At the end of his latest course there appeared an interesting symposium on "Current Religious Perils," to which, among others, leading American professors, doctors of divinity, and bishops furnish contributions. The list includes one lady, Miss Frances E. Willard; and also one "layman," Hon. Neal Dow. The general excellence of the symposium is unquestionable; and the consensus of feeling is much greater in many respects than one could have expected in this age of theological unrest and incertitude.

Judging from this symposium, American leaders of religious thought take a more serious view of existing dangers, and have a keener spiritual sense of the theologically sound than we usually find among authorities in this country. We speak now not of every contributor, but of the main body. One or two of the contributions are mere jottings, while others indicate the extempore in thought as well as word, or are open to graver exception still. Hon. Neal Dow looks upon the Society of Friends as the ne plus ultra of attainment, and is of opinion that if only the standard set up by that community were universally adopted, it would not occur to anybody that "Christianity fails to follow Christ." Miss Willard sees all practical Christian duty described in terms of "the temperance reform, the political reform, and the woman question," and her creed is that by these reforms "the Christ-life and the world life evermore tend to become one and the same."

It may interest, if it does not edify, our millennarian readers, to know that one of the current religious perils in Dr. Steele's judgment is the belief in "the pre-millennial advent of Christ, and his personal reign on the earth." This belief, Dr. Steele holds, displacing a courageous faith in the power of the Gospel to evangelise the whole world, has as its outcome "a pessimistic, paralysing despair"; it reckons "the Dispensation of the Holy Spirit a stupendous failure," and reflects "upon the wisdom of both the Father and the Son, by whom He was sent." These conclusions seem to us much too tumultuous. The Son did not deem his own mission a failure, while He acknowledged that no man could come to Him except the Father which sent Him drew them. And why is the Dispensation of the Holy Spirit a failure because it moves within the circle of a Divinely sovereign purpose? Besides, that Millennarianism does not interfere with the world's evangelisation is shown in the prominence of that belief in the world's greatest evangelists. Howbeit, if we may not judge of the sun by its spots, no more may we of this American symposium by its blemishes.

In a masterly letter Dr. Park, of Andover, opens the symposium by specifying as among the foremost of current religious perils, "the neglect of the pulpit to enforce the Divine law." We agree with Dr. Park in regarding this as a clamant evil. Unless the law be preached, the charm of the Gospel can never be felt. Besides, this evil brings others in its train, and these Dr. Park goes on to instance, such as under-rating the evil of sin, and under-estimating the justice of God. Both these are corollaries from the foregoing. Unless the Divine imperative be felt, the burden of sin cannot be experienced, nor can the judicial value of the Atonement of Christ appear. The tendency in the present day is to eliminate righteousness from love. But this is done without reason. For the love of right is also the hatred of wrong. And a love which is separable from righteousness is a contradiction in terms. Nevertheless, it is upon this contradiction that "the new theology" is founded. "The new theological prism puts asunder what God has joined together." And herein is disclosed one of the gravest perils of the times. "The tendency of the modern pulpit is to strike out the Divine justice from the Divine benevolence, to sink benevolence into a sentiment rather than to exalt it into a principle.'

It goes without saying that where the Divine justice is underrated, the Divine grace, which has provided an atonement for sin, must needs be undervalued. Dr. Park points out this mischief, and speaks of it with the accent of an entire conviction. Thus in reply to the sentiment given expression to that "the Atonement has been overworked," he says, "That remark sounds like a funeral knell of the pulpit." And again occur these timely words :—"If ministers fail to set in bold relief the penal death of sinners and the atoning death of Christ, they lose the power of the pulpit, although they may retain a kind of power in the pulpit. They can as little preach with soul-saving effect "as an athlete can achieve a victory in the arena when his heart has been torn away."

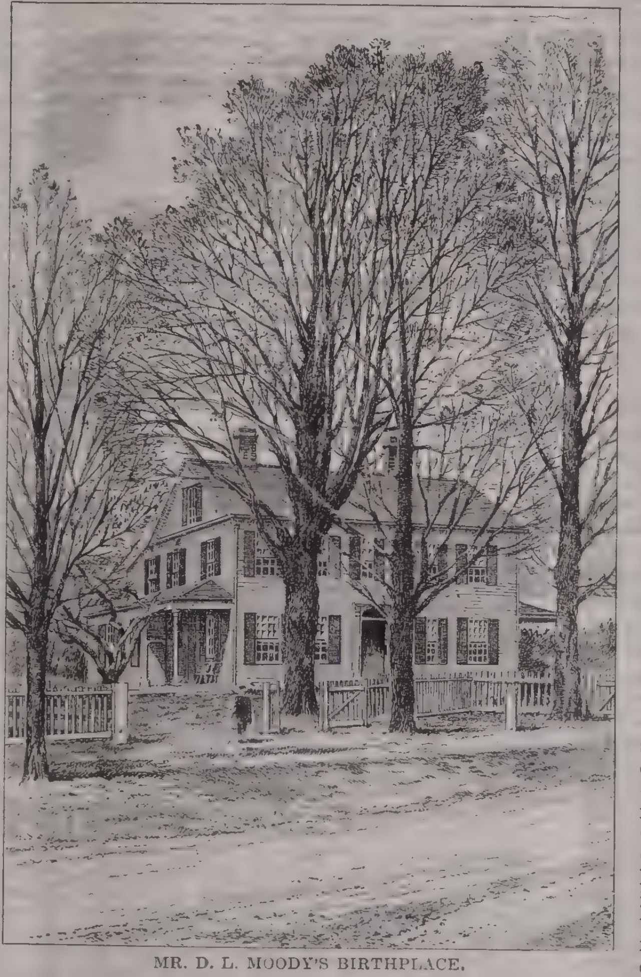
Perhaps, however, the peril which has most generally struck the contributors to this symposium lies in faulty views of inspiration. In almost every letter of any consequence this note of danger is struck. Dr. Boardman, of Chicago, says :—"It is now urged that the Scripture writers were enlightened, as all the followers of Christ are enlightened by gracious Divine influences, and that beyond this they had no inspiration. In accordance with this theory, every Christian man has the same inspiration for criticising the Scriptures which the various authors had for writing them." We heartily agree with this contributor as to the gravity of the peril inrooted in this sentiment. It was not so with Christ. "With Him a Scripture statement ended all questioning; He never attempted to supplement the argument 'It is written.'"

Dr. Curtis, also of Chicago, is, if possible, even more emphatic on the same point. He contents himself with designating one of "the chief current religious perils," which, in his judgment, "embraces all the rest"; namely, "the tendency to subject the ultimate teachings of Scripture to the acceptance or rejection of our moral consciousness." Professor Wright, of Oberlin Theological Seminary, enumerates likewise among the perils, that menace us "the increasing tendency to rationalistic treatment of the Bible."

Dr. Hovey, of Newton Theological Seminary, takes a similar view, for foremost among existing perils, he places "a diminishing reverence for the authority of the Holy Scriptures." While admitting that the Bible has a larger constituency than ever before, this Professor maintains that "there are abundant signs of restiveness under its authority...It is accepted by many as an incentive to independent religious study in quest of the way of life rather than as a final and sufficient revelation of that way." With this view Dr. Hamlin, of Hampton Institute, Virginia fully concurs; citing as foremost of the perils, "a general tendency to a rationalistic view of the Scriptures," and as kindred to the same, "the exaltation of the ethical judgment above the Scriptures, so that a man shall choose out of the Bible what seems to him to be true." Of the other writers who side with this finding, we may mention the well-known name of Dr. John Hall, of New York.

The next point which bulks largely in the view of many of the contributors is what Bishop NICHOLSON, of the Reformed Episcopal Church, has defined as "the now spreading doctrine of probation after death." This heresy is termed "an entering wedge"—"making ready for reinvigorating the question, whether there be future punishment at all." Like other errors, that of post mortem probation points the way to many more. "It leads to an utter depreciation, an emasculation, of the sacrificial sufferings of Christ." And not only so; but, as Dr. WRIGHT, of Oberlin Theological Seminary observes, "this doctrine that the Gospel will be preached in the future world to those who have not heard of Christ here... will prove more paralysing to Christian activity than Universalism, and more injurious than the Roman doctrine of Purgatory. Men are not going to spend their money and their lives in the work of blindly closing doors of mercy which otherwise would be open to unregenerate souls between death and judgment." By Rev. F. W. HUNTINGTON, of Syracuse, New York, these new views on the subject of probation are associated with the peril of lawlessness, which is one of the ominous features of these latter times. "Having lost sight of the true solidarity of the race in the first Adam, and the living gift of regeneration in the second, the individual does what is right in his own eyes." Owing to this, "a mistaken philanthropy chafes at judgment or retribution here or hereafter."

A few of the contributors are inclined to emphasise strongly "the material prosperity of the Church of God." Dr. HERRICK JOHNSON takes the lead in this respect, looking on this feature of the times as the tap root of all evil. "The Church," he exclaims, "has never yet in all the Christian ages, withstood the peril from material prosperity. She has withstood peril from hunger, and 'grown fat from wants and desertions.' She has withstood peril from Neronian wild beasts, and the blood of the martyrs has been her fruitful seed. She has withstood peril from challenging and mocking unbelief, and come out of the conflict knowing better than ever whom and why she believes. She has withstood peril from false doctrine, and, repudiating the spurious admixture, has flung her faith with a clearer articulation and emphasis in the sight of men. But it is yet to be seen whether the Church can get rich and keep her riches and keep her Lord. Thus far in history she has gone down before this peril. She is face to face with the peril to-day. It is instant, imminent, chief of all." While far from seeking to discount the peril incident to material prosperity we think the rhetoric of the foregoing passage needs discounting. It is necessary to discriminate between the Church and Christendom. Christendom has gone down before many perils, but the Church of Christ survives them all. We may not speak of it as going down before any peril, however seriously jeopardised thereby. Against Christ's Church the gates of hell shall not prevail.



MR. D. L. MOODY'S BIRTHPLACE.

The value of this symposium is not lessened because of the ample allowance which has to be made for the personal equation of the writers. Difference does not mean in every instance variance; while identity of conclusion has not always been reached by identity of method. As a rule the letters are strong, manly and edifying; and for the most part incisive and evangelical. Very often the landscape contemplated is virtually the same; the difference that there is being due to the diversity of standpoint. Sometimes, too, the vision is narrowed down to one or two points which are vividly seen, while in other cases the vision is more circumspective or varied. As an instance of an incisive and well concatenated letter may be mentioned that from the pen of Dr. JOSIAH STRONG, of New York, who traces all evil to the fountainhead of a weak and uneducated conscience. He thinks that men rarely combine "strength and beauty," and that the former is being sacrificed to the latter. "The popular demand, to-day, is for a religion destitute of deep convictions and of stern duties, a religion of mere sentiment, one which shall never make the ears tingle with rebuke, but speak only soothing words concerning love. The popular God, to-day, is a sentimental God."

Dr. MAGOUN, ex-President of Iowa College, also makes emphatic the feature of softness, or sentimentality. "A soft religion," he says, "leaves out more than half of what makes God the 'Holy, holy, holy, Lord God Almighty,' and can never realise the immorality of justifying, or treating with moral indifference a soul that persists in sin. That God can do nothing, plan nothing, permit nothing beneath his own personal character, by no means dominates the views multitudes allow in their practical religion." In substantial agreement with this is the sentiment of Professor J. E. DWINELL, of Pacific Theological Seminary, who says, "Calvinism is drawing in its points, and a theology of the humanities proclaiming its platitudes."

We have not exhausted all the names of eminent transatlantic brethren concerned in this symposium. Some not yet mentioned seem greatly alive to the peril incident to what Dr. BARTLETT, of Dartmouth College, describes as "a growing tendency to substitute a man-made scheme for a God-given religion." Thus Dr. PADDOCK, of Boston, speaks of "the too general indifference in the churches to a sound rule of faith and a sober standard of feeling." Dr. CRASWELL DEANE enlarges likewise on "the loose hold on definite dogma" characteristic of the times, and justly censures the general readiness "to change religious convictions, bartering principles for the worse than pottage mess of popularity, under the name of liberal Christianity." On the other hand, Dr. CYRUS A. BARTOL, of Boston, contravenes this view, and instances in a brief note as one of the dangers of the times, "The substitution of dogma for inspiration and interior perception; and for living devotion, stereotyped form."

Dr. THOMAS HILL, ex-president of Harvard University, makes a good point in pointing out "lack of faith" as the great danger in preacher and hearer. It is easy "calling Christ Lord;" it is not so easy "trusting his promises" and "obeying his word."

Dr. FAIRCHILD, of Oberlin College, sees "the labour problem" as one of the rocks ahead. Dr. SEELYE, of Amherst College, Mass., pleads for "deep and broad views of the Gospel." Dr. TODD, of Newhaven, Conn., fastens on the lack of religious instruction in sermons and in Sunday-schools as constituting, with sentimentalism and secularism, a serious evil that needs to be combated; while Dr. ALDEN, of the American Board of Foreign Missions, Boston, in an able letter, pertinently cites, as one of the religious perils of the hour, "the failure of many good men to discern the peril."

The space at our command will not permit us further to enlarge. Suffice it to say we agree with Dr. Alden in the conviction that the peril of the times is "the popular trend toward the unscriptural and dangerous dogma that all men will be finally saved." But we differ from him in the belief that it is possible to ward off the danger, while the universal Fatherhood of God and kindred doctrines are taught.

MR. C. H. SPURGEON has lately been suffering from an attack of his old complaint, but he was able to preach on Sunday morning last.

THE KESWICK CONVENTION.

The thirteenth annual gathering at this lovely spot was held last week. Each year it greatly increases in numbers, as well as in interest, earnestness, and practical results. The last element was abundantly visible on Saturday morning, when, at Mr. Radcliffe's invitation, a large number offered themselves for foreign service, if the Lord should send them forth. A request was also received from Jaffa, asking for ten lady volunteers for mission work in Palestine under the Church Missionary Society.

The addresses were thoughtful, clear, and practical. Many of them demand more than cursory reading; they deserve careful study, that their precious truths may be grasped. The presence of Rev. H. C. G. Moule, of Cambridge, Rev. F. B. Meyer, of Leicester, Rev. Hudson Taylor, and other comparatively recent additions to the staff of speakers, was greatly appreciated. Rev. W. H. Webb-Peploe, too, was in his accustomed place, and many hearts rejoiced that the Lord had so ordered his steps. Dr. and Mrs. Harry Guinness were also present, the latter having been graciously restored from her dangerous illness, doubtless in answer to many prayers.

The weather after the first day was stormy, two days being especially wet; but this in no way relaxed the enthusiasm of the visitors. Every day overflow meetings had to be held, and and it was estimated that about 3000 persons attended the Conference. A large number of young men were present, whose bright faces showed that they possessed the peace that the world cannot give. Special meetings were convened for them, as well as one for inquirers, at which many difficulties were removed. For some days before and after the Convention a large number of visitors arrived and remained, various meetings being held, for prayer, praise, and preaching of the Gospel. Open-air services were conducted in the market place every night, from which much blessing is expected. The Lord was manifestly present in power throughout the week, and many left, saying, "One thing I know; whereas I was blind, now I see."

Verbatim reports of the principal addresses will be found in The Life of Faith for September, which will be a double number, price 2d. (Marshall & Co.).

TUESDAY, JULY 26.

Rev. H. C. G. Moule, of Cambridge, took portions of Ps. cxix. as his theme, and by reading the word "will" for "word" or "law" in the verses in which they occur, showed what the experience of a consecrated Christian might be. But the chief lesson which he deduced from the Psalm was the "continual study of the Word of God." We live in busy times, in days of imitations, when the enemy is industriously sowing his tares, and nothing is more needed than attention to the claims of the Bible. Nothing can take the place of careful, reverent, and prayerful reading, with hearts open to the will of Him who is the Inspirer. A mere cursory reading is not sufficient; pains must be taken; time must be given; and the context of each portion selected must be carefully studied. Extensive experience of young men had shown him that such patient Bible-reading was not the leading characteristic of even Christian young men of the present day, but it cannot be dispensed with without spiritual peril and loss. No amount of glow, zeal, or fire can take its place. It has been said, and the hint is an important one, "Beware of heat that outruns light." It is possible to engage in active work for the Lord, and yet to lack that spiritual strength which only the Word of God can impart. This does not involve a dull, dry, or uninteresting course of study; but the more we dig down into this precious mine, the more treasure shall we discover and bring to light. Oh, for grace to look upon this study of the Word less as a duty and more as a privilege.

A Cambridge man, now a missionary in Africa, when taking his leave at a farewell meeting, left words which deserve to be passed on. He did not advise his hearers to follow him into the mission field; but his last message was, "Watch over the morning watch." There is no time like the first hour of the day for such study: a season set apart to meet our Lord before we meet our fellow men; to direct the mind to the things of God before those of earth occupy our thoughts.

At the chief meeting of the forenoon, Rev. Dr. Elder Cumming read a careful and clearly defined statement of the principles and views which are held and set forth at these Conventions. These he clustered round four portions of Scripture, namely:—John xv. 7; 1 Cor. i. 29; Gal. ii. 20.; Heb. xii. 10, as containing in a condensed form the substance of the teaching of Scripture on the subject of holiness. From these may be deduced three general propositions:—

(1) To exhort Christians to a better life.
(2) To explain what that life is.
(3) To show how it may be obtained.

(1) Many, if not most, Christians live on a low level of holiness, and some even in habitual sin. This is not a case for argument, but for conscience. The distance between the Church and the world is becoming gradually confused, lessened, and destroyed. The Communion table has ceased to be a true picture of the Church of Christ, not only because it is approached by unconverted persons, but also because some of the Christians who sit down to it do but scant credit to their profession.

The chief opposition to the teaching of holiness comes not from the world, but from professing children of God; but we cannot cease urging that many Christians are walking in carelessness and temper, in worldliness and pride, in covetousness, selfishness, and self-seeking, thereby grieving the Holy Spirit, and dishonouring the name of the Lord. This should not be. The Apostles were men subject to like passions as we are, and yet they did not live a life of worldliness and evil. Therefore such a life is not a necessity, nor are there two laws, a higher and a lower, by which Christians are to be guided, nor two kinds of lives which they are to live. The offer of the Gospel is for all sinners, and the offer of grace is for all saints. There is, therefore, no valid excuse for sin; indeed, those Christians who are living in it are under deeper condemnation, for they know of the evil, and permit it notwithstanding.

One great cause of failure is seeking holiness in a wrong way, in our own strength. "We must do our best and God will help us" is the creed of many. But this mere asking for help is a poor and dishonouring way of serving God. When we are weak to helplessness, to despair, to flight from self and self-effort, then all things are possible in the strength of the Lord. We want his strength, and not merely our strength increased.

(2) What is this better life, as taught by the Scriptures? It is known by many names. Wesley called it, "the second blessing;" others have named it, "the higher Christian life," "the rest of faith," "the life of consecration," "the life of faith," "the blessed life," &c. But none of these are quite satisfactory or absolutely according to Scripture. It is simply the Christian life as it ought to be.

We do not affirm that it is perfection. With St. Paul we say that we have "not already attained." Even those who teach the possibility of a sinless life admit the existence of human depravity. This depravity is sin, and though we may not always see or recognise sin, God does. But, as regards the life of holiness there is a great difference between the condition of a Christian who lives half for self and half for God, and the one who has entered the life of faith.

The first element of this life is the absolute surrender to God of everything, as far as the soul knows. Cf. Rom. vi. 13, 16, 19; xii. 1; Col. i. 22; Heb. xii. 9; and James iv. 7. God finds out things in us of which we are careless or perhaps ignorant. Then comes a crisis—whether we will part with them or depart from them or not. If a soul yields to God in these matters, he is able to adopt this attitude:—"There is nothing known to me to which I am consciously clinging, contrary to the will of God. I have surrendered all to Him, and am willing to give up all He points out that grieves Him.

The second element is to believingly accept the fulness of God's grace. We find that in Rom. vi. 14, Paul asserts that sin shall not have dominion over us, and in 1 Cor. iv. 4 (R.V.), that he "knew nothing against" himself. In 2 Cor. ix. 8, he declares the power of God to "make all grace abound"; and in 2 Cor. x. 5, he speaks of "every thought in captivity" as his daily experience; while in Phil. iv. 7, "the peace of God shall keep your hearts and minds." Are these passages true? Do they mean anything? If so, we believe in the fulness of God's grace, not as a general theory, but as available for our individual need. We ask, "Is it for me?" If so, will our faith take hold of all these possessions of grace as our own? Here it is that many Christians break down. Many give up everything to God, but fail to take all He is willing to give. They surrender all, but have not the courage to take. As long as this is wanting, we cannot know the life of faith in ourselves.

The third element is the indwelling of Christ in the heart. "Christ shall dwell in your hearts by faith" (Eph. iii. 17). John xiv. 20, xv. 4, xvii. 26; Col. i. 27. This explains Gal. ii. 20, and Phil. i. 21; Col. iii. 4; 2 Cor. iv. 10, 11. The life of the vine is manifest in all its branches. When self ceases, Christ can work, and then we shall not live our own life by the help of God, but the life of Christ—Christ living in us.

The fourth element is the death of self (Rom. vi. 6, 7). If we have died to sin, we stand in the risen life which Christ lives in us. It is because self died that there is room for Christ to live in us. We are therefore exhorted to reckon ourselves dead indeed unto sin. There are other characteristics of the life of faith which we might consider; but these four will suffice.

(3) How is this better life to be obtained?—Some are unconsciously led into it, often by sorrow which strips off the coverings of a worldly life and leaves them in God's hands. Others see before them a path of duty, which they undertake and find it to be the entrance to the way of life. For the most part Christians do not grow into it, or if they do the growth is very slow and gradual. They live for a long time partially under the power of sin because they do not believe they can be delivered from it. Then, at last, there is a definite step of surrendering and accepting, and, the threshold passed, they step into a new life. This is not always accompanied by an outburst of feeling; sometimes the Spirit comes in like a flood and the heart nearly bursts with joy. Then there is a calm, a waiting for a voice in the presence of silence, but the grace has been received and a new stage entered upon. Therefore, all Christians are urged to take this step.

These things are not dreams, but known and recorded facts, by persons who have by one act of faith committed themselves to God. We have tasted, touched, and handled these things and testify that they may be enjoyed by others.

Rev. W. Haslam, taking Luke xvii. 17 as his theme, gave a brief but stirring address. Dead people, he said, do not get leprosy, but when a soul is born again he is conscious of the leprosy of sin which had not caused him any trouble before his conversion. The Lord Jesus Christ is a living Physician to whom we may bring our leprosy. We may cover it up and pretend not to see it, but other people will see it, so we had better get rid of it at once.

Picture these ten lepers, isolated from their fellow men, talking over their affliction in mutual sympathy and distress. They heard of Jesus and were talking about Him, and He appeared. As on the way to Emmaus, Jesus will always draw near if we talk about Him. The lepers cried "Have mercy upon us. We do not need to tell Thee who we are or what is the matter with us; but Jesus, Master, have mercy on us." It is not enough to believe that He can and will heal us. The devil believes that. We must prove it by casting ourselves upon Him. And Jesus said, "What would you do, if I healed you?" "Show ourselves to the priest." "Then go and show yourselves to the priest." "But we're not healed." "Never mind, go." And, as they went, they were healed. They started off to the priest before they were healed, as if they were healed. If you are seeking blessing from God, and are convinced of his power and willingness to bestow it, thank Him for it, whether you feel you have it or not.

> 'Tis the promise of God full salvation to give;

but that is not enough; you must go on to—

> Hallelujah, 'tis done;

and you will not have gone far shouting that, before you will know for a certainty that your desire is accomplished.

One of the lepers returned and gave thanks. Only one! And Christ asked, "Where are the nine?" We must not seek cleansing only for our own selfish benefit, but that we may glorify God. We must therefore present ourselves as a thankoffering, that the Lord may do with us what He will, and send us where He pleases. He may send us to the mission field, or keep us at home, but in either case we are not to be idle. You come to Keswick; you have got a blessing. What are you going to do with it? Will you be the one, or one of the nine? Will you give yourself as a thankoffering to God, or will you go away merely to enjoy the blessing you have got?

TUESDAY EVENING.

The evening meeting was attended with heavy storms of wind and rain, and those who could not find seats within the tent, being unable to stand outside, adjourned to the neighbouring lecture-hall, where an overflow-meeting was held.

In the tent Rev. C. A. Fox selected Gen. xiii. from which to illustrate the life of faith, bringing out the following characteristics of the man of faith:—(1) When Abram received a promise from God he always built an altar. The man of faith is a man of constant communion. He surrendered himself to the Lord of the promise, and acted upon it. If we adopted this course what strong Christians we should be!

(2) He is a man of peace. "Let there be no strife, I pray thee, for we be brethren (ver. 8). Oh, for a union of all Christian brethren, to stand shoulder to shoulder, and side by side, with the Lord at the head! If when our families, our servants, our brethren disagree, we were to bring in peace; if when we were injured or insulted we were always to answer with peace; if we were willing to sacrifice a good point which cannot be maintained with good feeling; if we would abandon it without a word, so that only ourselves and God knew what it cost us, then, indeed, would there be some practical outcome of consecrated life. How can God bless a household, or family, in which there are strife and friction, unkindness and bickering between husband and wife, or brother and sister? We need peace and peacemaking to characterise our life, if we are to be like Abram—true men of faith.

(3) He is a man of surrendered preferences (ver. 9). He recognised the will of God as superior to all else. He took what God gave rather than chose for himself. If we acted thus we should show a principle dominating us which is not in the world. But, alas, Christians are found grasping for position, for wealth, and for reputation, not contented to leave their lot to the ordering of the Lord.

Lot took his choice of land which was "like the land of Egypt." Abram made no choice. Lot did so to his own sorrow and ruin. He "pitched his tent toward Sodom." How many Christians do the same! They are not in Sodom, perhaps they do not even face Sodom, but their back door may be open towards it, just on the border of the influences of Sodom and the world. May this Conference make us men and women of surrendered preferences, content to accept God's choice, and be guided by his advice. Play not with the world. Some parents are living for Christ, but they say they cannot bring up their children for God yet. The daughter, young, and perhaps beautiful, must enter into society first, and the son must have a taste of the world. May such be warned in time! Stand clear and stainless, keeping your place by the side of Jesus; for where He is, there only are you safe. Draw in all those trespassing affections; bring them into subjection, and give them up to the Lord who is here to receive them. Take as your guide, "Where Thou goest I will go, and where Thou tarriest I will tarry."

(4) He is a man of good present prospects (v. 14). Abram did not lift up his eyes till God told him to. Lot did so without such direction. Abram only had Lot's leavings, but it was good. Do not move, look from where you are; some in sorrow; some with tears running down the soul; "lift up now your eyes," whatever your circumstances may be, "and look from the place where thou art;" take a deliberate survey of God's property, and see what stretches of blessing remain yet to be possessed; stand high on a hill of promise and see Eshcol in many a hidden vale. Go to the Bible, and stand upon such a promontory as "Sin shall not have dominion over you." What a holy atmosphere is that! Or again, "My God shall supply all your need, according to his riches in glory by Christ Jesus." Walk up and down on it; stamp upon it, and see if it will bear, as Peter did upon the sea. "Look southward" to the mercy of God, "and northward," to his justice; these are both on your side, for "He is faithful and just to forgive us our sins, and to cleanse us from all unrighteousness."

(5) He is a man who takes possession at once. "Arise, walk through the land" (ver. 17). Put your foot down and appropriate it instantaneously, step by step, inch by inch, until you come to Mamre (ver. 18), and there again build your altar to the Lord. Claim God, and let Him claim you.

Rev. J. GELSON GREGSON then expressed the desire of many present as he prayed:—"What Thou willest may we will; and what Thou choosest for us may we gratefully accept."

Rev. EVAN HOPKINS followed with a specially appropriate address upon Gen. xvii. 1. God instructed Abram by scenes and successive revelations; and these were not only successive and separate, but progressive; each a step in advance of the last. Around these are grouped all the circumstances of Abram's life. Each stage is connected with some special revelation; and these are related, not only because of their importance to Abram, but as being equally important to us and all the children of faith. What God showed Himself to Abram He will also reveal Himself to us. We must see what Abram saw if we would live as Abram lived. We have in this verse, first, God's name revealed, "I am the Almighty God." We have been hearing the experiences through which Abram had just been passing. He had heard God's call and had responded; he had heard the promise and reviewed the inheritance. He had received a special manifestation in chap. xv., "Fear not, Abram, I am thy shield and thy exceeding great reward." Thus he was assured of present safety and future glory.

But great and glorious as this promise was, it did not meet Abram's immediate need. He had just fallen in chap. xvi. from walking by faith to walking by sight, and failed in the very respect in which we had expected him to have most strength. Therefore the Lord now reveals Himself as "the Almighty God." We, too, have to combat the powers of evil, and whilst we rejoice in having God as our shield and future reward, we need the God of power—the God who is able to perform the things that He hath promised.

Walk before Me. Having thus revealed Himself, He adds, "Walk before Me, and be thou perfect." Abraham was safe under the shield; now he was to walk. This was where he failed, but he was now commanded to walk in full view of the Almighty God; not before himself, nor his circumstances, nor his own efforts, but before the God of power. When we begin to look at ourselves and our circumstances, we cry at once, "Oh, it is impossible; I have done my best; I cannot walk in the way of holiness." Then look at Him, and walk with his eyes full upon you.

Be thou perfect. Here is a demand for sincerity. We must not have recourse to expediency, or short cuts to the fulfilment of the promise. We must not dissemble, as in fear of man. "Walk before Me, to please Me alone." Oh, how anxious we are to have the good opinion of our fellow men:—"If I give myself to God, what will So-and-so say?" Such considerations must have no place. We must please God, and walk before Him regardless of them all. The verse should be literally rendered. "Set yourself to walk before Me." There must be an adjustment. We have been seeking strength from within, instead of from God; and we must realise Him to be the Almighty God, When in answer to his question, "Believe ye that I am able to do this?" we respond, "Yea, Lord," we are in a position to tread out on the path of victory. The secret of failure has often been that we have not started aright with God.

After thus revealing Himself as the Almighty God, He then promises "I will make my covenant between Me and thee." The value of a promise depends on the character of the promiser. The value of the "I Will" depends on the character of the "I Am." Can his word be depended upon? If so, occupy your mind with the person, and you will soon grasp the promise.

Mr. Hopkins then informally held an after-meeting, at which many souls were brought face to face as it were with God.

WEDNESDAY, JULY 27.

The Bible-reading by Rev. H. C. G. MOULE contained some very important propositions. He took Gal. i. 1—10 as a type of the whole Epistle. The chief characteristic of the Epistle is its two-sidedness and careful balance in the presentation of different aspects of Divine truth.

(1) Looking at one side we find a great portion occupied with a dogmatic statement of the doctrine of justification by faith. See chaps. ii. 16; iii. 8, 13, 24; iv. 5. An unbalanced Gospel however good the side presented may be, is not the Gospel, and it is most important, in a movement so sacred as this Convention, that we should be kept straight and well-balanced on the lines of truth. The Galatians were getting shaken upon the doctrine of justification, and accordingly Paul lays particular stress upon it. I would, therefore, strongly urge all ministers and Christian workers to be very definite in their stand upon this ground, and on no account to lose sight of this truth, because of their grasp of any other.

(2) Having thus alluded to the first aspect of the Epistle, we are the more free to look into the second, which is the teaching of sanctification. I would most earnestly protest against the teaching of "Perfectionism," for sure I am that as it develops, in its second and third removes its results are most disastrous. The tendency in it is to be occupied with one's own condition rather than the Saviour's holiness. We must be very careful in the use of such expressions as "Not I, but Christ." I have known many cases in which Christian thinkers and workers have been led to consider themselves independent of conscience and responsibility, saying, "As it is not I, but Christ, who thinks, speaks, and acts in me, the thoughts in my brain, the words in my mouth, and the actions of my hands are those of the Lord Jesus Christ in a sense as literal as when the Son of God was upon earth." Thus the professor of a supposed exalted holiness places himself in a position which blunts the susceptibility of conscience and the sense of his responsibility. But there is no contact with the Lord Jesus Christ, no incorporation with Him, which can absolve us from the demand of conscience and responsibility as regulating the whole act, and thought, and speech of life. We cannot place our finger on any one thing, and say truthfully, "I have no responsibility in that."

There is hardly any portion of Scripture which is so rich as the Epistle to the Galatians on the subject of the blessed bond-service of believer to Christ. Paul's joy, peace, strength and rest was in this. He gloried that he belonged, with an absolute right of property, to his Lord and Master, who loved him, and gave Himself for him. And perhaps there is no truth upon which, at such seasons as this, it is well for us to dwell. Christ does not relax his right upon us for a single moment, even though we sadly fail in our duty by appropriating portions of our time and talents for our own use independently of Him.

At the general meeting Rev. Gelson Gregson addressed those who have not Christ reigning supremely in their lives as King. God in his wondrous mercy and love enabled me to see a throne that was occupied, but which, I thought, had been emptied long ago; until He came and found the seat occupied, I did not know that self was there.

I promised a friend of mine, fifteen months ago, when sitting in my home at Mussoorie, in India, that I would come to Keswick. Five years ago that friend was here, and he found Christ to be his King. That message was brought to me in India, and I did what, perhaps, some of you have been doing since you have been at Keswick—you have been resisting, excusing, apologising, and fencing round yourself so as to excuse yourself for not accepting Christ as King. The first action in your mind is that of resistance, and you think, perhaps, that when you have attained some greater height you will have a higher prospect. If you are a mountain climber, so am I, and I have gone up 10,000 or 15,000 feet to get a better view, and I have been lost in the mist, and that is where you will be. It is not climbing up that is wanted. Perhaps you will say, "Give me time, I may grow into it." That flower-pot of yours will prevent the root from expanding, and you will soon find yourself pot-bound—a diminutive, miserable, undeveloped, and imperfect plant. Some of you are resisting, and have been ever since you came to Keswick. You have turned everything round that you have heard, and have been fighting it. But the Lord brought home the principle to me. I saw that my friend had got something that I had not, and I went to the Lord, and said, "Lord, that man has got rest that I know nothing about. He has got peace which to me has been a dream; and he talks to me about crossing the Jordan. Why, I expected to do that when I died, but he says I must do it now!" I did not understand it, and I told the Lord so, for nobody but the Lord could have done what I wanted. He showed me that the throne was occupied, and I did not know it. If anybody had said to me, Do you want to do the will of God out and out? I should have said, I do that; but I learned something different from that—God willing in me, God working in me, and what for? His good measure.

Now, so long as self is there that cannot take place, because self will say "Do it: I did it; it is my work: a glorious work, a blessed work. I am denying myself to do it." Self likes that: that is the incense that floats about the soul when self is there. But the moment that self is dethroned, and Christ is there, then you are unconscious of your work—unconscious because you are used of God. You no more feel anything; you do not feel inflated with pious gas. You are simply a branch of the vine; the sap naturally flows through it. You do not talk about bringing forth fruit; the fruit comes. But, perhaps, the reason of your non-surrender is that you fear the consequences; you will have to give up something, and you are not quite satisfied as to what God is going to do with you. You feel a drawing back, but you cannot have this rest for peace until you are in his hand. And, mark you, He will make no mistake. The stone that is for the building is never left in the road. He is too wise a Master to put you in the wrong place, and you may be satisfied that He will pose you and place you where his glory—not yours—will shine out the fullest and the brightest.

We see, then, that the moment we are willing to receive, without questioning as to the consequences, we get what we want. You know it is very easy to be pious and religious in the conventional and technical sense of the word—most easy; but we want to get rid of mechanical religion; we want to get rid of all this ecclesiastical mechanism that manufactures Christians. We want clearly and distinctly to have the mighty power of God teaching men that they are to be born into it. Last year, in India, an officer came to me, very much distressed after a service, and said to me, "I want to follow Christ, but I don't know how." No; he knew no more about the truth in that Book than if it had never existed. So I said, "You take that Book, and treat it just as you treat your general orders. When you read a general order, what do you do? Why, you go and do what it says. Well, when you read that Book, take it as a general order, and do it. The first command is that you must be born again. Are you born again?" "I am not; I do not know what it means." "He that believeth that Jesus is Christ is born of God." If you are honest, go and pray to the Master tonight, and say you do not understand. Ask Him to teach you, to reveal it to you, because it is a revelation of the Holy Spirit." "Will He do it?" "Of course He will," I said. A week afterwards he came to me and said, "Gregson, I am born again." I said, "Praise the Lord. But how do you know that you are born again?" "I feel so different. All those old things have been taken away." Some people keep themselves good by suppressing. He does not suppress; He takes it away; and then, when the devil puts the bait in front of you, you don't jump at it like a trout, because there is no desire to get at it; He has taken away the desire. This officer's wife was very much concerned about this change, and she sent for me and said, "I am not going to have this religion. What have you been doing?" I said to her, "I have done nothing; I have had nothing to do with it." "He says he has been born again." "Well, that is a blessed thing." "I don't know that," she said, "I am not, and I do not want to be." No; she was in the swim of fashion. I knew she was honest. "I am very sorry; but I had nothing to do with it." And then she turned round, and said, "He has got such a horrible temper. I wish you could get rid of that for me." Of course I said, I cannot do that. The next time I saw the husband, I said, "Your wife tells me you have got a horrible temper." "Well, it is rather hot, occasionally." "That is not a very pleasing thing, or very honouring to God, is it?" "Oh, that will go away, gradually." "No, it will not; it will go, or it will remain. If you like you may get rid of it. Tell the Master." "What! will He take it?" "Yes! it is a miserable thing to give Him. Say to the Master, 'I don't want this wretched thing.'" And He did take it away. I had the best testimony to that fact that I could possibly have, for his own mother-in-law said, "He is a wonderfully changed fellow."

Now, my last word is this, Let the Lord do what He likes with you. If you have not got this blessing, tell God so, and ask Him to give it to you. Last January I was in the city of Peshawur watching a native potter making his pots, with his primitive wheel and a heap of plastic mud. He took a handful of the mud and splashed it on to the wheel, and, by his artistic handling, a beautiful vase grew out of that mud. Now, my friend, stop arguing, and let the Lord lay his hand upon you, and put you upon the wheel. Let his hand turn that wheel, and let his Divine fingers mould you into a vessel to be fit for his own use.

Dr. Elder Cumming followed with some practical remarks on Ex. iii. 10, 11, and iv. 10, showing that a false modesty or pretended humility, which is in reality no humility at all, often keeps Christians back from obeying the call of God, and performing the work He has called them to do.

In the evening Rev. C. A. Fox gave some explanation of the teaching of the Convention. One great purpose of such gatherings is to press home upon the children of God that they should yield themselves unto God "as those that are alive from the dead." If that one word were willingly practised there would be growth upon growth in holy teaching, and growth upon growth in nearness to the image of Christ. This teaching was one of the primary things to be known and received by every true, simple, earnest believer. In Rom. vi. there are several "Know ye nots," and these might be divided into two parts—first, the teaching of the death-union in Christ; and, second, the teaching of the life-union with Christ. The death of Christ meant the sanctification of the child of God, and it emphatically meant newness of life. Each believer must accept the death of Christ as his own death. They must as Christians live the life of burial with Christ, and of crucifixion with Him, for, being dead with Christ, they would live with Him, having risen with Him, and dying no more. If entirely surrendered to Him we shall be filled with the Holy Ghost, and do all things well. We must witness to the power of the risen Lord in the indwelling of the Pentecostal Spirit. At the same time we must be kept in the dust by hourly and momentary dependence upon the Master; listening to his voice and yielding readily to his Divine pressure; committing everything to Him, and trusting Him in all things. Thus we should know what the teaching of the Keswick Conventions meant—the power of God to salvation to our own souls, and to the souls of all around us in this lost world.

Rev. H. W. Webb-Peploe gave an earnest address on the casting-out of the money changers from the Temple. Christ would not permit anything that defiled to be carried through the Temple. The temple of God must be kept pure. There may be many things which are good enough in themselves—even as the money, the tables, and the doves—but which must not intrude into the holy place. The temple of God, "which temple ye are" must not be defiled by the things of earth, and, as surely as we permit our hearts thus to be defiled, so surely will the Lord come with a scourge and drive them out by force, if we do not obey his command at once to "take these things hence."

THURSDAY, JULY 28.

This morning a Bible Reading, prepared by Rev. Hubert Brooke, was read by Mr. Eugene Stock; we hope to give the substance of it in our next issue.

Rev. H. C. G. Moule, whose well-balanced and thoughtful mind is of great value in exposition, occupied a portion of the forenoon. After reading 1 Cor. xiii. 9, 12; Col. i. 18, 19 and ver. 9, 10, 11 of the same chapter (purposely transforming their order), and Phil. iv., he expressed an earnest hope that no shibboleth would ever be formed out of the teaching at Keswick. It is no new Gospel, nor new phase of the Gospel. It is the Gospel which is as old as the Cross, and all that the promoters of the Convention desire is to draw attention to a limb of the ancient Gospel which has been in a great measure left unnoticed, and point to a quarter of the field of which the other parts remain for ever unchanged. It is the same Gospel which he learned at his mother's knee and from his father's pulpit, and will always be the same until he yields up his spirit into his Creator's hand, and sees Him as He is.

But one side, that under present consideration, he had largely neglected until recently, and here he would warn all against taking the word "holiness," and by a misuse of language confine it to a certain line of doctrine concerning the cultivation of that blessed truth.

Col. i. 18, 19.—Paul here shows the pre-eminence of Christ, after showing the walk of the Christian, in ver. 10; pointing away from self to the Saviour, considering Him not only in one aspect of his work, but as the Priest upon the throne. It seems a paradox, but Christ can be dwelling in the heart of the believer and be on the throne at the same time.

Vers. 9—11.—Here we have a picture of an all-round Christian. We need this blessed consistency; to watch against the chameleon temptations of ambition; to watch against the tremendous dangers of success, as much as against the trial of seeming failure, to watch against feelings of jealousy when we see God working through others perhaps more than through ourselves. On leaving Keswick we have to return to what may be to some the drudgery of everyday life. "This is not like the top of the mount," they cry; but, if we have Him in whom all fulness dwells, we shall find the plain brilliant with a light like Tabor; we shall see beauty in the dullest street; and shall find our ordinary life lifted into an atmosphere in which the peace of God is keeping our hearts and minds in Christ Jesus.

Phil. iv. 13.—These are not the words of an enthusiast or a fanatic, but come from a deep thinker and a temperate worker. It did not imply an unlimited power to work miracles, or to roam across the boundless plain of possibilities. But it did mean a supply of special help for special needs, to bear trials such as are described in chap. 1, whether they came from a tyrant emperor who would hand him over to execution, or whether from contentious preachers of the Gospel. He was at perfect peace beneath the will of God.

Such is the all-sufficiency of the Gospel; not for ambition or show-making, but to enable us to go through the paths of ordinary life.

Some earnest words followed from Rev. JOHN SLOAN upon Lev. xxvi. 3, 11—13, and 2 Cor. vi. 14—18. All promises are accompanied with conditions which vary according to the circumstances in which the promise is given. The Church in the wilderness were separated from Egypt by the Red Sea. That in Corinth was in the midst of heathen sin. After referring warmly to the disobedience of Christians who marry unconverted partners, and the inevitably consequent sorrow, Mr. Sloan showed that the conditions of God dwelling amongst his people were, in the first place, obedience to his commandments; and, in the second place, the formation of no unholy alliances. God is at the door, awaiting an entrance, and it is for each individual soul to decide whether the heavenly guest should be admitted.

Rev. F. B. MEYER then gave a very impressive address upon "The rest of God." On the first page of the Bible, he said, we are told of the rest of God, and ever since man knew that God, the mighty worker, had entered into the rest which was full of work, he has been seeking through the whole of the ages to enter into that rest also. And after some hundreds of years had passed, and still they had not reached it, an aged pair named their child Noah—rest—in the vain hope that perhaps he might lead the weary generations into God's rest; but their hope was vain, for the waters of the Deluge were soon sweeping over the world. Hundreds of years after that again, in the hieroglyphic chamber in the land of the pyramids, his face shadowed with coming death, but lit up also with the light of another world, an aged man, surrounded by his stalwart sons spoke of the Shiloh, the Rest-giver, who in the coming days should lead the hearts of men into the promised rest of God; and from that moment men eagerly scrutinised everyone that passed across the page of history, as much as to say, "Art thou the Shiloh, thou priest, thou prophet, thou king, canst thou give to tired men and women that rest of God of which we are dreaming and thinking, but none get?" And Joshua, himself, could only lead the people into the Land of Promise; but the rest of that land was soon broken by tumult.

At last there stood hard by the Lake of Galilee, one dressed in peasant guise, in whose pose and look there was nothing remarkable. A few women with their children at the breast; some fisher-folk come away from their nets, and boats, and other artisans and peasants, gathered in a little crowd around Him; and standing in their midst He spoke words for which the world was waiting; words which the world will never again let die: "Come unto Me all ye that labour and are heavy laden and I will give you rest. Take my yoke upon you and learn of Me, for I am meek and lowly in heart, and ye shall find rest to your souls." Oh, that we may everyone learn the secret of rest, and go away with what John Bunyan called "the little flower heartsease in our button-hole, and may in glad faces, in restful demeanour and in peace of heart, show in a more eloquent manner than ever before that we have entered into the rest of God."

It is not the rest of heaven of which I speak to-day, not the rest of circumstances, on which you may recline as upon a rosy bank; not the rest of inaction, but the rest of intense activity; and yet of utter, absolute peace, even as a factory wheel often revolves so fast as to appear to be perfectly motionless.

It seems incongruous that we should find rest by taking another yoke; surely the mission of Jesus should be to take away yokes rather than increase them. But it is his yoke: the yoke He carried every day. On one side is written: "I came not to do my own will, but the will of my Father," and on the other "Not my will but thine be done." It was in doing that will that He found rest unto his soul, amid the agony and sorrow of his life, because hour by hour He subordinated his own will to his Father's. The yoke, then, is the will of God. There are three steps we must take: (a) give up our own will; (b) take God's will; (c) do it. That will prove the secret of perfect rest.

(a) If we give up our will to God He will not make us miserable. If a child goes to its parents in love and says, "I want to do just whatever you want me to do and not to do anything you do not like," they would not say, "Now is our chance, we will make the most unreasonable demands we can and impose the most irksome duties upon him;" would they not rather say, "We will do all we can to make our will pleasant and agreeable to him." And so it is with God. He will not prove a hard taskmaster if we so yield our will to Him, but we shall delight to do his bidding and obey his will.

(b) If we take God's will it will not be an irksome yoke. If, like a restive heifer, we rebel against it, it will rub sore places in our hearts; but, if we take it quietly, it will not be a heavy burden. A gentleman visited a deaf and dumb school and wrote on the blackboard, "Why did God make you unable to hear or speak and make me able to do both?" A little fellow stepped forward and wrote, "Even so, Father, for so it seemed good in thy sight." That is taking God's will.

(c) But it may be difficult to do his will. Your life may be a dull dreary plain and you are to carry the yoke across it. But a yoke is meant for two, not for one, and it is his yoke; and, so unseen, the Saviour goes with you across the plain walking step by step, and bears it by your side.

Thus may we know the rest of God, which no trouble, difficulty, or trial can disturb. We are told that the depths of the ocean are unmoved by the storms that sweep o'er its surface; in the midst of a whirlwind there is one point of absolute calm. So, having learned the secret, may we live in the will of God, so that our souls may go through the whirlwind and the storm in perfect peace.

THURSDAY EVENING.

In the evening Rev. H. W. WEBB-PEPLOE gave a remarkably suggestive exposition of the prophecy of Haggai, of which the following is an outline:—Chap. i. 6 shows a disappointed people. In verses 6 and 9 there are SEVEN POSITIONS OF DISAPPOINTMENT. So it is with many who come to Conventions; they are hungry, but are not satisfied; they look for much, and find little. Why? Because of unfaithfulness. They are living at ease in cieled houses (ver. 4), and say, "The time is not yet come" (ver. 2) to work for the Lord; whereas, the Lord is saying, "Go work to-day." They sin in abstaining from their privileges and opportunities.

Then Haggai, whose name signifies "the festal one," comes to awake them to a sense of their neglect and need, and his message from A SEVENFOLD COMMAND. (1) In i. 5, 7, consider your ways, they could not charge God with failure, for three times over He declares Himself to be with them (i. 13; ii. 4; ii. 5). They were, then, to consider their ways, and charge the failure upon themselves. (2) Go up to the mountain. Get as near God as you can; away from the turmoil of earth; alone in his searching presence let Him deal with you, and have dealings with Him alone. (3) Bring wood. Get from God himself the supplies of grace which are needed for the accomplishment of the work of the Lord. (4) And build. Begin work: do that which has been left undone; undertake that which has been neglected, and if possible redeem the wasted time. (5) Be strong (ii. 4), three times repeated. People say, "Oh, if I were only like this prominent Christian or that well-known preacher! If I were strong as they, I could indeed serve the Lord. But I am only a poor, weak, humble individual; I can do nought." But the command was not only to Zerubbabel and Joshua, the two prominent men, but also, "be strong, all ye people!" The call is alike to preacher and hearer, to pulpit and pew. (6) And work. There are plenty of ways of furthering the work of the Lord; each willing hand can find something to do. (7) Fear not. As much a command as "Steal not," or any other, and not a mere word of encouragement. Any shrinking or cowardice is disobedience.

The result of obedience to these commands is (ii. 19), "From this day will I bless you." When we begin to obey, then, at that moment, God begins to bless, and in this is embodied the SEVEN "I WILLS" of the book:—(1) I will take pleasure in the humble work which we have commenced in obedience to his will.. (2) I will be glorified. This should be the object of all our work. (3) I will shake (ii. 6, 7). Through his people, who shall thus accomplish his purpose by hastening "the desire of all nations." (4) I will fill this house with glory. Though a Convention tent is a very miserable thing compared with the great cathedrals and churches of the land, yet, if the Lord is obeyed in it, his glory will rest upon and fill it. (5) I will give peace (ver. 9). This is not the first token of his pleasure. We long for peace as if it were the sum total of blessing, but it is only a personal benefit, whereas God Himself, and our fellow-men, have to be considered first. Thus God puts it some way down the list. (6) I will overthrow (ver. 22). Every foe vanquished; the power of sin conquered. (7) I will make thee as a signet (ver. 23). Compare Song of Solomon viii. 6. If we set Christ upon our heart and arm—inwardly upon the seat of the affections, and outwardly where everyone can see it, He also will set us as a signet, and use us to seal his Divine purposes.

Mr. Peploe then concluded his admirable address by quoting, in expansion of the thought, "From this day will I bless you," seven ways in which God will bless his faithful people, as set forth in the following verses of the Psalms:—Ps. v. 12; xxviii. 9; xxix. 11; lxvii. 7; cxxviii. 5; cxxxii. 15; xxi. 6. This last being the consummation of them all,—and "the blessing of the Lord it maketh rich, and He addeth no sorrow with it."

Rev. Evan Hopkins also addressed the meeting.

FRIDAY, JULY 29.

In place of the usual Bible-reading Mr. H. F. BOWKER gave an address upon "The Signs of the Times" in reference to the coming of the Lord. He had delivered a similar discourse last year, and it was by special request that he now continued the subject. Tracing the course of sin, he showed its effects from Adam's fall to the time of Christ, during which time one might surely have thought that mankind would have learnt the lessons and judgments which God taught them. But even Christ was rejected, which was the crowning sin of all, and in punishment of which the Jews are now scattered over the whole earth.

Since last year the speaker could see marked token of the still nearer approach of the end; ever seething trouble in the East, the accumulating by the nations of wealth and power, in the shape of armaments for their own destruction: all seem to be hastening us on toward the final catastrophe. In no sparing terms did he warn against the growing power and impudence of Rome shown in so many dangerous ways, but he did not agree with those who think that the Papacy is the Antichrist, inasmuch as the characteristics foretold in 1 John ii. 22 and iv. 3 are not true of that apostasy. Although it received a great blow in 1870, it is now raising its head again. The present Pope is far more cunning than his predecessor, and is endeavouring by guile once more to lay his hand on Christendom. How many present are aware that the Jesuits have been restored to power? But this is the case and we are welcoming them in our midst. Stealthily the power of Rome is gaining ground. In the State Church there is the multiplying of decoration, music, and ceremonies, the adoption of worldly expedients, the renunciation of the doctrines of the Reformation for which our fathers bled and died. All these things, added to the ignorance of the people, hasten the march Romeward. Then amongst Nonconformists a subtle rationalism is pervading their teaching; and the "worship of humanity" by those who do not belong to either, establishes a denial of the Father and the Son. The connection of Rome and Atheism is very close. Those who admit the claims of Rome and conform with her practices are not questioned closely as to their beliefs; they may believe pretty much what they like.

There is a great lack in every country of able leaders. Men want leaders, and there are scarcely any to be found. The sons do not take the place of their fathers, and the nations of the world look in vain for some master hand to take the reins. There is thus almost a clear field for such an one as the Antichrist is described to be.

Mr. Bowker concluded with an earnest exhortation to activity in rescuing souls from the jaws of death in the little while which remains for the Gospel to be preached.

The general meeting was opened by Mr. Robert Wilson, who very briefly drew some lessons from Song of Solomon v. If we are reluctant to let the Saviour into our hearts, He may withdraw Himself for awhile, and we shall seek Him in grief and distress (ver. 2—6). If we speak highly of our Lord (ver. 10—16) to those who know Him not, and boldly confess his beauty and our love for Him; then (as in vi. 1) they will want to accompany us in search of Him. The world may not see much in the Bride, but if we recommend our Master, and not ourselves, they will want to know Him.

Dr. Elder Cumming then spoke of the character and position of a consecrated man as seen in Moses after his call (Numb. xii. 7). Moses alone of all the Old Testament saints is set down by God as occupying the threefold office of prophet, priest, and king (Deut. xxxiii. 1; Ps. xcix. 6; and Deut. xviii. 18). There was only one other person who filled these three offices—Jesus Christ. God made Moses the instrument by which He worked miracles—the turning of the rod into the serpent; the plagues of Egypt; the crossing of the Red Sea; the manna from heaven; and the double smiting of the rock. And then what marvellous courage God gave to this man, who had trembled before the burning bush, and thought it impossible for him to do anything; and what a marvellous change there was in Moses in respect to character, from the time when as a hot-blooded young man he smote the Egyptian man, until he became the meekest man on the earth.

The next characteristic of Moses was his insight into spiritual life. It is a mistake to suppose that Moses was a mere passive instrument; the inspiration of Moses went side by side with the inspiration of Paul. Both were taught spiritual truth by God. Moses was so enlightened as to see God's mind with regard to all the injunctions, and ceremonies, and statutes, and judgments, and laws that were laid upon the children of Israel. And from the insight into truth, there came the extraordinary communion that Moses had with God. He went to Jehovah day after day to ask how this was to be managed: it seemed, indeed, as if he could never be away from God, and God spoke to him continually "mouth to mouth, and three distinct times did Moses gaze upon the glory of God.

Then, secondly, there was the sin of the consecrated man (Num. xx. 8—10). Grievously did Moses sin against God and the people. The old besetting sin gained a victory after many years of subjection, and in his temper he struck the rock to which he should only have spoken. On a previous occasion the rock had been stricken, and the cooling stream flowed forth; but that having occurred once, it was only needful to speak to call the water forth. Paul tells us that in figure "that rock was Christ." The Saviour was stricken upon the Cross, and the life-giving stream gushed forth; and now it is only needful to speak the word of salvation. Thus by his temper Moses broke the perfection of the type for us, his act representing a "crucifying of the Son of God afresh, and putting Him to an open shame." For this he was forbidden an entrance to the promised land with the people whom he had led. But although this was so, he had an almost unique experience long after, for his feet then stood, with Elijah, on the mount, glistening and transfigured with the Lord Himself.

FRIDAY EVENING.

Rev. H. W. Webb-Peploe occupied a portion of the evening with a very thoughtful exegesis of the Epistle to the Romans, centring his thoughts round chapter xii. 1.

Present.—Not giving up under compulsion, but "delighting" to do his will. No force is needed to induce a man to give presents to his betrothed. God will not drag any gift out of us, but He will accept what we present.

Beseech.—Not "command." Again, showing that it is in our power to comply or refuse.

By the mercies of God.—These should be more than sufficient motive for such an act; indeed, "a reasonable service."

These mercies have already been recounted by the Apostle in the earlier chapters, all given "through," "by," or "in our Lord Jesus Christ." See chaps. v. 1, 21; vi. 1—11, 23; viii. 1, 37—39.

Your bodies.—If our bodies are yielded our souls will soon follow if they have not been already presented.

A living sacrifice.—Not leaving money to charities at death, but living for God.

Mr. Peploe, with great warmth, urged the duty of masters and mistresses toward their servants:—Have you ever spoken to your coachman about his soul? Have you ever pressed upon your footman the necessity of being born again? Have you ever told your housemaid of the love of God, or made an honest attempt to save your cook? These are the ways in which we may present ourselves as living sacrifices which will be acceptable unto God.

After prayer, Rev. W. Haslam spoke from Ps. xcii. 12. The "righteous" in this verse are certainly not identical with a great number of Christians of the present day, who do not "flourish" at all. The key is found in Jer. xxiii. 6: "The Lord our Righteousness." Oh to have the Lord Jesus Christ in our hearts enthroned as the mighty Lord, who has power in earth and heaven, who works for the glory of God, and who can make us do so too. Men bore with steel and blow up with dynamite; but He with a worm threshes the mountain.

Nature is full of parables of grace. The seed corn must take hold of the ground before it can spring up, and we must take hold of the Word of God before we can grow. Then the early blade appears and has to battle with the frost and the snow, the rains and the floods; just as young converts have to fight many trials, difficulties and chilling influences. But when the resurrection springtime comes and they put out their new roots along the surface, and take in the dew and the sunshine, then the fruit soon comes. A man at Grantham, who "didn't believe in God," had a beautiful field which he had sown. In the springtime a friend remarked upon the good promise which it presented of a bountiful harvest. "Yes," replied the owner, "it'll do very well if God will leave it alone." And God did leave it alone, and it didn't grow at all! Plenty of Christians would be content to be converted if God would leave them alone then. But He has something better for us. He wants us to put out our roots into, and draw nourishment from, the living Christ, and He will make us fruitful and flourishing "as the palm-tree."

Why like the palm-tree? (1) Because it will grow in the desert, where grass and other herbage dies, for it sends down its roots through the sand to the secret springs that lie below. Thus may we draw deep down from the fountain of living water.

(2) Because it shoots its stem upwards, and spreads its branches around, and is thus able to bear heat and sand-storms. Men and animals fall, but the palm-tree raises its head, and waves its branches of victory. So may the Christian echo the words of Christ, "Be of good cheer, I have overcome the world."

(3) Its branches grow from the heart, not from the side of the tree. Let all our Christianity come from the heart, full of praise: "Bless the Lord, O my soul, and all that is within me, bless his holy name!"

(4) It has no bark, but its sides are marked with steps which are the foundations of previous branches. As it grows higher, its lower branches drop off. The believer's life is full of reminiscences of rejoicings, praising God not only in present circumstances, but in those also of the past.

(5) It bears fruit, not on its branches but from the heart, whence the branches come.

(6) It not only bears "bread to the eater" but "seed to the sower." Its seeds fall and other trees spring up around it. One child of God should bear such fruit that a group of spiritual children should multiply all round.

Rev. G. Gregson in a powerful address urged, from Acts i. 8, that power could not be had apart from the Holy Ghost. It will not electrify the recipient, but it will irresistibly impel him to do God's work. God will not give power to be wasted by spiritual spendthrifts.

But it is given for a definite purpose, that we may be the witnesses. How many able men have worked in the Lord's vineyard, but we ask, "What has become of So-and-so?" and we find he has lost his power—lapsed, useless. Why? Because he did not witness for his Master. A witness is not expected to glorify himself. He is only to state what he sees, or knows. Self-praise has no status in the characteristics of a witness, he not being an actor in the transaction at all.

Rev. C. A. Fox gave a helpful word of exhortation from Jer. l. 5, concluding with an intensely earnest appeal that all present should enter into covenant with God, committing the keeping of their souls to Him, and being persuaded that He is able to keep that which they had committed unto Him. One thought in particular proved helpful to many, viz., that if any had failed in certain points perhaps they had not committed those especial things to God to keep for them. He would keep all that they committed, and if they held anything back it would be their own fault if it overcame them.

Then followed a season of prayer, and in the solemn calm which followed many wills were broken and many hearts with all their failings were committed into the faithful keeping of Him who is able to perform that which He hath promised.

On Saturday morning there was held the final

PRAISE MEETING.

The stroke of seven o'clock found the tent filled to overflowing, but not fuller than the hearts of the occupants. Each of those, seventeen in number, who had been breaking the bread of life to the multitude during the week now gave a text and a final word of loving sympathy and encouragement. Then over one hundred persons read or quoted a verse which had been helpful to them, or which might assist others. Sometimes six, ten, or fifteen would arrange to read the same verse together; there was no waiting; the only difficulty was, when the time came to conclude, to get them to stop, and then all joined in a deep heart-felt song of praise, which will, we trust, constantly echo and re-echo in every soul, through life, until they enter into the glory.

Next week we hope to conclude our report with notes of the early prayer-meetings, young men's meetings, afternoon meetings, ladies meetings, and missionary meeting on Saturday.

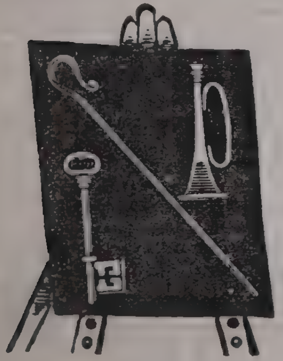
CHILDREN'S MEETINGS:
AND HOW TO CONDUCT THEM.
BY LUCY J. RIDER AND NELLIE M. CARMAN.

CONTAINS

FOURTH THOUSAND

Sixty Outline Lessons for the Class,
Forty-three Diagrams for the Black-board,
Twenty-five attractive Children's Hymns.



"A thoroughly practical book, by teachers who have learned by experience the best methods. Teachers will find it most helpful, especially in blackboard word-work. The Addresses are teachings—which very many Children's Addresses are not."—The Teacher at Work.

"We do not remember meeting with any better book than this for help in Children's Meetings. It is first-rate. There are objects to be drawn on the blackboard; but there are also capital lessons to go with them. Blackboards get very, very black; and the children are very bored, when it is all chalk and no sound sense. Many of these Addresses would make sermons of the first water—and what more can we say of Addresses?"

Rev. C. H. SPURGEON in
The Sword and Trowel.

"We have no hesitation in advising all who are engaged in the good work of teaching children and young people in Gospel principles, and the way of salvation, to possess themselves of a copy of this work. It will be found to be a very valuable and suggestive book, and helpful to the teacher of the Infant—as well as to the teacher of the Bible-class."—Baptist Messenger.

'This is a noble book, calculated to be of the highest usefulness, and we are thankful of the opportunity of commending it."—Baptist Magazine.

"With admirable tact the conduct of Jacob is depicted, and the application of its lessons to present day life vividly shown."—Footsteps of Truth.

"We cannot study the history of these Old Testament characters too deeply, and a very successful attempt is here made to reproduce the striking features of Jacob's life, presenting much that not only brings the story vividly before us, but draws out its lessons and meanings."—The Rock.

"No one can read these pages without being edified. The author's style is clear, vigorous, and interesting; and a thoroughly evangelical tone pervades the book. He gives one piece of practical advice to ministers of the Gospel, which many of our readers will be glad to see reproduced here: 'To recruit a dwindling congregation; to sustain interest in a crowded one; to awaken new devotion to the Bible; and to touch the many chords of human life—there is nothing to be compared with a reverent re-telling of the Stories of Bible Heroes and Saints.'"

"From first to last the book is richly suggestive and spiritually fruitful. We trust it will secure, as it deserves, a wide circulation."—Word and Work.

NOTICE TO THE READERS OF "THE CHRISTIAN," WHO MAY BE PERSONALLY OR RELATIVELY INTERESTED IN THIS MATTER.

Mr. Congreve will give ONE RECENT CASE, NOT PUBLISHED in this journal BEFORE, EVERY WEEK.

CASE FOR THIS WEEK.

CASE OF SEVERE SPASMODIC ASTHMA; A LADY AT SPILSBY, LINC.

I was consulted upon this case last winter (Dec. 10th), the patient, Miss L——, having forwarded me a full statement of her symptoms.

The complaint had commenced two years before that time, with pains in the chest, shortness of breath, and whistling sound in breathing. These symptoms had become exceedingly troublesome. The attacks would last a whole day. She began to lose flesh. An eminent London physician and others had been consulted, with slight relief.

Within one month after commencing my treatment she was much better. "I have been free from asthma for ten days" (she says), "and have been able to get out for a walk."

In two months she reports:—"My chest is much stronger. I have a cold, but it did not bring on asthma, as before, which is a wonderful thing. I continue the liniment night and morning."

In the third month she says:—"I keep on mending;" and on the 18th March I received a letter, in which she says:—"The good you have done me is wonderful. I have not had the least symptom since January. I have gained in weight also."

N.B.—Further particulars of this case will be given to any bonâ fide enquirer desirous to consult me.

NOTE. — Days of Consultation. — TUESDAY, THURSDAY, and SATURDAY Mornings ONLY, at Coombe Lodge, Peckham. Patients from any long distance should choose either of the two former days. Everyone is expected to have seen the book first.

For the Young.

COMFORTED.

OH, how my head ached, and how dark the world looked to me that Tuesday morning! My servant girl had left, and my husband had gone in search of a competent woman to do the washing. He returned very soon, highly elated.

"I've found such a nice old coloured auntie! I'm sure she'll cheer you up, Mary, whether she washes well or not."

"But the washing is the main thing, Harry, and how I do dread a strange woman coming in!" I complained. "She'll want so much waiting on, and slop my tidy kitchen all over."

"Oh, I guess not, dear! Her room looked very neat, so far as I could see from the open door."

I dropped the subject, for there is no use in trying to make a man understand a housekeeper's feelings about such things. I was not usually so despondent, but we were strangers in a strange land. I missed the dear familiar faces and voices of my Eastern home. I was homesick, and I had the the malaria. I was growing fretful, too—I, who had been noted for my sunny temper. No wonder that my husband looked at me in grieved astonishment, and little Carl patted my face in pitying wonder, saying, "Poor mamma, her feel drefful bad!"

And so things in general were looking very gloomy to me that wash-day morning. Breakfast was over, and Harry was just going out of the door as the washer-woman came. I heard him speak to her, and her cheery reply, "Ho, ho, yes,! it's a bressed fine mornin', 'deed 'tis; cherks a body right up."

I had looked out just once to see if it were a good day for drying clothes, but had no thought of blessedness, or of being "cherked up" thereby. She came in, a little lame black woman, with bright eyes and wrinkled face. I could not help greeting her with an answering smile, in spite of the reflection. "How can she do a heavy washing?"

Carl watched her in wide-eyed wonder, as she took off her hood and shawl, and hung them in the entry on a nail that she spied herself. Then she spoke to him:

"An' how do yer do, little sonny? Ain't a'feared ob a coloured auntie, I hopes, ho, ho, ho!"

He echoed her laugh slightly, and then I knew they were to be friends.

"Now, honey," she said to me, "I kin see yer ain't feelin' right smart, an' if yo'll jes' gib me a minnit to get de bearin' ob t'ings, I won't make yer no trouble; kase I can't a-bear ter be waited on. I spects de tubs an' t'ings is in de suller?"

"Yes, Mrs. Green"—

"Law, mis', won't yer jes' call me Aunt Ruby, like odder folks do? 'Pears like I feel more to hum."

"Certingly, if you like," I answered.

While I was washing the dishes, she sorted the clothes, occassionaly exclaiming over a bit of embroidery or lace, "Now I mus' be mighty keerful of dat ar!" until I was tempted to bring forward some articles which I had kept back, fearing to trust them in untried hands.

"Now, deary, I don't mean no disrespect, on'y I jes' has dat ar way ob talkin', ye know"—

"Oh, I don't mind it, Aunt Ruby; go on."

"Well, es I was gwine ter say, yer kindy strangers in dese hyar parts, I reckon!"

"Yes, we've only lived hear a few months, and oh, Aunt Ruby, I'm so home-sick!"

"Pore chile! I knows jes' how dat ar feels, kase I come from hyar from ole Kaintuck, an' I t'ought how I should die, shore 'nuff; but, law, I goten ober it arter a wh'le! I jes' settled down an' sung it out."

"Sung it out? That's a novel way."

"Yes: ho, ho, ho! I'se a drefful singer, an' wus gwine ter speak ter ye 'bout dat; ye see it helps me 'long wid my washin's wonderful, an' I was gwine ter inquire of if would 'sturb ye."

"If singing or anything else can make washing easy, I don't blame you for doing it, Aunt Ruby. I don't see how you wash at all, lame as as you are."

"Laws, chile, I'se use to dat! I'se been lame more'n ten year. I should'nt know how ter walk straight now ef I could, ho, ho, ho!"

I had finished the dishes, and said wearily, "I must go and lie on the lounge a little while, Aunt Ruby; my head aches so badly. Carl, will you come?"

"Oh, he ain't in my way a speck—de bressed lam'!" said Aunt Ruby.

Seeing that both were satisfied, I left them, leaving the door ajar so I could hear her cheery voice. After a few affectionate words to the baby, the rubbing and singing commenced.

Dere's a lan' dat ar' fairer dan day,
An' a by faith I kin see it afar;
An' a de Saviour waits ober de way
Ter prepare us a dwellin' place dar.

"Yer don't t'ink no great ob ole auntie's singin', does yer, lam'? ho, ho, ho!"

"Sin' some more adain!" answered Carl.

We shell sing on dat beauterful shoah,
De meloderous songs ob de blest;
An' our spirits shell sorrer no moah.
Nor a sigh fer de blessin' ob rest.
In de sweet, by an' by, a-by an' by,
We shell sing on dat beauterful shoah.

I heard a knock as the chorus was completed, but Aunt Ruby hastened to open the door. She received the things from the grocer's boy, and then the rubbing and singing went on:—

When I kin read my title cl'ar
To mansions in-a de skies,
I'll bid farewell to ebery fear,
An-a wipe my weepin' eyes.
Oh, glo-a-ry, glo-a-ry in-a my soul!

"I jes' better stop, lam', kase mebbe yer ma'll want ter go ter sleep, an' suz-a-me! dar's dat door open a leetle crack too; dat ar's too bad!"

She came softly to shut it, but I objected.

"Don't, Aunt Ruby. I don't want ter sleep, and I do want to hear you sing. It does me good."

"Ho, ho, ho, honey! I ain't no fine singer, I knows dat; but it's a sight o' comfort to be a-hummin' es I works; but I didn't want ter 'sturb ye a mite."

"You don't. Can you sing 'Steal Away to Jesus'?"

"Don' 'spect I kin. Most I knows is de good-enough ole hymns I was brung up on."

"Well, go on and sing them. I was brought up on them, too; they seem like the dear old home."

Let-a cares like a wild deluge come,
Let-a storms ob sorrer fall,
So I but safely reach-a my hum,
My God, my heaben, my all!

Carl same softly in, and laid his head down on my pillow, whispering, "Don' she sin' lubly, mamma?"

I drew him to me, saying, "Yes, darling. Listen!"

All hail de powah ob Jesus' name
Let angels prostrate fall,
Bring-a forth de royal dierdem,
And crown Him Lord ob all.

Silence, and the closing of the door, announced that the singer had gone to hang out some clothes. I rose, finding my head much better, and little Carl was fast asleep. I began preparations for dinner, and half unconsciously took up the last verse of the hymn:—

Oh, that with yonder sacred throng,
We at his feet may fall;
We'll join the everlasting song,
And crown Him Lord of all!

My eyes filled with happy tears as faith asserted itself. Although dear ones walk far apart in this world, it will be all right if from East and West we find the way to the eternal home.

"Aunt Ruby, are you always happy?" I asked a little later.

"Well, mos'ly, honey! I has turrible aches in my lameness when de wedder's damp, an' den it's kindy hard pullin'; but, law, I take holt an' sing it out. Dat's my med'cine, an' it's a mighty good one, ho, ho! Did you eber try it, child?"

"I used to carol a little around the house when I felt happy, but lately I've been too heavy-hearted and weary to sing or enjoy anything."

"Laws, deary! dem's jes' de times yer needs it; w'en a body has trubble, it lifts 'em right up. I knows, kase I'se tried it. I'se had a lot ob 'flictions, an' de wust ob all was w'en my ole man Dan'l died. He wus a good man, dat he wus, honey! en ef I couldn't sing 'bout de place where he's gone to, I dunno what I'd do. It makes it all seem real like, an' es ef he's jes' awaitin' fer me ter come; does so!"

I went into the pantry to mix some biscuits, wondering what dear old hymn would be her next selection. I might have known, for her loving thoughts were with "Dan'l."

Dere is a lan' ob pure delight,
Where saints immortal reign;
In-fin'te day excloods de night,
An' pleasures banish pain.
Dere eberlastin' springs abides,
An' neber witherin' flowers;
Death like a narrer sea divides
Dat-a heabenly lan' frum ours.

"Ye see, honey, dat's a sight ob comfort ter me, dat ar hymn, kase Dan'l wus a powahful han' ter lub flowers, an' jes' ter t'ink dat he has 'em all de year 'roun', an' here dey's so fleetin'! Ye see, chile, it's a sight o' comfort ter know jus' how t'ings is wid 'em w'en dey's clean gone from hyar; an' if it wusn't for de verses an' de two las' chapters in de Bible dat tells all 'bout it, I dunno what I should do. I 'spects I'd be a pore mis'sable creetur."

"It must be dreary living alone, Aunt Ruby!"

"Yessum; but I has a sight o' comforts, an' I kin read a little in Dan'l's ole Bible, and dat's sech company! He was a gran' reader, an' I use ter lis'en, till I kindy knows how de verses goes 'fore I see 'em. An' den I'se got lots o' friends, an' I'se able ter do, an' help my own self, an' I'se got a mossel o' savings put by, an' so ebery-t'ing works togedder fer good. Now, 'bout dese yere flannels; I'se berry keerful ob dem, an' hes a certain way ter wash 'em, myse'f"—

"Do just as you think fit, auntie! You know more about them than I do, and everything else worth knowing, I fancy."

"Laws-a-massy! Here dat now; ho, ho, ho! Why, I'se a pore iggorant woman; allers had to work, an 'scase any larnin'."

"Well, you know how to make the best of this world, and make sure of the next, and that is he wisest kind of knowledge, after all."

Carl woke up and asked, "Is 'e nice brack lady done 'way?"

Harry came in, rejoiced to see his wife with the wrinkles gone from her brow, and a smile on her lips.

"Why, has the headache all gone dear?"

"Yes, Harry, and a great deal of the wretched heartache with it. Our new washerwoman is a blessed comforter!"—Congregationalist.

THE LOVE OF JESUS.

Softly sing the love of Jesus!
For our hearts are full of tears,
As we think how, walking humbly
This low earth for weary years,
Without riches, without dwelling,
Wounded sore by foe and friend,
In the garden, and in dying,
Jesus loved us to the end!

Gladly sing the love of Jesus!
Let us lean upon his arm,
If He love us, what can grieve us?
If he keep us, what can harm?
Still He lays his hands in blessing
On each timid little face,
And in heaven the children's angels
Near the throne have always place.

Ever sing the love of Jesus!
Let the day be dark or clear,
Every pain and every sorrow
Bring Him to his own more near.
Death's cold wave need not affright us,
When we know that He has died,
When we see the face of Jesus
Smiling from the other side!

ELIJAH THE PROPHET.—12.

By Rev. F. B. Meyer, B.A., Leicester.

THE STILL SMALL VOICE.

1 Kings xix.

Refreshed by sleep and food, Elijah resumed his journey across the desert to Horeb. Perhaps no spot on earth is more associated with the manifested presence of God than that sacred mount. There the bush burned with fire; there the law was given; there Moses spent forty days and nights alone with God. It was a natural instinct that led the prophet thither, and all the world could not have furnished a more appropriate school. Natural scenery and holy associations lent all their powers to impress and elevate the soul.

Forty times the prophet saw the sun rise and set over the desert waste. I do not know that anyone has perfectly explained the meaning of that symbolic number which so frequently appears upon the page of Scripture, and is so often associated with failure and temptation. I can only note the fact of its frequent repetition in passing. Thus, at last, the prophet came to Horeb, the mount of God. We have to consider how God dealt with his dispirited and truant child.

I. God Spake to Him.—In some darksome cave, among those rent precipices, Elijah lodged; and, as he waited, in lonely musings, the fire burned in his soul. But he had not long to wait. "Behold, the word of the Lord came unto him."

That word had often come to him before. It had come to him at Thisbe. It had come to him in Samaria, after he had given his first message to Ahab. It had come to him when Cherith was dry. It had come to summon him from the solitudes of Zarephath to the stir of active life. And now it found him out, and came to him again. There is no spot on earth so lonely, no cave so deep and dark, where the word of the Lord cannot discover and come to us.

But though God had often spoken to him before, He had never spoken in quite the same tone—What dost thou here, Elijah? The accent was stern and reproachful, "Thou art my servant; thou art set to do my will; if ever thou wast needed, it is now; the tide is on the turn; a great reformation is almost ripe. Why hast thou left thy post. How camest thou hither without my bidding or my leave?" Elijah shrank from a direct reply. If he had answered truly, he must have confessed that he was utterly in the wrong, without a single word of extenuation or excuse. He had done wrong in leaving his post, and that first wrong step had been aggravated by every one which he had taken since, plunging him further and further into the dark.

If the prophet had answered that searching question of God with shame and sorrow; if he had confessed that he had failed, and asked for forgiveness; if he had cast himself on the pitifulness and tenderness of his Almighty friend, there is not the least doubt that he would have been forgiven and restored. The past would never have been named against him, and the results of his fatal flight would have been repaired. God would Himself have stood in the breach, until his child could hasten back again to his post, and lead on the glorious work which he had so nobly commenced. But instead of this, he parried the Divine question, and evaded it. He did not try to explain how he came there, or what he was doing. He chose rather to dwell upon his own loyalty for the cause of God, and to bring it out into striking relief by contrasting it with the sinful backslidings of his people. "I have been very jealous for the Lord God of hosts: for the children of Israel have forsaken thy covenant, thrown down thine altars, and slain thy prophets with the sword; and I, even I only, am left, and they seek my life, to take it away." All this was well known to God, and I do not think the prophet would ever have alluded to it, unless he had been hard pressed to find an excuse to palliate his own cowardice and neglect of duty.

In point of fact, he was thoroughly demoralised with unbelief and fear. The sky of his soul was covered with clouds so dense that no star of comfort glimmered through their murky curtains. He did not care to realise that the fault lay with himself, and he therefore sought to show that others were to blame for the pass to which the cause of God had come. His was a noble nature, under a temporary cloud. A palace in ruins. A splendid vessel rolling rudderless in the trough of the waves. There was, no doubt, truth in what he said. He was full of zeal and holy devotion to the cause of God. He had often mourned over the national degeneracy. He keenly felt his own isolation and loneliness. But these were not the reasons why at that moment he was hiding in the cave; nor was this an answer to that searching question "What doest thou here, Elijah?"

How often is that question put still! When a Christian worker, sorely needed, deserts his post, because of some unforeseen difficulty, or to secure selfish gratification and ease; to that couch of indolence, or to that forest glade where soft breezes blow, the question comes, What doest thou here? When a child of God is found in the theatre, the dancing saloon, or the place of evil companionship; sitting in the seat of scorners, or walking in the way of the ungodly; again, must the question come as a thunderbolt out of a clear sky; What doest thou here? When one, endowed with great faculties, digs a hole in the earth, and buries the God entrusted talent, standing idle all the day long among the loungers in the market-place, again must the inquiry ring out, What doest thou here?

Life is the time for doing. The world is a great workshop, in which there is no room for drones. God Himself worketh as the great Master-builder. All creatures fulfil their needful functions, from the angel that hymns God's praise to the wasp that buries a corpse. There is plenty to do. Evil to put down; good to build up; doubters to be directed; prodigals to be won back; sinners to be sought. What doest thou here? Up, Christians, leave your caves, and do. Do not do in order to be saved; but, being saved, DO.
